A Conspiracy Against Curtis?

Okay, it's no big secret that there isn't a lot of love lost these days between Indiana Attorney General Curtis Hill and the state's Republican political leadership. Now with that said, TCS is hearing (and this where the conspiracy theories come in so take it for what it's worth) that there are basically three scenarios that are being circulated on how the "Establishment" may deal with Hill going forward.

Plan A

- Let the state disciplinary commission take care of this. Some are apparently hoping that there is enough evidence out there to warrant the removal (at least temporary) of Hill's law license and that would get him out of office since to be Attorney General, you have to have a valid Indiana law license. The drawback to that is that even if Hill has to step down, say for 30-60 days, that doesn't disqualify him from seeking the nomination at next year's convention. The pushback then would be that he could be denied a spot for "not being a Republican in good standing."

Plan B

- If Hill survives the disciplinary commission and gets renominated, the plan is to deny him any financial or state party support. In other words, he would be candidate non grata. In addition, there is chatter that the GOP would change the order of the program and have the Governor and Lt. Governor do their thing first so they could leave the convention and not have to share the stage with Hill.

The Cheat Sheet, Vol. 8, Issue 18 – July 2019

Plan C

- Don't nominate anyone at the convention, and instead, the state central committee would make the appointment. We did float this one by state GOP chairman Kyle Hupfer Saturday at Governor Holcomb's re-election announcement. He worked hard to keep a straight face. And while he told us he wasn't sure what was going to happen at the convention, he said they were not closing down the convention without a candidate.

We all know this sounds crazy, like X-Files crazy, but each one of these scenarios has popped up on our radar screens more than once in the past few weeks, so we figured we would put it out there and see what happens.

We did get one interesting perspective from a couple of long-time party operatives a few weeks ago. They told us this entire situation reminded them of the Zoeller/Costas contest back in 2008, when then-Governor Mitch Daniels backed John Costas, but the delegates wanted Greg Zoeller, in part because they were mad at Daniels over consolidation and Zoeller's team worked their butts off. So it will be interesting to see if there is a repeat of that.

Chasing Chasten

Having been in politics all our adult lives, we here at TCS know what valuable assets spouses can be on the campaign trail. We also know they can be a big liability also. We are getting some rumblings from our friends on the Presidential campaign trail that South Bend Mayor and Presidential candidate Pete Buttigieg's husband, Chasten, is really worrying some staff and could be going from a valuable asset to a potential liability.

The reason and we've all seen this before in one capacity or another, is that Chasten is really getting emotionally involved in Pete's campaign. And we all know what happens when you get emotionally attached to something in politics. It can cloud your judgment, make you want to respond to every little slight, start micromanaging campaigns, etc., etc.

From what we've gathered to date, things aren't at the point where staff is getting ready to rebel in droves, but it is something, we hear, the top brass is concerned about and want to address sooner rather than later.

By the way, the latest national polls (Morning Consult/NBC News) have Buttigieg in 4th place at about seven percent.

The 5th District Fracas

Things continue to get more and more interesting in the race to replace Susan Brooks in the CD 5. The Democrats will have a contested primary now that Christina Hale has formally declared her candidacy and Dee Thornton, who ran last time says she will run again.

On the Republican side, TCS hears State Republican Party Chairman Kyle Hupfer is worried about a blood bath in the GOP primary which could eventually weaken the nominee. Apparently, there have been conversations with the county chairs advising them not to endorse anyone in the race and just let things play out amongst the candidates and let the strong survive, particularly those who can either self-fund or raise the most money.

The names at the top of the list are Surgeon General Jerome Adams, State Treasurer Kelly Mitchell, former Indianapolis Mayor Greg Ballard, businessman Terry Henderson, and State Senator John Ruckleshaus.

We're Not Making This S Up!

Rumor is coming to us from D.C. that despite public pronouncements, President Donald Trump isn't fully sold on keeping Mike Pence as Vice-President. Trump needed Pence in 2016 to shore up his evangelical credentials, but now that he has them in his corner, he can look for someone else to be his running mate.

The Feds are reportedly investigating a possible whistleblower situation dealing with unemployment benefits at the Department of Workforce Development. We're hearing a now-former employee was made to quit over this and just this past week federal agents met with this person. Apparently, the issue is whether some folks may have been shortened on their unemployment benefits and the state kept the difference.

Don't be shocked if there are more personnel changes in the Governor's Office coming soon, particularly in the area of Workforce Development.

Word on the street is that recent polling has Governor Eric Holcomb with a mid-60s approval rating in Marion County and is in the upper 50s in the Region.

The recent controversy with the Virtual Charter School has some Indiana lawmakers asking about enrollment in the state's other school districts, so word on the street is that they might start approaching the State Board of Accounts to do random audits of school districts to make sure their actual enrollment matches what's on paper.

We hear Indiana Department of Education press secretary Adam Baker may be exiting soon to the non-profit educational sector.

Maureen Hayden is leaving the Lt. Governor's office to work for Commonwealth Engineers. They help local governments with water and environmental issues.

Indy Mayor Joe Hogsett is dropping a few bucks on TV advertising over the next few weeks. Hogsett is dropping nearly $120,000 on regular TV and about $50,000 on cable. Meanwhile, Jim Merritt has been making a lot of inroads in the small-to-medium-sized black churches and is developing quite the list of contacts and volunteers.

Look for the Mayor's race in Kokomo race to get a little crazy. It's reported that current Mayor Greg Goodnight is not happy with his chosen replacement.

Republican State Rep Tom Saunders is going to have a "very strong" Democrat challenger in HD 54. New Castle City Councilman Aaron Dicken is reportedly getting in the race. He has ties to State Rep Terri Austin and other Democrat fundraising networks.

Community activist and businesswoman Jeannine Lee Lake is seeking a second bid for the Democratic nomination to become the first United States Congresswoman representing Indiana's Sixth Congressional District. She lost in 2016 to Greg Pence.

HOLCOMB LAUNCHES REELECT TO CHANTS OF '4 MORE YEARS': Gov. Eric Holcomb, who has shot baskets in all 92 counties during his first three years in office, kicked off his reelection campaign in the historic Hoosier Gym on Saturday before a packed house and the strains of Neil Young's classic "Rocking in the Free World" (Howey Politics Indiana). Under banners proclaiming "Go Holcomb All the Way," the Hoosier Gym scoreboard showing Hickory tied with Terhune 20-20, joined by Lt. Gov. Suzanne Crouch, Holcomb emerged from the gym's lockerroom, high-fived Crouch and proclaimed, "What a way for me and Suzanne to officially announce our commitment to keep Indiana moving forward for four more years! And it's all because of our team – all of you – getting at it every day, taking Indiana to the Next Level, exceeding high expectations." Holcomb continued in the gym where many of the key scenes in classic movie "Hoosiers" were filmed, "We've done it the right way, the Indiana way, by Putting People First. From the economy, to job creation, to infrastructure, to public health, to education, you name it." Holcomb was greeted by chants of "four more years" from the packed House. Holcomb seeks a second term with the state experiencing historic employment, and job creation investment. On Friday, after Auditor Teri Klutz announced $400 million in additional revenue and $2.3 billion in reserve, Holcomb announced $300 million in one-time spending, including an accelerated construction schedule on the U.S. 31 freeway between South Bend and Indianapolis. The governor sits on a $7.2 million war chest, a 61% job approval rating according to internal polling, and only one Democratic opponent to date. Democrat Dr. Woody Myers entered the race on Wednesday, while State Sen. Eddie Melton of Gary and Karlee Macer of Indianapolis are weighing potential campaigns. "I'm not tired of winning yet," Holcomb told the boisterous crowd. "Are you? And we're going to keep on winning, because Indiana provides certainty, stability, predictability and aspirational continuity – exactly what the pro-growth career creators crave."

BIDEN, SANDERS, HARRIS LEAD TRUMP IN NBC/WSJ POLL: President Donald Trump trails the top Democratic contenders in hypothetical matchups, according to the NBC News/Wall Street Journal poll's first ballot tests of the 2020 general election. Former Vice President Joe Biden leads the president by 9 points among registered voters, 51 percent to 42 percent — outside of the poll's margin of error of plus-minus 3.5 percentage points. Sen. Bernie Sanders, I-Vt., is ahead of Trump by 7 points, 50 percent to 43 percent. Sen. Elizabeth Warren, D-Mass., holds a 5-point advantage, 48 percent to 43 percent. And Sen. Kamala Harris, D-Calif., is ahead by just 1 point, 45 percent to 44 percent — a jump ball. President Trump's job rating in the poll essentially matches his percentages in those hypothetical 2020 matchups. Forty-five percent of registered voters approve of the president's job, while 52 percent disapprove — which is broadly unchanged from the last several NBC/WSJ surveys.

PENCE FINDS 'TOUGH' CONDITIONS AT BORDER: After negotiating with the VP's office, pool was taken into an outdoor portal at the McAllen Border Station around 5 pm, where almost 400 men were in caged fences with no cots. The stench was horrendous (White House Pool Report). The cages were so crowded that it would have been impossible for all of the men to lie on the concrete. There were 384 single men in the portal who allegedly crossed the border illegally. There were no mats or pillows — some of the men were sleeping on concrete. When the men saw the press arrive, they began shouting and wanted to tell us they'd been in there 40 days or longer. The men said they were hungry and wanted to brush their teeth. It was sweltering hot. Agents were guarding the cages wearing face masks. Most of the men did not speak English and looked dirty. They said they'd been there for 40 days or more upon questioning from the pool. We were pulled out of the portal within 90 seconds, and a White House official said the Secret Service had expressed opposition to the Vice President going in. He briefly went into the room. "I was not surprised by what I saw. I knew we'd see a system that was overwhelmed. This is tough stuff," Pence said.

TRUMP TALKS OF DISMISSING COATS (AGAIN): President Trump has told confidants he's eager to remove Dan Coats as director of national intelligence, according to five sources who have discussed the matter directly with the president (Swan, Axios). The state of play: Trump hasn't told our sources when he plans to make a move, but they say his discussions on the topic have been occurring for months — often unprompted — and the president has mentioned potential replacements since at least February. A source who spoke to Trump about Coats a week ago said the president gave them the impression that the move would happen "sooner rather than later." The director of national intelligence serves as an overseer of the U.S. intelligence community and a close adviser to the president and National Security Council, producing each day's top-secret Presidential Daily Brief. A source with direct knowledge told me that Trump has privately said he thinks the Office of the Director of National Intelligence represents an unnecessary bureaucratic layer and that he would like to get rid of it. He has been told that eliminating the ODNI is not politically possible, but still would like to "downsize" the office, the source said.

INDIANA ELECTIONS USING OUT-DATED WINDOWS 7: The vast majority of 10,000 election jurisdictions nationwide use Windows 7 or an older operating system for voting or tallying — archaic systems vulnerable to hackers, AP's Tami Abdollah reports. Why it matters: Private vendors, and state finances, determine the security level of election systems, which lack federal requirements or oversight. J. Alex Halderman, a University of Michigan professor and election security expert, said the country risks repeating "mistakes that we made over the last ... decade-and-a-half when states bought voting machines but didn't keep the software up-to-date." What's next: Windows 7 reaches its "end of life" Jan. 14, meaning Microsoft stops technical support and patches, although security updates will be provided for a fee through 2023. AP's 50-state survey found that battleground states using Windows 7 include Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, Florida, Iowa, Indiana, Arizona and North Carolina.

PETE BUTTIGIEG'S LIFE IN THE CLOSET: The closet that Pete Buttigieg built for himself in the late 1990s and 2000s was a lot like the ones that other gay men of his age and ambition hid inside. He dated women, deepened his voice and furtively looked at MySpace and Friendster profiles of guys who had come out — all while wondering when it might be safe for him to do so too (Peters, New York Times). Chris Pappas, who was two years ahead of Mr. Buttigieg at Harvard and is now a Democratic congressman from New Hampshire, said he arrived at college "pretty much convinced that I couldn't have a career or pursue politics as an L.G.B.T. individual." Jonathan Darman, who was one class ahead of Mr. Buttigieg, remembered how people often reacted to a politician's coming out then: "It wasn't a story of love but of acknowledging illicit desire." And Amit Paley, who graduated in Mr. Buttigieg's class, recalled that "it was still a time where vocalizing anti-gay sentiments was not only common, but I think pretty accepted." The thought that 15 years later someone they might have shared a dorm or sat in a lecture hall with would become the first serious openly gay candidate for president of the United States never crossed their minds. But no one would have found the possibility more implausible than the young man everyone on campus knew as Peter. Mr. Buttigieg, now the mayor of South Bend, Ind., struggled for a decade after leaving Harvard to overcome the fear that being gay was "a career death sentence," as he put it in his memoir.

FRIENDS AND FAMILY SAY GOODBYE TO EVA KOR: Family and close friends of Eva Mozes Kor spent much of Saturday celebrating the life and memory of the Holocaust survivor who dedicated much of her life to spreading a message of forgiveness and of the dangers of hate and prejudice (Modesitt, Terre Haute Tribune-Star). Kor, the founder of Terre Haute's CANDLES Holocaust Museum, passed away July 4 in Krakow, Poland. She was 85. She had been on the annual CANDLES trip to Poland. Since her passing, support from the world over has poured in, said Eva Kor's son Alex Kor. But more than an icon to be mourned, Alex Kor said he's felt no different than any other son who's lost their mother. "At the end of the day it's not some type of icon, it's not someone people look up to, it's my mom," Alex Kor said. "For me it's a personal thing. Whether you're eight years old, 18 years old or 58 years old, it's nice to have a mother to talk to and kiss and to hug. "That's the part that's been tough to put my arms around, that I can't wrap my arms around my mom." The public is invited to attend one of two memorial services in August. The first of which is 2 p.m. Aug. 4 at Tilson Auditorium at Indiana State University in Terre Haute. The second is 2 p.m. Aug. 18 at Clowes Hall at Butler University in Indianapolis.

INDIANA PREPARES FOR SPORTS WAGERING: It appears likely that Hoosiers will be able to begin placing in-person bets at casinos on professional and college sporting events sometime around Sept. 1, with betting via mobile devices coming later (Carden, NWI Times). The Indiana Gaming Commission has released draft regulations to implement House Enrolled Act 1015, which legalized sports wagering in the state, that the commission is set to approve at its Aug. 28 meeting. If the regulations are adopted without significant changes, the experience of placing a sports bet at an Indiana casino will be similar to betting on a horse race at the track or an off-track betting facility. Patrons will place their wager either with a person at a walk-up window or using a nearby electronic kiosk. In return, they'll get a ticket listing the bet that is turned in to receive a payout if the patron has won. The regulations require casinos to display the sporting events available for wagering, along with the corresponding odds. Bets can be placed using cash, credit or debit, though a verified patron account is required for credit, debit and mobile wagers.

EPSTEIN'S CONVICTION DIDN'T KICK HIM OFF 'A LIST': A strange thing happened when Jeffrey Epstein came back to New York City after being branded a sex offender: His reputation appeared to rise. In 2010, the year after he got out of a Florida prison, Katie Couric and George Stephanopoulos dined at his Manhattan mansion with a British royal (New York Times). The next year, Mr. Epstein was photographed at a "billionaire's dinner" attended by tech titans like Jeff Bezos and Elon Musk. A page popped up on Harvard University's website lauding his accomplishments, and superlative-filled news releases described his lofty ambitions as he dedicated $10 million to charitable causes. Powerful female friends served as social guarantors: Peggy Siegal, a gatekeeper for A-list events, included him in movie screenings, and Dr. Eva Andersson-Dubin, a champion of women's health, maintained a friendship that some felt gave him credibility. Mr. Epstein put up a website showing Stephen Hawking and other luminaries at a science gathering he had organized. "If you looked up Jeffrey Epstein online in 2012, you would see what we all saw," Leon Botstein, the president of Bard College, said in an interview. He seemed "like an ex-con who had done well on Wall Street," who was close to the Clintons and gave money to academic pursuits, Dr. Botstein said.

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: If you are wondering what the uproar over Labor Secretary Alex Acosta's resignation in the wake of the Jeffrey Epstein arrests is about, take 15 minutes and read the original reporting by Miami Herald reporter Julie K. Brown in her November 2018 story "A perversion of justice: How a future Trump Cabinet member gave a serial sex abuser the deal of a lifetime." It is disturbing. One other thought: Here in Indiana, news coverage of the judicial system is virtually non-existent. Other than sensational trials like the Richmond Hill explosion case, trials don't get covered. The IndyStar no longer covers courts. One reporter at a newspaper in a 200,000 population county tells me his newspaper no longer has a courts reporter. The watchdog over the Indiana judicial network has disappeared. We as a society will pay a big price for this in the future. - Brian A. Howey

Campaigns

DGA COMMENTS ON HOLCOMB KICKOFF: Democratic Governors Association Communications Director David Turner released the following statement regarding Indiana Gov. Eric Holcomb's announcement he is running for re-election (Howey Politics Indiana): "Hoosiers are still waiting for do-nothing Gov. Eric Holcomb to show up for them. When educators needed a pay raise to combat a statewide teacher shortage, Holcomb stiffed them. While Hoosiers wait for their wages to grow, Holcomb doled out high-paying jobs to his political cronies. Holcomb's own Child Services Department Director said a continuation of Holcomb's do-nothing policies on child protection will 'all but ensure children will die.' Do-nothing Holcomb's failure to lead has devastating consequences for Hoosiers. Educators, vulnerable children and working Hoosiers deserve better. We will hold do-nothing Holcomb accountable next year for his failure to lead."

INDEMS CRITICAL OF HOLCOMB SURPLUS SPENDING: Indiana Democrats criticized Gov. Eric Holcomb for "building a pig barn" over teacher salary increases (Howey Politics Indiana). The Democrats said: "Governor Eric Holcomb pulled a blue-ribbon blunder Thursday, redirecting $50 million in state surplus toward the construction of a new pig barn at the State Fairgrounds. Not a dime of additional tax dollars collected by the state will be diverted to fund higher salaries for teachers, a supposed-priority of the governor. With the political deftness of a pair of lead shoes, Holcomb managed to single-handedly manufacture a controversy 48 hours ahead of his own re-election announcement. Budgets are about priorities, so it's only fair to analyze what Holcomb values less than a $50 million taxpayer-funded pig barn." Indiana Democratic Party Chairman John Zody added, "I have no idea how a $50 million swine barn helps Hoosier families struggling to pay the bills, afford prescription drugs or find affordable child care get ahead," said Zody. "Our educators have the slowest growing salaries in the country. Dead last. They're literally driving the school bus to make ends meet and our governor thinks it's best to lavish taxpayer dollars on a pig barn. Out of touch doesn't even begin to describe Holcomb's arrogance when it comes to paying our teachers what they deserve."

President 2020

BUTTIGIEG'S HONEYMOON IS OVER: Pete Buttigieg clambered into the top tier of the presidential race by presenting an optimistic, youthful vision for the country. To stay there, he's grappling with his failures. Buttigieg is suddenly facing deeper scrutiny of his record — the first major bump in the 2020 campaign for the young mayor, as detailed in his recent public appearances and media interviews as well as interviews with supporters. He's facing questions from voters about race relations in South Bend, Ind., especially the recent police shooting of an African American man, and is dashing home regularly to manage relations with a fuming black community and a grieving family that sued the city, as well as a police union hitting him from the other side (Politico). Addressing the letdowns in his short public life is a major change for the 37-year-old Democrat, whose early-year polling momentum has stalled. But for the first time, that's what Buttigieg has had to do, taking responsibility for not hiring more black police officers, including in the first presidential debate, and lacing campaign speeches with new additions on racial justice, immigration and the difficulties of city government. This week, Buttigieg sought to turn attention back to the future with a call for billions of dollars in federal spending to combat systemic racism. The honeymoon, it's safe to say, is over. And Buttigieg knows that how he handles the next phase of the campaign will determine whether his meteoric rise is followed by just as fast of a fall. "I think it's one thing when you're introducing yourself. You're sticking up your hand, you're saying 'Hi, you're saying 'I exist,'" Buttigieg said recently on the sidelines of an event in Iowa, reflecting on the state of the campaign. "Now, it's very different."

BUTTIGIEG HIT PIECE PROMPTS SPONSOR TO LEAVE: A planned forum on climate change for Democratic presidential candidates lost several major sponsors on Saturday in the wake of the left-leaning magazine The New Republic publishing — and later retracting — a vulgar and homophobic story related to gay presidential contender Pete Buttigieg (AP). The New Republic was slated as a chief sponsor of a September event designed to spark climate change discussion among candidates during a U.N. climate summit. The magazine pulled down what it called "an opinion piece" about Buttigieg soon after its publication on Friday, citing "criticism of the piece's inappropriate and invasive content." But The New Republic as well as three top sponsors bowed out of the climate change event. The League of Conservation Voters said in a statement withdrawing from the climate forum that the magazine's "offensive piece" about the Democratic mayor of South Bend, Indiana, "and the choice to run it, are inconsistent with our values." The Center for American Progress Action Fund said that while it "strongly supports the idea of giving the candidates a forum to address climate change," remaining a backer of the planned forum "is not possible" following The New Republic's decision to publish its Buttigieg story.

Sunday Talk

CARSON TALKS OF COMING MUELLER TESTIMONY: Rep. Andre Carson (D-IN) sits on the House intelligence committee, which is scheduled to question Mueller in an open hearing on July 24, after the hearing was delayed another week (Fox59). "We're still going through the line of questioning and which members will ask which questions as it relates to the committees of their jurisdiction," said Carson in an interview last week. "As the chairman of the committee on counter-proliferation and counter-terrorism, counter-intelligence - I want to make sure my questions are specific to that aspect of the investigation."

HALE MAKES PITCH FOR ELECTION IN RED 5TH CD: Former state representative Christina Hale (D-IN) announced a run for Congress this past week for the fifth congressional district seat currently being held by retiring Rep. Susan Brooks (R-IN) (Fox59). Hale ran on the Democratic ticket in 2016 as John Gregg's running mate, and is hoping to turn a historically red district blue next year, while GOP leaders continue to insist the district remains reliably Republican. "Whether it was doing what's best for my family or trying to get ahead in the working world, I've had to work for it," said Hale. "That's exactly what Hoosiers can expect of me in Congress, where I'll fight every day to make life better for people by lowering the cost of health care and working to ensure that we have an economy that works for everybody."

KLOBACHAR SAYS TRUMP SEEKS CHAOS: In response to the expected Immigration and Customs Enforcement deportation raids, Sen. Amy Klobuchar, D-Minn., said the administration is using the warnings as a distraction from real issues. "He wants us to be talking about this today and he uses these people as political pawns," Klobuchar told Chief White House Correspondent Jonathan Karl on ABC's "This Week." "He wants chaos and to distract people," she added later.

DE BLASIO SAYS BIDEN MUST ANSWER FOR DEPORTATIONS: New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio said on Sunday that fellow Democratic White House hopeful Joe Biden should "absolutely" answer for the deportation of undocumented immigrants during the Obama administration. "Let's be honest, I think there's a lot of issues where Democrats and Republicans, unfortunately, have some responsibility for the problems," de Blasio told CNN's Jake Tapper Sunday on "State of the Union." "That was a mistake, in the end what we needed a very different approach," he added.

CONWAY DOWNPLAYS MUELLER TESTIMONY: Kellyanne Conway on Sunday expressed skepticism that former special counsel Robert Mueller's upcoming testimony before Congress would change any minds, calling continued investigations by the Democratic House an attempt at a "do-over." "Oversight has a function but I think Americans are watching a waste of taxpayer dollars with a bunch of combovers doing a big do-over that we don't need," the White House counselor told host Chris Wallace on "Fox News Sunday." "I expect very little will come out because Director Mueller has told the country his report is his testimony," Conway added, citing frequent remarks by Mueller that his 400-page report on the findings of his investigation were all he intended to say about the probe before he reached an agreement to testify.

CONWAY SAYS CONGRESS NEEDS TO GET ACT TOGETHER: Kellyanne Conway on Sunday defended conditions in a border detention facility she toured, saying they demonstrate what happens when "Congress gets its act together." "I witnessed no overcrowding, I saw lots of supplies, I saw diapers, I saw food, I saw endless supplies of water," the White House counselor said on "Fox News Sunday," referring to a facility she recently visited near McAllen, Texas. "What I saw is what happens when Congress gets its act together and passes humanitarian aid," she added.

Congress

BROOKS VOTES FOR 9/11 HEROS BILL: U.S. Rep. Susan W. Brooks (R-IN05) voted in support of H.R. 1327, the Never Forget the Heroes: James Zadroga, Ray Pfeifer, and Luis Alvarez Permanent Authorization of the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund Act, a bill she proudly cosponsors. Brooks provided the following statement (Howey Politics Indiana): "Without hesitation, first responders from around the country, including Task Force 1 from Indiana, heroically rushed into burning buildings and extremely dangerous situations in hopes to save lives during a time of horror and terror. Although almost 18 years have passed since that unforgettable day, the survivors of the terrorist attacks on September 11, 2001, continue to suffer from injuries and illnesses caused by exposure to toxins at Ground Zero, the Pentagon and Shanksville. On behalf of the tens of thousands of responders and survivors of these attacks, as well as the surviving family members of those who lost their lives, I am proud the House of Representatives overwhelmingly voted to provide these individuals with compensation for needed recovery efforts."

BROOKS VOTES FOR SENATE VERSION NDAA: U.S. Rep. Susan W. Brooks (R-IN05) provided the following statement regarding her vote against the House version of the National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA) and her support for the bipartisan Senate version of the NDAA (Howey Politics Indiana): "It is critically important to provide the men and women in our armed forces the resources and tools they need in order to safely defend and protect our country. For 58 years, the Armed Services Committee has passed a bipartisan NDAA. I am disappointed today's House version of the NDAA is extremely partisan, endangers U.S. national security and undercuts authorities' abilities to combat serious threats on an international level, including combatting terrorism. This bill cuts critical programs designed to deter Russia and China, cuts personnel accounts by over one billion dollars, cuts nuclear deterrent programs and cuts readiness recovery."

WALORSKI COMMENTS ON NDAA: U.S. Rep. Jackie Walorski (R-Ind.) today released the following statement after voting against H.R. 2500, a partisan version of the National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA) that would harm military readiness (Howey Politics Indiana): "Congress' most important responsibility is to provide for the national defense and support our brave men and women in uniform. Sadly, the NDAA passed by the House today falls short of these goals and breaks a longstanding tradition of bipartisan cooperation. "While the Senate passed its bill with overwhelming support from both parties, House Democratic leaders offered a partisan proposal that underfunds our national defense, undercuts military readiness, and reverses prohibitions on transferring terrorist detainees from Gitmo. I hope they will put politics aside and pass a commonsense, bipartisan national defense bill, including two provisions I authored to encourage adoption of military working dogs by their former handlers and connect more wounded warriors to service dogs."

BUCHSHON VOTES AGAINST NDAA: U.S. Rep. Larry Bucshon, M.D. (IN-08) released the following statement after voting against the National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA) (H.R. 2500) due to the lack of adequate allocation of resources requested and blatant partisanship (Howey Politics Indiana): "Traditionally, the NDAA process has been light on partisanship with Republicans and Democrats coming together to advance policies that support our troops and strengthen our national defense. Unfortunately, House Democrats are risking the safety and security of our freedom at home and abroad with this partisan legislation that they intend to use as a political tool. While there are important measures within the NDAA for Hoosiers, the overall bill does not address our national security needs so I must vote to protect our military personnel, our safety, and our way of life. I urge Speaker Pelosi and House Democrats to abandon their partisanship with this NDAA and put the safety of our nation first."

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB SEEKS DISASTER RELIEF FOR 88 COUNTIES - Gov. Eric J. Holcomb announced today that the state of Indiana is requesting a U.S. Department of Agriculture Secretarial disaster designation for 88 counties due to losses caused by flooding and excessive rain this planting season (Howey Politics Indiana). "Heavy and persistent rainfall has saturated fields across the state, hurting Indiana crops and our farmers," Gov. Holcomb said. "As I continue to monitor this situation, Hoosier farmers can rest assured that we will keep a close eye on the long-term effects of these relentless rains." The request was made today in a letter to USDA Secretary Sonny Perdue and signed by Gov. Holcomb, Lt. Gov. Suzanne Crouch and Indiana Farm Service Agency Executive Director Steven Brown. National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration data shows that the past 12 months have been the wettest on record in the United States. A USDA disaster designation can be requested when at least 30 percent of one crop is damaged or lost in a county. Of the state's 92 counties, 88 counties have reported data meeting that threshold. The designation would allow emergency low-interest loans to be made available to farmers. The low-interest financing can also be made to counties contiguous to counties in the disaster zone.

EDUCATION: PURDUE FORT WAYNE PURCHASES LAND - Purdue University Fort Wayne has officially closed on a three-story, 77,000-square-foot building and approximately 13 acres of land. The university paid $3.8 million for the property, funded through a combination of donations and what the institution calls "other sources" (Inside Indiana Business). Previously home to Brown Mackie College, the Park 3000 building at 3000 East Coliseum Boulevard is located just southeast of the Main Campus and will become the university's South Campus. The university says preliminary plans for the property include creating a new home for the Richard T. Doermer School of Business.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP BLASTS PROGRESSIVE DEMOCRATS - President Trump on Sunday lashed out at a group of progressive Democrats, saying the female lawmakers should "go back and help fix the totally broken and crime infested places from which they came" before criticizing policies in the U.S. (The Hill). "So interesting to see 'Progressive' Democrat Congresswomen, who originally came from countries whose governments are a complete and total catastrophe, the worst, most corrupt and inept anywhere in the world (if they even have a functioning government at all), now loudly and viciously telling the people of the United States, the greatest and most powerful Nation on earth, how our government is to be run," Trump said in an early morning string of tweets.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP LASHES OUT AT RYAN - President Donald Trump on Saturday broadened his attack on Paul Ryan, saying conservatives like the former speaker "almost killed the Republican Party" because they were "weak, ineffective & stupid" (Politico). "House Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy is a far superior leader than was Lame Duck Speaker Paul Ryan. Tougher, smarter and a far better fundraiser, Kevin is already closing in on 44 Million Dollars. Paul's final year numbers were, according to Breitbart, 'abysmal.'" Trump wrote. "People like....Paul Ryan almost killed the Republican Party. Weak, ineffective & stupid are not exactly the qualities that Republicans, or the CITIZENS of our Country, were looking for. Right now our spirit is at an all time high, far better than the Radical Left Dems. You'll see next year!" Trump continued.

NEW YORK: BLACKOUT HITS NYC - Power was slowly returning to parts of Manhattan Saturday night after a widespread outage plunged subway stations, stores and parts of Times Square into darkness (Wall Street Journal). The outage, which was caused by a transformer fire, affected 62,954 customers and began around 6:47 p.m., according to electric company Con Edison. Power started returning to the affected parts of Manhattan at 10 p.m. and was expected to be fully restored by 12:00 a.m. Sunday, according to New York City officials.

CITIES: INDY AIRPORT RANKS HIGH - Travel + Leisure Magazine has named Indianapolis International Airport one of readers' favorite domestic airports in the world. The airport landed the second spot on the magazine's 2019 World's Best Domestic Airports Awards (Inside Indiana Business). The Indy airport scored only two points behind the Portland International Airport. The magazine says survey respondents remarked: "This should be the blueprint for all airports!" "Great local restaurants to eat and grab coffee or beer," and "Always clean. Security line is always friendly and quick."

COUNTIES: LAKE COUNCIL SEEKS $5M FOR SETTLEMENTS - Lake County lawmakers are preparing a multimillion-dollar bond issue to pay for dozens of legal settlements reached with plaintiffs who sued the county for alleged wrongdoing or misconduct (Dolan, NWI Times). At an informal session of the County Council on Thursday, attorneys for the Board of Commissioners introduced an ordinance that would authorize the sale of up to $5 million worth of bonds over a 10-year period. Funds raised in the bond sale would go toward the payment of at least 24 settlements reached in 2018 and 2019. The total settlement amount for those cases is about $3.3 million, according to documents presented to lawmakers at the session.

COUNTIES: MARION HAS OPIOID TREATMENT PROGRAM - Opioid drug abuse continues to plague the state, particularly with populations who are or have been incarcerated (Indiana Public Media). Nearly 20 percent of people sentenced to state prison or jail report regular opioid use according to the Substance Abuse and Mental health Administration. This is dangerous because people's tolerance to opioids goes down while they are incarcerated, says Tisha Wiley, chief of The Services Research Branch at the National Institute on Drug Abuse. "So if they do go back to the community and seek out opioids, that makes them especially vulnerable to relapse," she says.

ROKITA PONDERES ATTORNEY GENERAL BID: Seated conspicuously to the right of Gov. Eric Holcomb's reelection kickoff at the Hoosier Gym in Knightstown Saturday was former secretary of state and congressman Todd Rokita (Howey Politics Indiana). Catching up with Rokita after the event ended, HPI asked Rokita if we should continue to include him as a potential challenger to the embattled Attorney General Curtis Hill. Rokita said he was at the event "to take the temperature" of a potential Statehouse comeback. He said he might have until October to decide. Hill has faced calls for his resignation from Holcomb and other GOP leaders after sexual harassment allegations were leveled against him in 2018. He faces a Supreme Court review of his law license, expected to be decided by October. Hill hasn't announced for reelection, but reported raising $220,000, though $100,000 of that came from the Republican Attorney Generals Association. Zionsville attorney John Westercamp has already announced he will challenge Hill in the June 2020 Republican Convention.

TRUMP TELLS 4 CONGRESSWOMAN TO 'GO BACK': President Trump provocatively injected himself into a simmering Democratic dispute Sunday, tweeting that a group of progressives quarreling with House Speaker Nancy Pelosi—all but one of whom were born in the U.S.—came from corrupt and broken countries and should "go back" to "fix" what he called the "totally broken and crime infested places from which they came" (Wall Street Journal). The president's broadside against the lawmakers, all of whom are minorities, was condemned as racist by Democrats across the spectrum. Mr. Trump's tweets came amid deepening tensions between Mrs. Pelosi and a group of freshman progressive lawmakers seeking to push Democratic policy further to the left, a dispute that also was playing out on social media over the weekend. Mr. Trump continued in his tweets that after fixing the places they come from, the congresswomen should "come back and show us how it is done. These places need your help badly, you can't leave fast enough. I'm sure that Nancy Pelosi would be very happy to quickly work out free travel arrangements!" The four apparent targets of the president's tweet were Reps. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez of New York, Rashida Tlaib of Michigan, Ilhan Omar of Minnesota and Ayanna Pressley of Massachusetts. Ms. Omar, the only one born outside the U.S., came to the country as a child from Somalia. Ms. Ocasio-Cortez is of Puerto Rican heritage, while Ms. Tlaib is Palestinian-American and Ms. Pressley is African-American. Mrs. Pelosi (D., Calif.) called the tweets "xenophobic" and said they showed that Mr. Trump's goal was "making America white again." Ms. Ocasio-Cortez, for her part, tweeted: "Mr. President, the country I 'come from,' and the country we all swear to, is the United States...You are angry because you can't conceive of an America that includes us."

RADIO SILENCE FROM REPUBLICANS AFTER LATEST TRUMP INSULT: Republicans offered little reaction. Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R., Ky.) declined to comment. The office of Rep. Kevin McCarthy of California, the GOP House leader, didn't respond to a request for comment (Wall Street Journal). When Mr. Trump used a vulgarity last year to describe some African nations sending immigrants to the U.S.—calling them "shithole countries"—a number of Republican senators objected. President Trump knows he can say whatever he likes and face no consequences from the party he has conquered. The few Republicans who dared to defy him either got crushed by pro-Trump candidates in primaries (Rep. Mark Sanford), quit the party (Rep. Justin Amash) or retired (Sens. Jeff Flake and Bob Corker) (Swan, Axios). One remaining critic, Sen. Mitt Romney, mostly pushes back by issuing stern but ineffectual tweets. And Sen. Ben Sasse, who used to lambaste the president, has mostly gone silent. No modern president, besides George W. Bush immediately after the 9/11 attacks, has enjoyed such popularity with Republican voters.

STANDING O FOR MAYOR PETE IN IOWA: Ten Democratic presidential candidates took the stage Sunday afternoon in 90-degree weather to address would-be Iowa caucusgoers, but only Pete Buttigieg got a standing ovation (Des Moines Register). The crowd of more than 1,100 who turned out for the annual Progress Iowa Corn Feed in Cedar Rapids demonstrated the most enthusiasm for the South Bend, Indiana, mayor, who said the 2020 presidential election is about winning the next era in American politics. "If we embrace a left-wing agenda, the president's going to say we're socialists and we're for open borders. If we adopt a conservative agenda, the president's going to say we're socialists and we're for open borders. So we might as well stand up for what we believe in and take it from there," Buttigieg said. Christie Steel, a 53-year-old from Marion, came out on Sunday specifically to see Buttigieg, whom she supports. "I like his thoughts. I love the fact that he's just very even-tempered — he seems to put a lot of thought behind what he thinks and does," said Steel, who works in insurance.

WEEKEND ICE RAIDS DIDN'T MATERIALIZE: The nationwide immigration raids that President Trump said would begin Sunday failed to materialize on the streets of major U.S. cities, even as his statement cast a cloud of fear that kept many families indoors (Washington Post). Immigration enforcement authorities said their plans to track down migrants with deportation orders would continue, but their operations over the weekend appeared more akin to routine actions rather than the mass roundups the president promised. Immigrants and advocates had been bracing for the arrests, which Trump last warned of on Friday, saying he wanted agents "to take people out and take them back to their countries." But federal law enforcement officials said they worried that the unusual public disclosure of the plan endangered officers and threatened their effectiveness.

CHRISTIE BLAMES TRUMP TRANSITION FOR CABINET TURMOIL: Former New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie (R) said Sunday that President Trump's "poorly" run transition team is the root of high turnover rates in the Trump administration (The Hill). Christie's comments came during a discussion on ABC's "This Week" about the growing number of acting department officials in the Trump administration. Last week, Alexander Acosta announced he'd be stepping down as Labor secretary amid growing scrutiny over his role in negotiating a plea deal for Jeffrey Epstein, a financier accused of running a sex trafficking ring and abusing dozens of girls. "It all goes back to the transition and how poorly the transition was run," Christie said on ABC. "These people were not vetted appropriately, and the president ended up watching them in action. They were vetted while they were doing the jobs, and they wound up being deficient, many of them." Christie was the head of Trump's transition team until he was ousted days after the president's surprise victory. The team was then lead by Vice President Mike Pence who reportedly outsourced political vetting to the Republican National Committee. The Trump administration has seen frequent turnover in senior positions throughout the first half of Trump's first term in office.

CHINA GROWTH SLOWEST SINCE 1992: China's economic growth decelerated to its slowest pace in decades, weakened by trade tensions with the U.S. and businesses that held back from making big investments despite encouragement from Beijing (Wall Street Journal). The economy grew by 6.2% in the second quarter, down from 6.4% in the period before, official statistics showed Monday. Growth was slower than the 6.3% on-year rate forecast by economists. Investments remained weak on a quarterly basis, even though the month of June saw the beginning of a potential recovery as Beijing encouraged banks to lend more. Exports fell in June from a year earlier after trade talks with Washington broke down and President Trump applied higher tariffs to Chinese goods.

FARMERS MARKETS BECOME RACIAL FLASHPOINTS: At Bloomington, Indiana's weekend farmers' market, shoppers can stock up on kale, fresh eggs, homemade jams—and anti-Nazi accessories (Daily Beast). "Don't Buy Veggies From Nazis," read a pile of colorful buttons at a recent Saturday farmers' market. The buttons were a jab at Sarah Dye and Douglas Mackey, proprietors of Schooner Creek Farm, a vegetable farm. Like other unassuming stallholders at the market, Dye and Mackey sell eggs and seasonal vegetables. But online, Dye is "Volkmom," an active member of the white supremacist group Identity Evropa, according to leaked chat logs. "Volk" is a nod to the Nazis' back-to-the-land völkisch movement. "Any Whites who have spent time living in a neighborhood or attending a school with a non-white majority know the strife that Whites endure," Dye wrote in an Identity Evropa chat in January. "I can attest to it myself." She also wrote of trying to win over a family member by showing videos from a white supremacist channel. After the couple's connections came to light, Bloomington locals campaigned to oust the couple from their weekend stall at the city's farmers' market. The farmers' market face-off isn't not the first of its kind. From Chicago to Sweden, farmers' markets have become a surprising battleground between the far right and its opponents. The far right's love of the markets plays into a larger fascist talking point that idealizes pastoral life and demonizes "degenerate" urban living. The contrast attempts to cast white supremacy as a purer alternative. "A bunch of us have been passing out flyers at the farmers' market to say 'don't put your money in white supremacy,'" Abby Ang, a Bloomington community organizer, told The Daily Beast.

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: President Trump wants four Democratic congresswomen to "go back" to the countries they came from. Three of them were born in Cincinnati, Detroit and New York. Rep. Omar was born in Somalia and came to the U.S. as a refugee at age 12 and is a naturalized American citizen. The four congresswomen are Americans. They came from America. But the incendiary Trump tweets diverted attention from the Jeffrey Epstein/Alex Acosta controversy and the ICE roundups that didn't happen this weekend. - Brian A. Howey

Campaigns

HOGSETT TV AD FEATURES MAYOR HUDNUT: Indianapolis Mayor Joe Hogsett's reelection campaign is paying homage to the late Republican Mayor Bill Hudnut. The TV ad running today has Hogsett describing a "larger than life" Hudnut, adding that like Hudnut, he works for both Republicans and Democrats. The TV ends with Hogsett sitting next to the bench statue of Hudnut. In 1990, Hogsett defeated Hudnut for Indiana secretary of state, essentially ending Hudnut's attempt to win the Republican gubernatorial nomination in 1992.

Presidential 2020

BIDEN, BUTTIGIEG REPRESENT GENERATIONAL DIVIDE: Amy McInerney at first saw Joe Biden as Democrats' best hope to beat President Donald Trump — an experienced politician with the potential to peel off some of Trump's working-class supporters. Then she heard Pete Buttigieg speak (AP). "I felt like Pete more represented my generation," said McInerney, 33, as she held her 6-month-old daughter, who sported a pink "Buttigieg 2020" onesie. "There need to be voices that are younger represented." Separated by 40 years, Biden and Buttigieg represent the generational poles of the crowded Democratic presidential primary. Biden, 76, would be the oldest person elected president. Buttigieg, the 37-year-old mayor of South Bend, Indiana, would be the youngest. Biden casts his decades of experience in Washington as a remedy for Trump's turbulent tenure, while Buttigieg argues that the moment calls for the energy of a new generation. "A lot of this is simply the idea that we need generational change, that we need more voices stepping up from a generation that has so much at stake in the decisions that are being made right now," Buttigieg said shortly after announcing his candidacy. At a time when the Democratic field is sorting out its differences on issues from health to immigration, that call for generational change, and how Democrats resolve it, could prove to be even more consequential. It's a fight not just over which candidate gives Democrats the best chance of defeating Trump in 2020, but the direction of the party for years to come. So far, Biden's and Buttigieg's strategies have yielded early success. Biden has led primary polls for much of the year, while Buttigieg tops the most recent fundraising race, amassing $24.8 million in second-quarter fundraising.

BIDEN ROLLS OUT OBAMACARE PLUS PLAN: Former Vice President Joe Biden has released a plan his campaign said would make the Affordable Care Act easier to navigate with more choices for Americans (ABC News). The plan would expand upon the Affordable Care Act passed under the Obama-Biden administration and provide a public option for patients to buy into, rather than a "Medicare-for-all" system that several of Biden's 2020 rivals advocate for -- a contrast Biden has already started to draw on the campaign trail.

Sunday Talk

CUCCINELLI WON'T SAY IF FAMILIES WILL BE SEPARATED: Acting director of U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) Ken Cuccinelli would not say Sunday whether expected Immigrations and Customs Enforcement (ICE) raids would separate families. Cuccinelli discussed the raids on CNN's "State of the Union," but told host Jake Tapper he is not willing to discuss operational details, which, he said, would put ICE officers in danger. Among specifics Cuccinelli would not respond to was guaranteeing families won't be separated in the impending raids. "In the same way I wasn't willing to talk about operation details I won't comment on that," he said, of family separation. "There are 1 million people, including families, with removal orders."

CBP DIRECTOR SEEKS TO ALLAY RAID FEARS: President Trump's top official at Customs and Border Protection (CBP) tried to quell fears by immigrant advocates and Democratic lawmakers that the expected roundups of undocumented families in major cities across the country will separate parents from their children, saying the objective of the operation is not family separation. "The design is not about family separation. That's not the intent. It never has been. It never will be," Acting CBP Commissioner Mark Morgan said on "Face the Nation" Sunday. "The men and women of ICE, they are, too, American heroes," he added, referring to employees of his former agency, Immigration and Customs Enforcement. "They're mothers, they are fathers, brothers and sisters. They're going to apply this with humanity and compassion."

SANDERS SAYS PELOSI TOO TOUGH ON 'THE SQUAD': House Speaker Nancy Pelosi is being "a little bit" too tough on Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez and her squad of young Democratic women, Sen. Bernie Sanders said Sunday. "What Alexandria and other young women and women of color are saying, 'We have got to reach out to young people,'" the 2020 presidential contender said on NBC's "Meet the Press." "We have to hear the pain of the working class of this country. And that is causing some political disruption within the leadership of the Democratic Party."

JOHNSON COMMENTS ON ICE RAIDS: Jeh Johnson, who led the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) during President Obama's second term, advised undocumented immigrants they are not required to open the doors of their homes to immigration authorities unless agents produce a warrant signed by a judge. "If someone from ICE ERO comes to someone's home — unless they have a warrant — that person is not required to admit them," Johnson said on "Face the Nation" Sunday, referring to the Enforcement and Removal Operations (ERO) branch of Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) which is responsible for apprehending people the government seeks to deport.

DURBIN CITS TRUMP'S 'CARELESS RHETORIC': Illinois Sen. Dick Durbin, the second-highest ranking Democrat in the Senate, denounced President Trump's tweets on Sunday about four progressive congresswomen of color, calling the comments "careless rhetoric" designed to sow division. "I could just tell you that when we are dealing with mass arrests or mass deportations and that kind of careless rhetoric by the president, it doesn't help one bit," Durbin said on "Face the Nation" Sunday.

DURBIN THANKFUL REP. OMAR IS AN AMERICAN: Sen. Dick Durbin (D-Ill.) responded Sunday to a series of tweets by President Trump telling unnamed "'Progressive' Democrat Congresswomen" to "go back" to the countries they came from, saying "that kind of careless rhetoric doesn't help one bit." Speaking on CBS' "Face the Nation," Durbin defended Rep. Ilhan

Omar (D-Minn.) without mentioning her by name, speculating that she was the target of Trump's tweet despite its use of the plural. Omar, along with Reps. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-N.Y.), Ayanna Pressley (D-Mass.) and Rashida Tlaib (D-Mich.) is one of four freshman Democrats who have clashed with House Speaker Pelosi in recent weeks, and the only one of the four born outside the United States. Durbin invoked his own family history, including his mother's journey to the U.S. as a child from Lithuania. "I'm going to stick with the United States as my mother did, as my brothers did," he said. Durbin also cited Omar's own life story. "The fact that they went through refugee camps, came to the United States, clawed their way into an existence [and] eventually were elected, thank goodness," he said.

RAPINOE SAYS TRUMP INTENDS TO DIVIDE: Soccer star Megan Rapinoe said on Sunday that President Trump's message divides Americans. "I think Trump's message excludes people that look like me and are me, of course, but it excludes a lot of people in his base, as well," Rapinoe said on NBC's "Meet the Press." "And I think that he's trying to divide so he can conquer and not unite so we can all conquer," she said.

Congress

HOUSE PREVIEW: The House will consider H.R. 3494 — The Intelligence Authorization Act. The bill would authorize funding and enable congressional oversight of the U.S. Intelligence Community (Axios). The House will also consider a resolution to hold Attorney General Bill Barr and Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross in contempt over their stonewalling of congressional subpoenas regarding their push to add a citizenship question to the 2020 Census. The House will review H.R. 582 — the Raise the Wage Act. This legislation would gradually increase the minimum wage to $15 by 2024.

SENATE PREVIEW: The Senate will process 4 tax treaties that were reported out of the Foreign Relations committee in late June, as well as confirm the following nominees, in this order, per a Republican leadership aide: Peter Joseph Phipps as a judge for the Third Circuit. Protocol amending the Tax Convention with Spain. Protocol amending the Tax Convention with Swiss Confederation. Protocol amending the Tax Convention with Japan. Protocol amending the Tax Convention with Luxembourg. Clifton L. Corker as a judge for the Eastern District of Tennessee. Lynda Blanchard as U.S. ambassador to the Republic of Slovenia. Donald R. Tapia as U.S. ambassador to Jamaica.

General Assembly

DEMS NOT GIVING UP ON REDISTRICTING REFORM: The fight to remove partisanship from the process of drawing Indiana's legislative boundaries will continue, even though the U.S. Supreme Court recently announced that it no longer will intervene to remedy excessively one-sided maps. "We conclude that partisan gerrymandering claims present political questions beyond the reach of the federal courts," Chief Justice John Roberts said (Carden, NWI Times). Julia Vaughn, director of Common Cause Indiana and one of the state's most prominent redistricting reform advocates, said she was disappointed the Supreme Court declined to "take a stand against partisan gerrymandering." "The Supreme Court may be OK with incumbent politicians manipulating the districts to their advantage, but Hoosiers have had enough and want a new system in place by 2021," Vaughn said. House Democratic Leader Phil GiaQuinta, D-Fort Wayne, said he is on board. GiaQuinta plans to file legislation during the 2020 General Assembly requiring an independent redistricting panel draw new maps for the Legislature to approve, with only minimal changes permitted. "The people of Indiana have made it clear that they want legislative and congressional districts drawn by a nonpartisan commission," GiaQuinta said. "The responsibility now lies with the Indiana House and Senate Republicans to act on their wishes." Senate Democratic Leader Tim Lanane, D-Anderson, also believes an independent redistricting process is needed more than ever following the Supreme Court ruling to ensure the integrity of Indiana elections. "We will no longer be able to fall back on the ability of the federal government to prevent politicians from choosing their voters instead of the other way around," Lanane said.

GAMING: MAJESTIC STAR HOTEL CLOSES AT GARY - A 300-room hotel built opened by Donald Trump's casino company in 1998 to help draw gamblers to a northwestern Indiana casino has been shut down (AP). The June 30 closure came as the current owner of the Majestic Star Casino in Gary is working to move it from along Lake Michigan to a location along the busy Interstate 80-94 in the city. Spectacle Entertainment vice president Jahnae Erpenbach tells The (Northwest Indiana) Times that the hotel had declining occupancy and making needed renovations didn't make sense with the upcoming casino move.

DNR: GIRL BITTEN BY COPPERHEAD AT BROWN COUNTY SP - A 7-year-old girl is recovering after being bitten by a copperhead snake Saturday at Brown County State Park (WIBC). According to the DNR, the girl was playing with other kids at her campsite when she ran to the edge of the woods. That's where the DNR believes she was when she was bit. After she complained of a bite around her ankle, the girl's father went back to the area and saw a snake. The girl was taken to Riley Hospital in Indianapolis and doctors say she will make a full recovery. According to the DNR, the incident has similarities to other instances of copperhead bites: It was after dark, and the person who was bit was in a poorly lit area and not using a flashlight.

WHITE HOUSE: ROSS MAY BE NEXT CABINET SEC ON THE LINE - President Donald Trump has told aides and allies that he is considering removing Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross after a stinging Supreme Court defeat on adding a citizenship question to the census, according to multiple people familiar with the conversations (NBC News).

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP/PENCE SCHEDULE: President Trump's schedule, per a White House official: Monday: Trump will participate in the Third Annual Made in America Product Showcase. He will also have lunch with Vice President Pence. Tuesday: Trump will meet with his Cabinet. Later he will have lunch with Secretary of State Mike Pompeo. Wednesday: Trump will speak at a campaign rally in Greenville, North Carolina. Thursday: Trump will meet with the prime minister of the Netherlands at the White House. The two will also participate in a flag presentation ceremony.

STATE: POMPEO ALLOWS IRANIAN DIPLOMAT TO NYC - Secretary of State Mike Pompeo said Sunday night that he granted a visa to Iran's foreign minister to visit New York primarily to meet U.S. obligations to the United Nations but that his movements will be sharply curtailed (Washington Post). Pompeo said in a telephone interview that Foreign Minister Mohammad Javad Zarif and his delegation will be permitted to travel between U.N. headquarters and the Iranian mission six blocks away, and to the residence of Iran's U.N. ambassador nearby. The group arrived in New York on Sunday morning. "U.S. diplomats don't roam around Tehran, so we don't see any reason for Iranian diplomats to roam freely around New York City, either," Pompeo said.

TRANSPORTATION: BOEING MAY KEEP SUPER MAX ON GROUND INTO 2020 - Boeing Co. BA 1.76% 's 737 MAX planes are unlikely to be ready to carry passengers again until 2020 because of the time it will take to fix flight-control software and complete other steps, an increasing number of government and industry officials say, even as the company strives to get its jet back into service this year (Wall Street Journal). The situation remains fluid, no firm timeline has been established and Boeing still has to satisfy U.S. regulators that it has answered all outstanding safety questions. But under the latest scenario, the global MAX fleet is now anticipated to return to the air in January 2020, a full 12 months after the plane maker proposed its initial replacement of software eventually implicated in a pair of fatal crashes—one in October and one in March—according to some Federal Aviation Administration officials and pilot-union leaders.

MEDIA: O'DONNELL TAKES OVER CRONKITE CHAIR AT CBS - Norah O'Donnell at 6:30 tonight becomes anchor of the "CBS Evening News" — the Walter Cronkite chair — then anchors tomorrow from Kennedy Space Center (Axios). Why it matters, from the L.A. Times' Stephen Battaglio: O'Donnell "is faced with the task of making a nightly half-hour newscast a regular appointment for viewers in an era when they are inundated with news throughout the day. The three network newscasts still collectively averaged 23 million viewers a night in the 2018-19 TV season, compared to around 7 million that Fox News, CNN and MSNBC draw in prime time."

CITIES: PROSECUTOR CALLS FOR DEMOTION OF ANDERSON PD CHIEF - A central Indiana prosecutor is calling the demotion of Anderson's police chief over a confrontation with state troopers who were arresting the chief's son (AP). Madison County Prosecutor Rodney Cummings says state police told him Anderson Chief Tony Watters came physically close to investigators and put a finger in their faces during the June 7 arrest. Cummings tells The Herald Bulletin that Watters' behavior was "unacceptable" for a police chief. Watters says he fully cooperated with the state police investigation. Troopers arrested the chief's son, who is an Anderson police officer, on charges that he attacked his girlfriend. Anderson Mayor Thomas Broderick says he's received no information from state police about the chief and won't pre-judge him.

CITIES: PROTESTS AS CLARKSVILLE HOTEL CLOSURES - Some residents of the America's Best Inn & Suites in Clarksville have already been displaced about a week before the hotel is officially set to close (News & Tribune). As they work to find permanent housing for the long-term hotel residents, members of the recently formed Homeless Prevention Task Force organized a protest Saturday to bring awareness to the need for affordable housing options in the area and to encourage the town to provide assistance. America's Best, located at 342 Eastern Boulevard, will close to all residents on July 19 — the 140-room hotel provided 65 families with a 30-day notice to vacate on June 19, two days after the sale of the property was finalized. However, some families who have struggled to pay the hotel rent were forced to leave the hotel Friday evening and Saturday, according to Homeless Prevention Task Force member Jim Moon, who is also the pastor at Park Memorial United Methodist Church.

BUTTIGIEG CHALLENGES YOUNG DEMS IN INDY: Mayor Pete Buttigieg issued a clarion call for Young Democrats to pick up the mantle of leadership and make a generational shift from the Ronald Reagan chapter of American politics, telling delegates, "Young gets it done" (Howey Politics Indiana). "The young generation today is the largest and most diverse ever, and the size of our generation gives us the power to shape politics for the half-century to come," Buttigieg told a Young Democrats Convention at Union Station. "So it's good news that we are the most Democratic generation alive. It's natural that our generation be the most skeptical ever of Republican policies." Buttigieg said that President Trump is betraying Reagan conservatism. "This is how the conservative era comes to an end," Buttigieg said. "Their movement is collapsing." He said that he sees an America "that lives in chapter," explaining, "The New Deal era lasted for almost 50 years, until it came to an end with Reagan. And then the Reagan era lasted the last 40 years, with even Democrats acting like the only thing you can do to a tax is cut it, like the only thing you can do with government is shrink it. But it didn't work. We are what comes next. The New Deal era ended with Reagan. The Reagan era ends with us." "It's why I'm ready to deliver something completely different," Buttigieg said. Buttigieg's speech, the first in Indiana since his foreign policy address at Indiana University in May and one of the few appearances since he kicked off his campaign in South Bend in mid-April, comes as he has established himself as a top tier candidate. He leads Joe Biden, Bernie Sanders, Elizabeth Warren and Kamala Harris in money, with an impressive $24.8 million haul at the end of the second quarter, and $22 million cash on hand. While he has slid in the national polls recently after the police action shooting controversy in South Bend on June 16, Buttigieg has the funds to continue into the primary and caucus season.

SHOCKED REPUBLICANS PRESS PENCE ON 'SEND HER BACK': Republican members are expressing shock and discomfort over the 'send her back' chants that erupted during President Donald Trump's rally Wednesday night, with even some members of House GOP leadership expressing their concerns to Vice President Mike Pence on Thursday (Politico). "During a breakfast meeting with Republican leaders, multiple members said they were disturbed by the chants aimed at Rep. Ilhan Omar (D-Minn.) and asked Pence to relay their message to Trump, which he agreed to do, according to several members who were present. "Rep. Paul Mitchell, the sophomore class representative, even asked for a 15-minute meeting with the president so he could directly discuss the issue with Trump. "It's one thing to do chants of 'lock her up.' But a chant like ['send her back'] is simply not reflective of our constitution," the Michigan Republican told POLITICO. And Rep. Tom Cole (R-Okla.) said Pence seemed to share their concerns. 'He said, "at first I couldn't even tell what it was." And he said, "that just needs to not happen,"' said Cole, ranking member on the House Rules Committee. 'He seemed as appalled by it as everybody else.'"

TRUMP DISAVOWS CHANT: President Trump on Thursday sought to distance himself from the chant, saying "I was not happy with it — I disagreed with it" (Politico). When asked why he didn't stop it, he replied "I think I did — I started speaking very quickly."

MADISON COUNTY GOP CHAIR 'DISAPPOINTED' WITH BROOKS: Russ Willis, chairman of the Madison County Republican Party, said he was surprised and disappointed by U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks' vote on the resolution (de la Bastide, Anderson Herald-Bulletin). "I honestly think there was a misunderstanding on her part of what President Trump was trying to say," he said. "His comments were not about diversity, but directed at those whose actions were unAmerican." Willis said he believes Brooks voted on how she felt and that there was a misunderstanding of what the president was stating. Brooks recently announced that she would not be seeking a fifth term in 2020. Brian Howey, editor of Howey Politics Indiana, said Wednesday that because of her decision not to seek re-election Brooks is now free to comment. "She doesn't have to worry about retribution from Trump," he said. "It seems to me that she is following along the same lines as Sen. Bob Corker." Corker decided not to seek re-election in 2018 after serving two terms in the Senate from Tennessee. "On the record, the Republicans are stating it's just Trump and his style," Howey said of Trump's use of Twitter. "Behind the scenes there is more concern."

MYERS BLASTS TRUMP REMARKS, CRITICIZES HOLCOMB: Democratic gubernatorial candidate Woody Myers took aim at President Trump's controversial "go home" remarks on Thursday (Howey Politics Indiana). "'Go back home.' They are three words I heard more than once when growing up. And now, decades later, we are hearing them again — this time from the President of the United States," Dr. Myers said. "His tweets give 'permission for some of his supporters to use that phrase — 'go back home' against kids and adults as well, just because they may be of a different race or a different ethnicity. But that's where we are. And the man I'm running against for Governor of Indiana, Eric Holcomb, refused to condemn President Trump's blatantly racist remarks and instead said, 'Everybody's got their own style.' This is not an issue of "style" — you know it and I know it. True leaders across this great country, both Democrat and Republican, know that this racist rhetoric has no place in our public discourse. True leaders can stand up to their friends to tell them when they're wrong, and yes — that words do matter. I'm saddened for our state and our nation this week. When I'm Governor, you'll have a true leader behind that desk. Governor Holcomb should be ashamed of himself. We must do better."

SOUTH BEND COP CAMERAS TO ACTIVATE WHEN GUN DRAWN: The South Bend Police Department is updating its body camera technology after a fatal police shooting last month in which the officer involved did not activate his body camera (Wright, South Bend Tribune). Previously, officers' body cameras activated automatically when the light bar on their police vehicle was turned on or if the vehicle reached a certain speed. The cameras could also be manually activated, which Sgt. Ryan O'Neil did not do when he fatally shot Eric Logan on June 16 in a downtown parking lot. Now, a change has been instituted in which body cameras are also automatically activated when a squad car door is opened. And soon, technology will be added to activate the cameras when an officer's gun is drawn from his or her holster. The holster sensors are being provided to the department at no cost by BodyWorn, the company that manufactures the cameras. BodyWorn said in a statement that the holster sensor technology was not available when South Bend initially bought the cameras last year for $1.5 million. The new sensors will be equipped in the next 60 to 90 days.

EPSTEIN DOC DUMP COULD METASTASIZE SCANDAL: As the Jeffrey Epstein case continues to unfold, a laundry list of celebrities, business magnates and socialites who have flown anywhere near the registered sex offender's orbit are now tainted with pedo-polonium (Zero Hedge). Also illuminating is a statement by attorney Brad Edwards, who said during a Wednesday press conference seated next to Epstein accuser Courtney Wild that "There were other business associates of Mr. Epstein's who engaged in improper sexual misconduct at one or more of his homes. We do know that," adding "In due time the names are going to start coming out." What's more, the US Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit will release of approximately 2,000 pages of documents, likely over the next several days, which may reveal sex crimes committed by "numerous prominent American politicians, powerful business executives, foreign presidents, a well-known prime minister, and other world leaders," according to the court's three-judge panel. The documents were filed during a civil defamation lawsuit brought by Epstein accuser Virginia Roberts Giuffre, a former Mar-a-Lago locker-room attendant, against Epstein's former girlfriend and alleged madam, Ghislaine Maxwell. "Nobody who was around Epstein a lot is going to have an easy time now. It's all going to come out," said Giuffre's lawyer David Boies. Another person involved with litigation against Epstein told me: "It's going to be staggering, the amount of names. It's going to be contagion numbers." -Vanity Fair

THE JOURNALIST WITH EPSTEIN'S LITTLE BLACK BOOK: With Jeffrey Epstein denied bail and prosecutors building their case in his sex trafficking indictment, one of the next shoes to drop—possibly many shoes—will invariably be: Who within Epstein's social orbit might be implicated in the scandal one way or another? As someone involved in litigation against Epstein told my colleague Gabriel Sherman earlier this week, "It's going to be staggering, the amount of names. It's going to be contagion numbers" (Vanity Fair). Ever since Epstein's arrest on July 6, there's been growing scrutiny of his vast network of rich and/or famous and/or powerful friends and acquaintances—or former friends and acquaintances, as it were. There's a road map to that network in Epstein's now-infamous black book, filled with many bold-faced names, phone numbers, and addresses, from Donald Trump, Bill Clinton, and Ehud Barak to Alec Baldwin, Ralph Fiennes, Mick Jagger, and even Courtney Love. "It is a mosaic of Epstein's social contacts," the investigative journalist Nick Bryant told me. Bryant first got his hands on a copy of the black book in 2012, after the feds caught Epstein's former house manager trying to peddle it for $50,000. Three years later, when Epstein was back in the news due to fresh allegations that his pal Prince Andrew had slept with one of the girls who'd alleged she'd been trafficked by Epstein (Buckingham Palace denies this), Bryant finally published the black book in full (phone numbers redacted) in a Gawker article. In particular, the article called attention to a bunch of names that Epstein's former house manager (who passed in late 2014) had circled, supposedly to identify them as potential "material witnesses." (Trump, Barak, Alan Dershowitz, Les Wexner, Bill Richardson, and others.)

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: Early last Spring after the death of Sen. Birch Bayh, I wrote about John F. Kennedy's "Profiles in Courage" and cited 15 examples of Hoosier public servants taking bold, principled stances in tough times (HPI Analysis: Hoosiers & their profiles in courage). In the wake of this lurid "go back" controversy we've witnessed this week, and the Trump/Pence campaign fanning racial embers, what is becoming painfully clear is there is virtually no such courage in our current delegation. - Brian A. Howey

MERRITT BLASTS HOGETT OVER HUDNUT AD: While standing at Hudnut Commons in the heart of downtown Indianapolis, current State Senator and Indianapolis mayoral candidate Jim Merritt praised former Mayor Bill Hudnut and the vision for Indianapolis that he established, contrasting Hudnut's leadership with current Mayor Hogsett's lack of accomplishments and non-existent vision (Howey Politics Indiana). According to Merritt, Mayor Hudnut was a leading example of "vision versus opportunism and the important atkoo in our leaders of transparency and honesty." In his current campaign, Merritt states, "I have endeavored to discuss serious issues facing our city. I have made proposals that are intended to make all of our lives better. I have addressed issues that are relevant to our community right now ... (with) specific important initiatives to make Indianapolis a better place." In contrast, Merritt points out that "Hogsett's latest political ad suggests that he reveres Mayor Hudnut and sees him as a role model. Implicitly in his campaign ad is the suggestion that Joe views himself in the same stead as Mayor Hudnut. This suggestion is offensive." Merritt referred to Hogsett's 1990 campaign ads, which condemned Mayor Hudnut with such claims as "that's not leadership, that's deception"; "For Bill Hudnut, every problem has the same solution, more taxes"; and "Bill Hudnut, 27 tax increases for us and all those perks for himself." According to Merritt, "In no way are these comments reverent."

DEMS DISCUSS FAITH IN POLITICS: Young Democrats say faith in politics is a critical tool in the path forward for their party and the country (Smith, Indiana Public Media). That was part of the discussion Thursday at the Young Democrats of America national convention in Indianapolis. Jamal Abdurashheed is an attorney and a campaign organizer in Indianapolis. He says people should transition away from evoking faith to implement restrictive policies. "And instead using it as a tool, using it as a tool to create more understanding," Abdurashheed says.

CNN DEBATE LINEUPS SET; BUTTIGIEG ON JULY 30: CNN announced the Democratic debate lineups for July 30-31 (Politico). Flanking Bernie Sanders and Elizabeth Warren on the stage July 30 will be Montana Gov. Steve Bullock; Mayor Pete Buttigieg of South Bend, Indiana; former Maryland Rep. John Delaney; former Colorado Gov. John Hickenlooper; Minnesota Sen. Amy Klobuchar; former Texas Rep. Beto O'Rourke; Ohio Rep. Tim Ryan; and author Marianne Williamson. Joe Biden and Kamala Harris will be joined on the stage July 31 by Booker; New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio; Colorado Gov. Michael Bennet; former Obama Cabinet member Julián Castro; New York Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand; Hawaii Rep. Tulsi Gabbard; Washington Gov. Jay Inslee; and entrepreneur Andrew Yang.

SIMON DONATES $100K TO YOUNG DEMS: Carmel philanthropist Deborah Simon wants Democrats to win back the White House—as well as keep control of the U.S. House and win a majority in the U.S. Senate—and she's willing to do whatever it takes to make that happen (Erdody, IBJ). Simon, of the nation's top Democratic donors in the 2016 election, told IBJ, "I'm going to do anything I can to defeat him. That's my goal." To Simon, it starts with young voters, and that's why she recently made a significant—if not record-breaking, for the group—donation to Indiana Young Democrats, which helped bring the Young Democrats of America National Convention to Indianapolis for the first time ever this week. The $100,000 donation from Simon was enough to nab her the rights to title sponsor at the convention, which started Wednesday in downtown Indianapolis and runs through Saturday. "She believed in us," said Elise Shrock, spokesperson for the Indiana Young Democrats. "She saw and acknowledged the hard work that we are doing... We are playing on the national stage. And we're just getting started." She said she only knew about the Indiana Democratic Party, "which has done an OK job, but we need to be more aggressive in fundraising, and I think these guys are probably more aggressive than they could ever be because they have the energy."

CELEBS DONATE TO BUTTIGIEG CAMPAIGN: A-list celebrities seem to be opening their hearts — or at least their wallets — to Pete Buttigieg (Slodysko, AP). The South Bend, Indiana, mayor was a virtual unknown months ago. But he used breakout town hall performances, viral moments and his biography as a millennial, gay military veteran and a former Rhodes scholar to get the attention of the entertainment industry and rake in cash for his 2020 Democratic presidential campaign. Among the more than 50 celebrities who gave Buttigieg money during the second quarter are rocker Joan Jett ($150), recording industry mogul David Geffen ($5,600), fashion icon Anna Wintour ($2,800), designer Tom Ford ($5,600), actress Sharon Stone ($5,600) and comedian Ellen DeGeneres ($5,600). They helped fuel his field-leading $24.8 million fundraising haul. During the second fundraising quarter, Buttigieg kept up an aggressive fundraising schedule, often hitting multiple events in one day, including one held by actress Gwyneth Paltrow, who gave him $2,800. He also collected money from Star Trek actor George Takei ($1,250); DreamWorks co-founder Jeffrey Katzenberg and his wife, Marilyn ($5,600); Full House star John Stamos ($1,000); actress and singer Barbra Streisand ($1,000); and comedian and writer Larry David ($2,800). He was also given $5,600 by Playboy heir Cooper Hefner and collected $250 from actress Jennifer Aniston, records show.

TRUMP SAYS PENCE TOLD HIM BUTTIGIEG A BAD MAYOR: President Donald Trump took aim at South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg's standing with black residents in his city and said that Vice President Mike Pence told him that the Indiana Democrat "never did a good job" (Rickett, IndyStar). Trump's remarks Wednesday night came during a rally in North Carolina when he mentioned top-tier Democrats, including former Vice President Joe Biden and U.S. Sen. Kamala Harris. And then he turned to Buttigieg, the presidential candidate who was scheduled to speak in Indianapolis Thursday night at the national gathering for the Young Democrats of America. Trump invoked Pence, whose time as Indiana's governor overlapped with Buttigieg's tenure as South Bend's mayor. "He runs a failed city. His city is doing so badly. Mike Pence was the governor of that state. I said, 'How was he as the mayor?'" Trump said. "Mike is one of the nicest human beings you'll ever meet, and Mike said, 'He never did a good job. I'm so shocked to see him running.'"

BRAD STEVENS EYES BUTTIGIEG SNL GIG: If this basketball thing doesn't work out for Brad Stevens, he already has a backup plan in mind (AP). The Boston Celtics coach joked on Wednesday that he's hoping to capitalize on his resemblance to Democratic presidential candidate Pete Buttigieg. "I can get a job with 'Saturday Night Live,'" Stevens said. "That's my goal."

TRUMP OUT-SPENDS ALL CANDIDATES ON FACEBOOK: President Trump, whose Facebook spending far exceeds all of his Democratic rivals combined, has spent four times as much talking about immigration as the economy, Axios media trends expert Sara Fischer reports. From March 30 through July 6, Trump outspent the entire 2020 Democratic field by 3.45 to 1 on Facebook advertising around immigration issues, according to data from Bully Pulpit Interactive. Trump's Facebook targeting reflects his focus on two groups: older, white voters and Hispanic voters.

HARRIS CONTINUES TO CLARIFY 'MEDICARE FOR ALL': Sen. Kamala Harris is laughing off critics who say that she's struggled to articulate a clear health care policy. When asked about the confusion surrounding her stance on the issue in an interview with CNN on Wednesday, the 2020 presidential candidate chuckled, saying, "There's a lot that you're building into this question that's not accurate." But despite that assertion, Harris has had to clarify her stance on "Medicare for All" several times since the start of the year.

McCARTHY CONTINUES TO DEFEND TRUMP: Republican congressional leadership on Thursday maintained its steadfast defense of President Trump's recent tirade against four Democratic congresswomen of color, arguing that the conflict is strictly a matter of profound ideological differences (CBS News). House Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy, a California Republican, said chants of "send her back!" at the president's campaign rally in North Carolina on Wednesday have no "place" in the U.S. But he pushed back when asked by CBS News' Nancy Cordes if the chants were tied to recent controversial remarks by Mr. Trump. "I didn't get a chance to see the rally, but I saw clip. The president didn't join in any chant like that," McCarthy told reporters at the Capitol, referring to the repeated chants from the crowd as Mr. Trump lambasted Omar, a Somali-American and one of two Muslim women in Congress.

SCHOLARSHIP HONORS LUGAR: A Washington educational nonprofit organization that brings college students to the capital for classes and internships created a scholarship this week in honor of the late Sen. Richard Lugar (Schoeff, Howey Politics Indiana). The Fund for American Studies announced the Lugar Scholarship Fund at a July 17 dinner -- one week before the longest-serving Hoosier member of Congress will be buried at Arlington National Cemetery. The award will finance participation in TFAS summer programs, which involve economics and government classes at George Mason University and internships with media, nonprofit and government affairs offices. The scholarship will be targeted toward students from Indiana. Lugar was a longtime TFAS supporter, receiving the organization's Congressional Leadership Award in 1989 and 2010. He is the only repeat winner. TFAS promotes the principles of limited government, free-market economics and leadership. "The goal for the recipients of the Lugar Scholarship is to become honorable leaders -- leaders who make a difference in their communities and throughout the world, just like Dick Lugar did, by upholding the values necessary to the preservation of a free society," TFAS said in a statement included in the scholarship dinner program.

YOUNG, COONS TALK DIPLOMACY AT ND: The U.S. may not have had a major terror attack on home soil, but that doesn't mean terrorists have stopped. Finding ways to cut down on terrorism and violence around the world was part of a talk between senators Chris Coons (D-Delaware), and Sen. Todd Young (R-Ind.) at Notre Dame's Keough School's Kroc Institute for International Peace Studies, Alliance for Peacebuilding, Mercy Corps, and Search for Common Ground (WIBC). "Since 911 we've spent nearly six trillion dollars in combating violent extremism around the world, as a country. And, how are we doing? What are the results?" asked Coons. "Today there are more people displaced, there are more instances of terrorism and violence and there is less stability in the world." The senators are pushing passage of the Global Fragility Act, to ultimately reduce the number of countries that go into anarchy and become terrorist states. "We now have somewhere north, the U.N. tells us, of 400 violent conflicts world-wide," said Young. Young said he believes government has not been successful because the people who are working on the problem are often doing it in separate areas of government. The new 10-year plan would bring them together. "As the old saying goes, we tear down the walls and connect the dots between often times very talented individuals," he said.

BUCHSHON VOTES AGAINST 'JOB CRUSHING' BILL: U.S. Rep. Larry Bucshon, M.D. (IN-08) released the following statement after voting against the Raising Unemployment for Americans Workers Act (H.R. 582), legislation put forth by House Democrats that mandates a 107-percent increase of the minimum wage that could eliminate 3.7 millions jobs (Howey Politics Indiana): "Thanks to the conservative, pro-growth economic agenda put forth by the Trump Administration and House Republicans in Congress for two years, the American prosperity economy is flourishing. After nearly a decade of stagnation, family incomes and job opportunities are finally rising once again. In the past few months, the unemployment rate has hit near record lows, wages have increased -- particularly for lower-income workers, and there are more job openings than there are unemployed workers.

WALORSKI VOTES AGAINST 'CADILLAC TAX': U.S. Rep. Jackie Walorski (R-Ind.) on Wednesday voted to repeal the "Cadillac tax" and sought a House vote on bipartisan bills to repeal the medical device tax and delay the health insurance tax (Howey Politics Indiana). "Ending the Cadillac tax will provide important relief to both employers and employees, but this bill doesn't include repealing other burdensome taxes like the medical device tax and the health insurance tax," Congresswoman Walorski said. "It is critical that we repeal all three of these burdensome taxes before they go back into effect. Doing so will help lower premiums, improve access to care, and boost American manufacturing jobs."

YOUNG TO BE WITH USS INDIANAPOLIS SURVIVORS TODAY: U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R-Ind.) will make a series of stops in Central Indiana. He will speak with USS Indianapolis Survivors about the Congressional Medal that will soon be presented to the group; deliver remarks at the Indiana Black Expo Corporate Luncheon, and hold a small business roundtable in Zionsville.

SEN. PAUL SLAMS JON STEWART: Jon Stewart made himself part of the political "B.S." when he attacked two Republican lawmakers over their delay of the 9/11 victim compensation reauthorization bill, according to Sen. Rand Paul, R-Ky (Fox News). The name-calling of Paul and Sen. Mike Lee, R-Utah, is not a good look for the comedian and activist, the Bluegrass State lawmaker claimed Thursday on "Your World." "I know Jon Stewart, and Jon Stewart is sometimes funny and sometimes informed," he said. "In this case, he's neither funny nor informed. I've spent my entire Senate career putting forward 'pay-fors' for any time spending is expanded. I put forward a pay-for for the border funding bill."

REP. OMAR WELCOMED HOME BY CROWD AT AIRPORT: U.S. Rep. Ilhan Omar was engulfed in a crowd of cheering supporters Thursday at the Minneapolis-St. Paul International Airport, a loud counterpoint to a turbulent week in Congress where she came under a sustained rhetorical assault from President Donald Trump and his supporters (Minneapolis Star Tribune). More than 100 people filled the baggage claim area with songs, signs and cheers of "Welcome home, Ilhan," providing a stark contrast to chants of "Send her back!" that reverberated through a Trump rally in North Carolina just a day before. In brief remarks, a defiant Omar vowed to "continue to be a nightmare to this president, because his policies are a nightmare to us." "We are not deterred, we are not frightened, we are ready. We are in the ring," Omar said before departing for a town hall in south Minneapolis. "We are in the people's house, and we are going to continue to fight it until we have the America we know we all deserve."

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB STUMPS IN EVANSVILLE - Hot off the heels of announcing his bid for reelection, Indiana Governor Eric Holcomb made a stop in Evansville Thursday to meet with supporters and protesters (WFIE-TV). The governor touched on a number of topics including putting Hoosiers to work, finishing the I-69 project, and helping inmates earn careers with skills they learned while incarcerated. "This is a small world," Holcomb said. "We are on a roll right now and our momentum just continues to accelerate." "We're on the right course, we're moving in the right direction, the trajectory is going up and I want to see more people recognize that American Dream right here in Indiana, and we're doing it the Indiana way," Holcomb said. It wasn't all smiles though, the governor took quite a bit of time to speak with protesters who showed up to voice concerns about funding for schools and teachers.

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB RALLIES IN TERRE HAUTE - Five days after announcing his 2020 re-election bid, Gov. Eric Holcomb on Thursday hit Terre Haute on a daylong campaign kickoff swing. About 60 Republican faithful turned out for lunchtime appearance by the governor at Rick's Smokehouse, where Holcomb proclaimed Terre Haute a "crown jewel" for Indiana (Terre Haute Tribune-Star). "We're really are a model state. We're on a roll — a lot of momentum (and) you're feeling it right here in Vigo County as much as anyone else is," he said. Holcomb told reporters Thursday his campaign is designed for Hoosiers "to inform us" what they'd like to see on the state's agenda. "This is where we get our marching orders, so to speak," he said.

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB SCHEDULE - Below find Gov. Eric J. Holcomb's public schedule for July 19, 2019, 11 a.m., Indiana Black Expo Corporate Luncheon, Gov. Holcomb, Sen. Todd Young, Rep. André Carson, Indianapolis Mayor Joe Hogsett, Gregory Wilson, Executive Director, Indiana Civil Rights Commission, Tanya Bell, President and CEO, Indiana Black Expo, Inc., Tamika Catchings, Vice President of Basketball Operations, Indiana Fever, Indiana Convention Center. Halls D and E.

STATEHOUSE: HILL ATTORNEYS DOWNPLAY GROPING - Lawyers for Indiana's attorney general are downplaying allegations he drunkenly groped four women during a party, arguing that the claims against him represent common behavior even if they are true (Davies, AP). They made their arguments in court documents submitted on behalf of Republican state Attorney General Curtis Hill, calling for a judge to throw out the federal lawsuit the women filed against him last month alleging sexual harassment and defamation by Hill.

BMV: 8,000 SHORTED ON REFUNDS - More than 8,000 motorists will pay a few bucks less next time they renew their driver's license or vehicle registration at the Indiana Bureau of Motor Vehicles (Carden, NWI Times). The agency announced Wednesday that a recent audit of $30.3 million in past BMV overcharges found some motorists did not receive a full refund for their payments between 2002 and 2006 that exceeded the fees set by state law. According to the BMV, the average refund underpayment was $3.36, and a total of $27,000 in credits already have been posted to the BMV accounts of the 8,099 motorists whose refunds initially were shorted. Affected BMV customers also have been notified by mail or email about the refund and told how to request a check if they no longer live in Indiana. "The BMV is committed to authenticity in its daily processes. Internal audit is a key part of our process to proactively identify issues, hold ourselves accountable and improve when necessary," said BMV Commissioner Peter Lacy.

UTILITIES: DUKE FINED FOR COAL ASH SPILL - The federal, North Carolina and Virginia governments asked a court Thursday to declare the country's largest electricity company liable for environmental damage from a leak five years ago that left miles of a river shared by the two states coated in hazardous coal ash (AP). Government lawyers sought to have Charlotte-based Duke Energy declared responsible for harming fish, birds, amphibians and the Dan River bottom. Hazardous substances like arsenic and selenium poured into the river at levels high enough to harm aquatic life, according to a complaint filed in the North Carolina federal court district near the site of the 2014 disaster. The leak of waste Duke Energy stored after burning coal for power coated about 70 miles (110 kilometers) of the river from a power plant near Eden, renewing national attention on the risks posed by similar storage pits across the country. Duke Energy pleaded guilty to federal environmental crimes in 2015 and agreed to pay $102 million. The company said three years of testing through 2017 found no long-term effects to the river's environment.

MEDICAID: PERU WOMAN ARRESTED FOR FRAUD - State investigators say a 51-year-old Peru woman, who ran a medical transportation business, engaged in a Medicaid scheme that resulted in over $11,000 in extra payments to the company (Kokomo Tribune). Patricia Schaaf, who owned Blue Sky Transportation, was arrested last week on a warrant for 10 felony charges of Medicaid fraud and one count of money laundering. The company provided transportation to non-emergency medical appointments and was qualified to receive Medicaid payments for the service. State investigators with the Indiana Office of Attorney General Medicaid Fraud Control Unit initiated an investigation into Schaaf in 2014 after a patient reported the company was endangering her life and others.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP TO APPOINT EUGENE SCALIA TO LABOR - President Donald Trump plans to nominate Eugene Scalia, son of the late Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia, to be the next Labor secretary (Politico). The president announced the decision on Twitter after POLITICO first reported his plans earlier Thursday. "Gene has led a life of great success in the legal and labor field and is highly respected not only as a lawyer, but as a lawyer with great experience working with labor and everyone else," Trump wrote. The younger Scalia, a partner at the international law firm Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, met with Trump Thursday and White House officials had been calling Senate offices to assess whether Scalia is confirmable, according to a person briefed on the talks.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP TO SHUT DOWN REFUGEE ADMISSIONS - The Trump administration is considering a virtual shutdown of refugee admissions next year — cutting the number to nearly zero — according to three people familiar with the plan (Politico). During a key meeting of security officials on refugee admissions last week, a U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services representative who is closely aligned with White House immigration adviser Stephen Miller suggested setting a cap at zero, the people said. Homeland Security Department officials at the meeting later floated making the level anywhere from 3,000 to 10,000, according to one of the people. The proposal for a near-shutdown of the refugee program is alarming officials at the Department of Defense, who don't want to see a halt in admissions of Iraqis who risked their lives assisting U.S. forces in that country. The possible move comes after the Trump administration cut refugee admissions by a third this year, to 30,000.

WHITE HOUSE: PENCE PRESSES CHINA ON UIGHURS - The U.S. is ratcheting up pressure on the Chinese government regarding human rights, hoping to hit Beijing where it hurts as bilateral tensions ripple beyond trade. But China steadfastly maintains that there is no religious persecution within its borders (Nikkei Asian Review). America has "spoken out against religious persecution in the People's Republic of China, and we do so again today," Vice President Mike Pence said Thursday at the State Department's Ministerial to Advance Religious Freedom event in Washington. "In Xinjiang, the Communist Party has imprisoned more than a million Chinese Muslims, including Uighurs, in internment camps, where they endure around-the-clock brainwashing," Pence said. The vice president also called out China's "oppression" of Tibetan Buddhists and its "persecution" of the rapidly growing ranks of Christians.

WHITE HOUSE: MORE REPORTS THAT COATS IS ON WAY OUT - President Donald Trump is considering replacing Director of National Intelligence Dan Coats with former CIA analyst Fred Fleitz, a new report claims (NewsMax). The Washington Times reported Thursday that Trump soured on Coats in February after his comments about North Korea in front of the Senate Intelligence Committee. In May, as the Times noted, Trump signed an executive order that allows the Department of Justice to investigate the intelligence community for alleged spying of Trump's 2016 presidential campaign. After it was recently reported that Fleitz could succeed Coats and lead the nation's intelligence efforts, people within that bubble were shocked, the Times reported.

WHITE HOUSE: UNSEALED COHEN DOCS REVEAL TRUMP COMMUNICATIONS - Newly unsealed court documents show that then-candidate Donald Trump communicated repeatedly with his lawyer Michael Cohen amid the election year scramble to keep quiet allegations that Trump previously had an affair with an adult-film actress (Washington Post). The documents were released Thursday at the direction of a federal judge in New York, who disclosed a day before that an investigation into suspected campaign finance violations had ended. Trump and those close to him long said they were unaware that Cohen had bought the women's silence, but phone calls and text messages documented by the FBI suggest they were closely involved. The new details about the investigation are unlikely to have legal consequences for the president or those close to him because the hush-money investigation has concluded. However, the documents could further erode their credibility.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SCHEDULE - President Trump and first lady Melania Trump will participate in a photo to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the Apollo 11 moon landing at 11:45 a.m. in the Oval Office. Trump will leave the White House en route to Bedminster, N.J. He will participate in a roundtable with supporters at 5:30 p.m. followed by a fundraiser at 6 p.m.

PENTAGON: U.S. SHOOTS DOWN IRANIAN DRONE - A U.S. warship on Thursday destroyed an Iranian drone in the Strait of Hormuz after it threatened the ship, President Donald Trump said. The incident marked a new escalation of tensions between the countries less than one month after Iran downed an American drone and Trump came close to retaliating with a military strike (AP). In remarks at the White House, Trump blamed Iran for a "provocative and hostile" action and said the U.S. responded in self-defense. He said the Navy's USS Boxer, an amphibious assault ship, took defensive action after the Iranian aircraft closed to within 1,000 yards of the ship and ignored multiple calls to stand down. "The United States reserves the right to defend our personnel, facilities and interests and calls upon all nations to condemn Iran's attempts to disrupt freedom of navigation and global commerce," Trump said.

TREASURY: MNUCHIN SAYS DEBT DEAL NEAR - Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said Thursday that negotiators have reached an agreement on the core elements of a deal to increase the government's borrowing cap and set a $1.3 trillion overall level for the agency budgets that Congress passes each year (CBS News). He told CNBC's "Squawk Box" that talks with House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., have settled on a debt limit increase that would cover two years. There was agreement also on spending levels, but he did not go into detail. Still to be resolved are offsetting spending cuts to help finance the deal and other "structural issues," Mnuchin said. The Trump administration is pressing for up to $150 billion in such cuts, well above a figure that would be easy to quickly negotiate.

Power player: Tara Westover (re-run). CBS "Face The Nation": Sen. Cory Booker (D-N.J.), House Intelligence Chairman Adam Schiff (D-Calif.), House Republican Conference Chairwoman Liz Cheney (R-Wyo.). Panel: Rachael Bade, Lanhee Chen, Jamelle Bouie and Paula Reid. Anthony Salvanto and Ed O'Keefe will discuss the latest CBS poll. CNN "State Of The Union": Sen. Cory Booker (D-N.J.). Panel: S.E. MEDIA: GANNETT, GATEHOUSE MERGER NEAR - USA Today publisher Gannett Co. is nearing a deal to combine with rival GateHouse Media, a move that would join the nation's two largest newspaper groups by circulation (Wall Street Journal). The companies are discussing a cash-and-stock deal in which GateHouse or its parent would likely buy Gannett and GateHouse Chairman and Chief Executive Mike Reed would assume the same roles at the enlarged entity, according to people familiar with the matter. It couldn't be learned what the price of the deal might be. Gannett shares closed at $7.90 on Thursday. They rose nearly 8% after hours after The Wall Street Journal reported that a deal with GateHouse may be close.

MEDIA: PITTSBURGH POST-GAZETTE CUTS TO 3 DAYS - The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette is cutting its print edition to just three days per week as of Sept. 30.

CITIES: INDICTED MUNCIE ADMINISTRATOR PLACED ON LEAVE - The Muncie Sanitary District offices in City Hall were back at work Wednesday buzzing with office workers and phone calls throughout the day after abruptly closing Tuesday due to an FBI raid (Muncie Star Press). The FBI raids and corresponding indictment led to the arrest of Debra "Nikki" Grigsby, 44, the Muncie Sanitary District's administrator since 2013. Also arrested was Tony Franklin, 60, owner of Franklin Building and Design LLC. Tom Malapit, one of MSD's attorneys, said that Grigsby had been placed on unpaid administration leave following the arrest and indictment. Malapit said that Board of Sanitary Commissioners president William "Bill" Smith was handling Grigsby's responsibilities as administrator.

CITIES: MICHIGAN CITY COUNCIL KILLS PLATE SCANNER PROPOSAL - An ordinance to allow the Michigan City Police Department to purchase license plate reader technology, including facial recognition capability, was killed Tuesday after several concerned citizens spoke against it during a public hearing (Michigan City News-Dispatch). Only one of the 18 people who spoke at the City Council meeting was in favor of the scanners, while a few others wanted more information. But the majority explicitly opposed the purchase of the cameras, which they characterized as "a waste of money," "lazy policing," "an invasion of privacy," "dangerous surveillance" and "an infringement on the Fourth Amendment." Many raised concerns that the technology would be used to target specific people and neighborhoods, and to profile and harass people of color.

CITIES: GOSHEN TO FORM ENVIRONMENTAL DEPARTMENT - A new Environmental Department is currently in the works for Goshen city government (Kline, Goshen News). During their meeting Tuesday evening, Goshen City Council members were informed by Mayor Jeremy Stutsman of his intention to create the new environmental department. The announcement was made during a brief update by Stutsman on the status of budgetary discussions currently taking place among the city's department heads in the lead-up to passage of the city's 2020 budget later this year. "Along with this process, there are a couple things that I've talked to the council about, and I'll be bringing to you shortly now that we're really starting to get into this," Stutsman said of the ongoing budget discussions. "I've mentioned that I'd like to create an environmental department. We're just now really being able to crack down on the language, the missions, the statement of what this department does. We're getting all that fine-tuned. And I want to be clear, we're going to try to get this to the council very soon. My intent is to get it to you on the council agenda."

COUNTIES: ALLEN COUNCIL DELAYS INNSKEEPER VOTE - In a 4-3 vote, the Allen County Council today tabled a proposal to raise the county's innkeeper's tax from 7% to 8% (Gong, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). The council plans to again consider the tax increase during its August meeting. The reason for the delay is so council members can review the testimony presented at this morning's meeting. Visit Fort Wayne currently receives 2% of the innkeepers tax, with the rest going to the Grand Wayne Center. The proposed increase is supported by local entities including the Northeast Indiana Regional Partnership, Greater Fort Wayne Inc., the Allen County Commissioners, the city of Fort Wayne, the Northeast Indiana Hospitality Association and others, Visit Fort Wayne Board Member Gary Shearer said. Several council members appeared opposed to the tax increase Thursday. "Fort Wayne/Allen County is a great place to visit and we should do all we can to do that, except raise taxes," Councilman Ken Fries said.

INDIANA EDUCATION INSIGHT

License test nightmare over?

Teachers-to-be applaud selection of new old assessment

The departments of education and administration issued a request for proposals in October 2018 for a new teacher licensing exam. They asked vendors to submit proposals for two options: a custom-built test aligned to Indiana's educator standards and a nationally available test already in use in other states.

After receiving and evaluating responses, two vendors were recommended – one per option – pending a final policy decision on just how to proceed. Pearson Evaluation Systems was selected for the customized option, and Educational Testing Services (ETS) was identified as the best choice for an off-the-shelf product.

With the results of the procurement in hand, the General Assembly weighed in with language in HEA 1002-2019 that selected the national testing program, and the State Board of Education voted at its July business meeting to authorize the Indiana Department of Education to contract with Educational Testing Services (ETS) to bring back Praxis.

Indiana teacher candidates will have access to free interactive practice tests for all Praxis test titles . . . and candidates who do not pass on their first attempt and meet specific criteria will be entitled to a free re-take.

Indiana will remain under contract with the current testing vendor, Pearson, and will continue to administer Pearson's CORE tests until August 31, 2021. Praxis, which served as the state's teacher licensing exam prior to the implementation of Pearson's CORE tests in February 2014, will launch on September 1, 2021.

Praxis is the largest teacher licensure testing program in the country, with almost 600,000 tests administered annually.

Adopting the national system of tests allows Indiana to better compare teacher candidate performance and passing rates with other states while also enhancing the portability of educator licenses between Indiana and the 40 other states and U.S. territories that use Praxis.

The exam includes more than 90 computer-delivered titles covering a range of content areas . . . but ETS will need to augment the national program by designing and building 14 new exams to cover unique Indiana licensure areas. The new tests will be ready by the September 1, 2021 launch date. ETS has produced cross-walks for all Praxis titles needed for Indiana licensure and has confirmed that "there is substantial alignment to Indiana standards."

ETS currently maintains 14 certified online testing centers in Indiana that could deliver the Praxis assessments tomorrow and also has 77 testing locations in the surrounding states. ETS will expand its in-state testing center network to approximately 45 locations prior to launch.

The non-profit vendor plans to subcontract with Cabello Associates, Inc., to identify and disseminate best practices in attracting, admitting, supporting, and graduating teachers of color.

Many of the CORE assessments had been plagued by low pass rates. The pass rate of first-time test takers on middle school mathematics was 37% in 2017-2018 and only 12% in middle school science. For the reading component, first-time pass rates were just 33% in 2016-2017 and 43% in 2017-2018.

DUAB reviews start

Details private unless district on watch list

The Distressed Unit Appeal Board (DUAB) identifies the first cohort of school corporations that may be ordered to implement a corrective action plan or be placed on a fiscal watch list.

The top two indicators in the selection of the school corporations are changes in ADM and fund balance as a percentage of expenditures.

The selected school corporations will be visited for an in-depth assessment beginning this month by DUAB Executive Director Courtney Schaafsma. "I want to be there and meet with these school officials to get a good feel of what is going on at their school," she says.

"I would bring results of the assessments back to DUAB, and DUAB will then determine whether a corrective action plan is necessary," she elaborates. There is no time frame on the corrective action plan process. "The statute simply calls for us to work with the school corporations for as long as it takes," says Schaafsma.

If a school corporation is asked to do a corrective action plan but decides not to, or a school corporation refuses to implement a corrective action plan as designed, then the district can be formally placed on a watch list, at which point everything up to that date becomes publicly available.

IN Elementary & Secondary Ed

IN General . . .

- Third-graders who demonstrate reading skills on ILEARN could skip IREAD, under a plan being formulated by the Indiana Department of Education. Historically, about 15% of students do not pass the IREAD exam. The State Board of Education voted in July to initiate the rulemaking process to amend the Reading Plan regulations to allow the change to take effect.

- The Indiana Department of Education expects to issue a Request for Proposals for a Nationally Recognized College Entrance Exam before the end of the year. A draft RFP will be submitted to the State Board of Education for review at the October business meeting.

- No one will be surprised if rescore requests plummet to an all-time low this year. Unlike in the past, parents won't receive student scores until after the retest window closes, unless they're willing to make a special trip to their child's school to view their child's responses and scoring rubrics on a secure computer after signing a non-disclosure agreement. As if that's not enough of a deterrent . . . parents will also have to take into consideration a new policy in effect for the first time providing that rescoring may result in an increased or decreased score. The ILEARN rescore request window runs from July 15 - 31.

- ILEARN cut scores will be presented to the State Board of Education for approval at a special meeting on July 25. Results would be available for parents to access through an online portal beginning August 15.

- Corporate sponsorship opportunities are available for almost every aspect of the South Bend Community School Corporation, reports the South Bend Tribune. "Naming rights opportunities at Riley High School, for example, include the robotics lab, radio and television studio, gymnasium, track, swimming pool, soccer field, and football field, along with career and technical education programs."

- Middlebury Community Schools broke ground July 16 on an $8.3 million athletics complex at Northridge High School featuring a 4,000-seat football stadium, baseball stadium, and softball stadium, all of which will be fitted with field turf and team and gameday facilities.

□ The new football stadium will be named Interra Field after Interra Credit Union agreed to a five-year, $250,000 naming rights deal. The district is seeking additional athletic sponsorships from local and regional businesses.

- Teachers' Treasures is opening a second store in Indianapolis where teachers can visit to obtain free school supplies. The new site is at Northwest Middle School - on the opposite side of town from the main store located in Woodruff Place. The organization estimates that 1,000-2,400 teachers will take advantage of the resources at the satellite location during its first year, which equates to 25,000-60,000 students. Like the main store, the satellite location will rely on volunteer efforts to operate.

□ Teachers from schools with 60% or more free or reduced lunch rates are able to shop the shelves. Since opening in 2000, more than $60 million in supplies, technology, and resources have gone into area classrooms (the average trip is worth $400 in supplies, according to the non-profit).

- With the Office of the Attorney General issuing an advisory opinion on questions of liability, the firm Bus Safety Solutions is seeking to recruit Indiana school districts to participate in a pilot program for its Extended Stop Arm school bus safety product. According to the company, one of the most positive aspects of Extended Stop Arms is that they force school bus drivers to make a more deliberative stop and start. Drivers won't be able to take off from a stop with their arm still half-way out or swing their arm out while still rolling up to the stop. The Extended Stop Arm is available in two lengths: 4.5 feet or 6.5 feet (compared to one foot for regular stop arms). The product provides a physical barrier to stop vehicles from passing stopped school buses. The shorter version can be used on routes with one lane. The extended arm has a break-away feature such that if struck at a significant speed will shear the bolt connections and the electrical connection. If opened into another object, it will automatically retract and reset after 20 seconds. A demonstration conducted in Virginia in 2017 found they reduced school bus safety violations by 50 percent.

- "The end could be near for Gary's historic Roosevelt school" is the headline of an article in the Gary Post-Tribune after MGT Consulting Executive Vice President Eric Parrish told those gathered at a public forum that $10 million in repairs are needed to save Roosevelt College and Career Academy, which has been victimized by years of neglect owing to the financial crisis in the Gary Community School Corporation. A former public high school, Roosevelt is currently operated by EdisonLearning, Inc. pursuant to a five-year innovation school network agreement that former superintendent Cheryl Pruitt entered into just before the district was taken over by the State in August 2017.

□ Since 2011, EdisonLearning says that it has invested $1.5 million in repairs and pumped in about $4 million in grants for electrical and security systems. The Gary schools annually collect $2.5 million in property tax revenue to maintain and repair its 12 occupied school buildings.

□ Audience members left the forum dejected, reported Carole Carlson of the Post-Tribune. One woman who graduated from the school in 1984 said the "the education of our kids" is "a bigger issue" than whether Roosevelt ever reopens (Roosevelt has been closed since February and its students have been relocated to the Gary Career Center). Others asked whether the school district would allow alumni to purchase Roosevelt or whether the state would pay for construction of a brand new facility.

IN Administration . . .

- The Board of Trustees of the Oregon-Davis School Corporation narrowly defeated a proposal to have the superintendent absorb the responsibilities of the junior/senior high school principal. The superintendent had offered to take on the additional duties without a pay increase in order to save $110,000. Teachers in the O-D schools have not received a raise in 10 years.

□ The school board met again a week later and approved the plan but signaled that it expected this to be just a one-year arrangement.

● An English cocker spaniel skilled at sniffing out narcotics will patrol Warsaw Community High School during the upcoming school year as a full-time K-9 school resource officer.

IN Budgets & Finance . . .

● The fiscal strain and facilities challenges facing the South Dearborn Community School Corporation threaten to divide the community, as throngs of residents vow to fight for the preservation of the elementary schools in Dillsboro and Moores Hill. The divisions were on display at a school board meeting this month as board members battled over whether to close one or more elementary schools or keep the elementary schools open but close the middle school. Mike Perleberg of Eagle Country 99.3-FM in Lawrenceburg reports, "Discussions are continuing, but by the end of the meeting it appeared the school board could be moving toward a November or May ballot referendum to increase property taxes in the school district. The amount could range from $600,000 up to $2 million each year for eight years to help the corporation balance its budget. Essentially, the taxpayers may be asked to put their money where their mouth is. If a tax increase does not pass, South Dearborn could have no choice but to close one or more schools in order to stay out of the red. But board members and some citizens who spoke Monday are concerned how a referendum might divide the community. Many feel that was done by a 2017 petition and remonstrance against a failed tax increase to fund South Dearborn High School improvements – those included an artificial turf multi-purpose field and an activity building. 'I don't think anybody up here ran to close a school, but we have to make the tough decisions,' stated member Brett Fehrman, who advocated for pursuing a referendum. 'Give people the opportunity to subsidize and keep things open for a period of time.' However, it may be too late to place a referendum on the November ballot, according to school corporation business manager Shawn Spindler, citing his discussion with the bonding company the school has used. Advertising, a vote, and other steps toward a ballot referendum must be completed before August 1 in order to get it on the November ballot. Waiting until May for a referendum would mean South Dearborn would start its next budget year with the deficit, but superintendent (Eric) Lows said there could be areas to cut and make it work."

● The Town of Brownstown agrees to give the Brownstown Central Community School Corporation two seats at the table on the redevelopment commission established to oversee the creation and maintenance of a Tax Increment Financing district. The two school district representatives will be joined on the redevelopment commission by the five town council members.

● The City of Columbus redevelopment commission agrees to provide $750,000 in Tax Increment Financing revenue to the Bartholomew Consolidated School Corporation to support STEM initiatives, the iGrad program for students at risk of dropping out, and transition planning for students with special needs.

● Recent and upcoming bond issues: July 16 - Western School Corporation General Obligation Bonds, Series 2019, $2,975,000, Robert W. Baird & Company, Inc. as lead manager . . . July 17 - Alexandria Community School Corporation First Mortgage Bonds, Series 2019, $10,385,000, Baker Tilly Municipal Advisors as lead manager . . . July 18 - Indianapolis Public Schools Multi-School Building Corporation First Mortgage Bonds, Series 2019, $27,000,000, Baker Tilly Municipal Advisors as lead manager . . .

IN Contracts & Compensation . . .

● The seven-person Next Level Teacher Compensation Commission that Governor Eric Holcomb (R) appointed in February schedules public input sessions for August 19 in Indianapolis, August 24 in Evansville, and August 27 in Elkhart. The Commission and its seven-member advisory council have been meeting periodically in private to develop recommendations for the Governor and General Assembly prior to the 2021 legislative session.

□ For the 2017-2018 school year, approximately 90% of Indiana's public school teachers received a base salary increase. The average base salary increase was $1,453. In addition, about 38% of teachers received a one-time stipend that averaged $1,147. Indiana schools spent $94 million on teacher base salary increases in 2017-2018 and $15 million on one-time stipends.

□ Between 2015 and 2018, the average amount paid by Indiana school districts for health insurance coverage for a teacher on a single plan increased by 16%, while the average amount paid by districts per enrollee on a family plan rose by 17%, according to the Indiana Education Employment Relations Board.

● The Carmel Clay Schools tempts its elementary school teachers with an opportunity to earn an additional $18,000 a year on top of their teaching salary – by becoming a school bus driver. About half-a-dozen elementary teachers in the CCS are training for a CDL license so they can pull double-duty during the upcoming school year as bus drivers, reports the Indy Star. Like many districts, CCS has been struggling to cope with a bus driver shortage. Officials mentioned to teachers that driving a bus for the corporation is likely to be more convenient than other second jobs that might be available.

● Indianapolis Public Schools Superintendent Aleesia Johnson is set to earn a base salary of $238,000 in her first year, with the benefit package pushing her total compensation to $301,000.

□ Superintendent Johnson's contract stipulates that her pay will increase annually by the same percentage as the average increase received by teachers.

● The Northeast Dubois County School Corporation approves a resolution confirming that the $46,000 in savings realized in the 2019-2020 school year from the reduction in the district's contribution rate to the Teachers' Retirement Fund will go back to teacher salaries.

● The Angola Classroom Teachers Association lodges an unfair labor practice complaint with the Indiana Education Employment Relations Board against the Metropolitan School District of Steuben County. ACTA has requested monetary damages of $5,000 each for two alleged violations in 2018 and 2019.

IN Charter Schools . . .

● The 2019 cohort of The Mind Trust Innovation School Fellows propose to design and launch three new elementary schools in Indianapolis.

● Indiana Charter School Board Executive Director James Betley tells Dan Carden of the Times of Northwest Indiana that the Steel City Academy in Gary is heading in the right direction after a few rocky financial years. The charter school entered into a payment plan for more than $240,000 owed to government agencies for payroll taxes withheld from employee paychecks but not remitted as required. Steel City is focused on growing student enrollment to approximately 600 from 443, reports Carden.

IN Non-Public Schools . . .

● Joshua Payne-Elliott, the teacher terminated by Cathedral High School in Indianapolis because of his same-sex marriage (to a teacher at Brebeuf Jesuit Preparatory School that cost that school its Catholic status), files a lawsuit against the Archdiocese of Indianapolis alleging discrimination.

□ The Archdiocese had warned Cathedral that the school would forfeit its Catholic identity if it continued to employ Payne-Elliott, who had announced his same sex marriage on social media in 2017. The Archdiocese said in a statement, "This issue is not about sexual orientation; rather, it is about our expectation that all personnel inside a Catholic school - who are ministers of the faith - abide by all Church teachings, including the nature of marriage." But Kathleen DeLaney, attorney for Payne-Elliott (and the daughter of Rep. Ed DeLaney (D) of Indianapolis) argues that he's not a "minister" since he taught language and social studies, and was not involved in religious education.

IN Programs & Curriculum . . .

● The Madison County Board of Commissioners is considering a request to provide $1 million in funding for a robotics training program that would be located at the Hinds Career Center in Elwood.

● North Central Health Services has awarded more than $3.8 million in Resilient Youth Initiative implementation grants to 19 school corporations in Indiana. The grants will support schools in seven counties launching evidenced-based youth resiliency programs.

IN Policy . . .

- The Anderson Community School Corporation enacts a new attendance policy requiring high school students to be present for 90% of each grading period in order to be eligible to attend school functions outside of school hours.

- A computer simulation of the 1999 school shooting at Columbine High School created by the Purdue University Homeland Security Institute found that running away from the shooter was the best option for survival, reports WIBC 93.1-FM in Indianapolis. The Institute “plans further research on how much distance from a gunman tips the balance toward being able to run. The Columbine simulation found running was the clear choice at more than 20 feet away, while if you’re within arm’s length, the best option may be to fight,” according to the report.

- The Perry Township Schools contracts with ParentSquare for mass notification and urgent alerts, teacher and classroom communication, and newsletter templates. The system replaces its previous contract with School Messenger/Skylert.

- The Manchester Community Schools abolishes the practice of serving peanut butter and jelly sandwiches and milk to elementary school students with a deficit in their lunch account, reports the Wabash Plain Dealer. Students without lunch funds had received an alternate lunch ticket. “There used to be little blue tickets, and the kids had to do the walk of shame to come down and get it,” the elementary school principal told the Paxton Media Group publication.

IN Referenda . . .

- The Carmel Clay Schools receives approval from the Board of School Trustees to ask voters to approve a school safety referendum of 5¢ per $100 of property value, generating an estimated $5 million per year. Funding would support placement of a highly trained school resource officer in each elementary school, contracting out in-school mental health counseling, and programs for school social workers.

- The Board of School Trustees of the Vigo County School Corporation approve a referendum of $0.1622 per $100 of assessed valuation to raise approximately $7 million annually to fund the safe transportation of students, safe and secure schools, class size reductions, and to attract and retain teachers and staff.

- The Hamilton Community Schools will ask for a property tax increase of 44¢ per $100 of property value on election day in November – the same amount that voters approved at a 2012 referendum. Last year, residents defeated a referendum on a 71-cent tax increase. The original 44¢ referendum expires at the end of 2019, and if it’s not extended, the district may not make it. Enrollment has dwindled from 659 students in 2005-2006 to 291 students in 2018-2019.

IN Construction & Facilities . . .

- After an internal Title IX investigation concluded that female athletes “felt neither respected nor supported in the district,” the M.S.D. of Martinsville Board of School Trustees commits $400,000 to upgrading the girls’ sports facilities, according to the Martinsville Times-Reporter. The first project on tap is construction of a locker room for the softball team.

- The Westfield Washington Schools expects the first round of bids for the construction of a new natatorium to come before the school board for approval at its August meeting. WWS will finance the project through the issuance of $15 million in General Obligation bonds.

- The M.S.D. of Warren Township plans to award the first of two bid packages for additions and renovations to Lowell Elementary School on August 21, with construction anticipated to commence September 9.

- The Goshen Community Schools receives school board approval to issue $5.1 million in General Obligation bonds to fix HVAC systems and install LED lighting.

- The bill for building improvements in the Sunman-Dearborn Community School Corporation exceeds $40 million, according to estimates from Lancer + Beebe. That includes projects priced at approximately $5 million per elementary school, $10 million at the middle school, and between $10 million and $20 million at the high school. Given the retirement schedule for the existing debt, up to about $42 million in improvements could be accomplished without increasing the property tax rate above its current level. Public presentations on the scope of the building project are scheduled for August 5 and 6, as the district prepares for a possible referendum.

- The Northwestern Consolidated School District of Shelby County unanimously approves spending $3 million to expand the Triton Central High School fieldhouse and make parking improvements. “That thing was built to be a practice facility when we built it,” explains Superintendent Chris Hoke, according to the Shelbyville News. “It does an incredibly good job at fulfilling that purpose. None of us could, with any real honesty, say we ever anticipated it would become a revenue center for us, that it would host 35-40 events a year, that it would (generate) revenue somewhere in the ballpark of $40,000, that it would be the single best thing we could have for marketing and branding for our school.”

- The Southwestern Consolidated School District of Shelby County approves bonding for $5.225 million to construct a new auxiliary fieldhouse.

- The Bartholomew Consolidated School Corporation approves spending $3.8 million to renovate the auditorium at Columbus East High School and bring it up to par with Columbus North.

- The Southern Wells Community Schools plans to issue bonds for pay for updates to the HVAC system at the elementary school ($2 million), re-roofing the elementary ($950,000), a 3,000 square foot expansion for athletics concessions and restrooms ($650,000), and doubling the size of the kitchen freezer and cooler ($250,000).

□ The total cost comes in just under the threshold for a petition/remonstrance race. Assuming school board approvals are obtained in August and September, bonds will be sold in October.

- The Northeast Dubois County School Corporation hurdles a required public hearing on $4.69 million in improvements to the high school. Bids are scheduled to go out in September.

- The North Judson-San Pierre School Corporation is considering a series of upgrades to North Judson-San Pierre Elementary School over a two-year period proposed by the architectural firm Fanning Howey. According to WKVI K99.3-FM in Knox, “potential improvements may include upgrades to the windows, roof, and exterior doors, along with flashing and tuck-pointing work. Inside the elementary school, the architects noted that the gym, cafeteria, and some of the classrooms are too small, and some of the rooms need to be repurposed. They also recommended renovating the restrooms, replacing the gym bleachers, and upgrading plumbing, electrical, and mechanical systems. Flooring, walls, and ceilings may get improvements, as well.” Fanning Howey also suggested improvements to the bus garage and equipment maintenance area.

□ Look for details and cost estimates to be discussed during the school board’s August meeting, with the objective being “to do the work without raising the school district’s property taxes.”

IN Government . . .

- Grassroots supporters of tougher anti-bullying laws are floating a parent accountability proposal for consideration during the 2020 legislative session that would authorize fines for parents of repeat bullies, reports Kara Kenney of WRTV-TV rtv6 in Indianapolis.

□ Kenney reports, “Angie Stagge, a Fairland mother who helped pass the 2013 law, said the proposal would fine parents between $100 to $500 after the bully’s 3rd offense – after the student had been suspended, counseled and performed community service.” The TV station reports that other ideas on the table include “requiring classes for students on the impact of social media and suicide prevention, a new cyberbullying law that would carry time behind bars for violators, as well as requiring parents to sign their school’s anti-bullying policy when registering their child for school.”

● The State Board of Education took action in July against Indiana Virtual School and Indiana Virtual Pathways Academy and their authorizer Daleville Community Schools in response to State Board of Accounts audit findings showing that the charter schools’ ADM count was inflated by at least 50% for three years. SBOE voted to direct the Indiana Department of Education to engage in the recovery of overpaid funds that were distributed to the charter schools and to the Daleville Community Schools. Recovery will be accomplished in part by withholding all future state funding payments until an estimated $47 million in excess state funding has been recouped. SBOE further recommended that IDOE appoint a prosecutor to pursue additional clawback. The Attorney General’s Office, after receiving a charge report from the State Board of Accounts, may also file suit against the appropriate school official(s) to recover funds. Pursuant to a closure agreement the charters entered into with Daleville on June 19, Indiana Virtual will close before the 2019-2020 school year and Indiana Virtual Pathways Academy will close after the 2019-2020 school year. “Is this getting into the realm of criminal?” SBOE’s David Freitas asked State Examiner Paul Joyce, who replied, “I would say yes.”

□ Daleville, represented by attorneys from Lewis & Kappes, P.C., asserts that the State cannot recovery any part of the authorizer fee payments that the charter schools made to Daleville. But even if the State does have the statutory authority to recover the authorizer fee payments, it should not do so because Daleville accepted the fee payments in good faith and without malfeasance. Daleville claims it could not have verified the accuracy of the ADM information submitted by the charter schools to the state because, despite its responsibilities as an authorizer, Daleville maintains that it did not even have access to the charter schools’ data until July 1, 2018.

□ Dr. Percy Clark, superintendent of the charter schools, wrote in a letter to SBOE that the administrative proceedings constitute a “miscarriage of justice,” and he blasts IDOE, SBOE, and the General Assembly as having “abjectly failed in the performance of their regulatory duties.” The outcome of the SBOE hearing will likely be the immediate closure of both charter schools, writes Dr. Clark, who was the M.S.D. of Lawrence Township superintendent the from 1982 - 1996.

● RISE INDY PAC of Indianapolis registers with the Indiana Election Division with the stated purpose of “Electing candidates for Indianapolis School Board, City Council, and the Indiana General Assembly who have a kids first agenda in education policy.” Charity Stowe, a senior account manager at Hiron and former deputy director of legislative affairs for the Indiana House Democratic Caucus, is the treasurer.

IN Courts & Conduct . . .

● William T. Drake, a teacher and coach at Hagerstown Jr./Sr. High School for 40 years until his termination several months ago, has been arrested and charged with sexual misconduct with a minor after being accused by a 14-year-old female student of inappropriate and unwanted sexual touching in the classroom and during a recent school dance.

● The Northeastern Wayne School Corporation will pay former high school principal Wes Wisner $50,000 to settle a federal lawsuit he filed last year against the district alleging breach of contract, age discrimination, defamation, and invasion of privacy stemming from the school board’s 2017 vote to cancel his teaching and administrative contracts for alleged insubordination and intimidation (Which we were first to tell you about).

● The retaliation and gender discrimination lawsuit Ulrey v. Bd. of School Trustees of Manchester Comm’ty Schools, No. 3:19-cv-00524, has been removed from Wabash County Superior Court to the U.S. District Court for the Northern Division of Indiana. Lisa Ulrey contends that Jon Lippe, as principal of Manchester Junior-Senior High School, refused to select her for the position of assistant principal in retaliation for her filing of a lawsuit against former superintendent William Reichart and the school board in April 2016 and because she is a female.

IN Higher Education

IN General . . .

● Between 2005 and 2017, the percentage of 25 to 64 year olds with an associate or bachelor’s degree increased by 7.8 percentage points in Indiana – the third-largest gain among all states behind only Maine and Iowa, according to an analysis by Ithaka S+R, a nonprofit research group, and the Joyce Foundation. According to the study, Indiana’s attainment rate growth appears to stem primarily from “older residents who returned to college after the Great Recession limited their labor market opportunities.”

● Purdue University Fort Wayne has closed on the $3.85 million acquisition of a facility that previously housed the campus of Brown Mackie. PFW plans to use the building as the new site of its Doermer School of Business, career services, development office space, some student support services, and a welcome center for the eastside of campus. The facility is already basically classroom ready. PFW could begin offering classes there beginning in Fall 2020.

● Purdue University plans to use $6.5 million in proceeds left over from a $53 million bond issue originally approved by the General Assembly back in 2007 to connect the main power plant on West Lafayette campus to a new 16 Mega Watt power plant proposed by Duke Energy. Duke is building the $55 million power plant on one acre of land that Duke will lease from Purdue for $100 for 35 years.

□ Purdue will purchase steam from Duke at a rate lower than Purdue can generate it. Duke's plan is pending before the Indiana Utility Regulatory Commission.

- Purdue University will spend $6.7 million to purchase one of the larger office buildings in the West Lafayette area – the former regional headquarters of State Farm Insurance. Purdue will use the 255,000 gross square feet of space to centralize functions that are currently dispersed across campus. Notably, Purdue will move the campus data center out of the basement of the math building.

- With another year of near-record enrollment this Fall, Purdue University is considering spending $2.7 million to lease 86 suite-style apartments containing 340 beds at the new Aspire complex located in the Discovery Park District. The leased space will accommodate the overflow of enrollment for one year until new residence hall space comes online in 2020. Purdue is also looking to lease space additional residence space at Salisbury Campus Apartments, Blackbird Farms, and The Cottages in West Lafayette.

- Ivy Tech Community College Evansville partners with the Evansville Vanderburgh School Corporation to roll out Pathways Plus – a new program that allows students to complete a college certificate or degree by the time they graduate from high school. Pathways Plus combines existing dual credit courses already offered in the high schools and at the Southern Indiana Career & Technical Center with dual enrollment courses offered at Ivy Tech. The collaboration will provide “an intentional college pathway,” emphasizes Ivy Tech Evansville Chancellor Jonathan Weinzapfel.

- The University of Southern Indiana College of Nursing and Health Professions receives federal grants from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services worth $3.7 million to support the Geriatrics Workforce Enhancement Program and $1.7 million for a residency program for nurse practitioners in rural and under-served communities.

- Indiana University Bloomington will spend $400,000 to remove more than 300 ceramic hallway tiles which feature swastikas located inside the old Men's Gymnasium, reports the Bloomington Herald-Times. The tiles were installed during the original construction of the facility in 1917, many years before the symbol became tainted by its association with the Nazis. Still, IU regularly receives complaints about the display of the symbol.

□ The H-T published an editorial taking IU to task for how the work was conducted, explaining, “The university undertook the $400,000 project without input from budgetary affairs committees of faculty governance councils. Nor was the work included in the campus construction alert list. We hesitate to use the word ‘secret’ so how about this: ‘quiet.’ The newspaper was alerted by a number of staff members at IU concerned about the historic nature of the tiles and by the lack of information from university officials.”

● The University of Evansville receives a major contribution from German American Bank to renovate the Aces baseball stadium, which will be named German American Bank Field at Charles H. Braun Stadium. IN Government . . .

● U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R) issued a statement pouncing on an article published by POLITICO revealing that the U.S. Department of Education intends to ramp up its scrutiny of foreign gifts to U.S. colleges and universities. Rep. Banks is the lead sponsor of the “Project Our Universities Act,” which outlines new disclosure requirements to shed light on the influence of foreign governments within academia.

□ “For many years, companies and individuals alike have donated large sums of money to colleges and universities to exert soft power and influence their decision making,” said Rep. Banks, a graduate of Indiana University Bloomington. “Recently, Chinese sources have donated hundreds of millions of dollars to influence and equip academics and researchers tasked with handling sensitive government information – that is extremely concerning.” He says he is pleased with the steps being taken by the Department, yet Rep. Banks cautions that “Government officials and school administrators must be clear-eyed and about the threats posed by government intelligence agencies masquerading as private businesses.”

□ Rep. Banks says he hopes the U.S. Department of Education will specifically address the following three concerns: (1) Provide a full list of institutions involved with any partnership with Huawei, including those receiving less than $250,000 in Title IV funding per calendar year; (2) Provide information regarding any research personnel (including Chinese nationals involved in the Talents program) at institutions that are involved in research activities connected to Huawei; and (3) Specify if and when the Department will convene a senior-level working group to understand China’s efforts to gather the United States technology and intellectual property on American college campuses and develop recommendations to protect the U.S. technological advantage.

● U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) and three colleagues, Sens. Mark Warner (D-VA), Marco Rubio (R-FL), and Chris Coons (D-DE) introduce the ISA Student Protection Act to provide a consumer protection framework for the expansion of Income Share Agreements (ISAs).

□ “Government-provided student loan debt continues to skyrocket while the average household income decreases,” observed Sen. Young. “That’s why I have introduced a bill to offer students from all backgrounds with a private – or philanthropically – funded, debt-free financing option catered to their own income needs through the use of Income Share Agreements (ISAs). If we strengthen the framework of ISAs, we can help colleges and career and technical schools prepare Americans for rewarding careers, all without any additional cost to taxpayers.”

□ The bipartisan measure would codify the following safeguards and consumer protections for ISA recipients:

– Individuals earning less than 200% of the Federal Poverty Level ($24,980 in 2019) would be exempt from making payments towards their ISA.

– ISA providers would be barred from making agreements with students that require payments higher than 20% percent of income for shorter-term contracts, with the cap decreasing to 7.5% for the longest contracts allowed (30 years).

– ISAs would be dischargeable in bankruptcy.

– Funders would be required disclose to students how monthly payments would compare under the ISA to payments on a private or federal loan for the same amount of money and number of payments.

– Federal consumer protection laws (i.e. Fair Credit Reporting Act, Fair Debt Collection Practices Act, Military Lending Act, Servicemembers Civil Relief Act, Equal Credit Opportunity Act) would be applied to ISAs, and the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau would have oversight authority over ISAs.

– The tax treatment of ISA contributions for both funders and recipients would be clarified.

● The Indiana Commission for Higher Education’s annual College Completion Report shows Indiana University Bloomington leads the state with a 68.5% on-time graduation rate, followed by Purdue University West Lafayette at 60.5% and Ball State University at 54.2% . . . while among black students, Purdue University West Lafayette graduated a state-best 47.0% on time, followed by Indiana University Bloomington at 44.0% and 43.3% for Ball State University.

IN Courts & Conduct . . .

- The Indiana Clinical and Translational Sciences Institute, Indiana University, and Purdue University have been sued over an allegedly out-of-control research study.

□ The lawsuit filed in Marion County Superior Court alleges that minor Jane Doe was recruited to participate in a research project on hypertension funded by an $8.6 million grant to Purdue University from the National Institute of Health's National Heart, Lung, and Blood Institute. Research Project Dash was to have 150 pediatric participants, half boys and half girls, between the ages of 11 and 15. On July 18, 2017, while at a facility to participate in Research Project Dash, a female minor allegedly took a nude video of Jane Doe while Jane Doe was using the shower and then uploaded the video to social media. The incident occurred less than a week after it was reported that two other child participants had engaged in sexual activity at the facility and another male participant had choked one child and committed battery on a second child. On July 20, Purdue made the decision to end the study and sent most of the kids home. The suit alleges that the defendants failed to provide adequate staffing and staff training for the supervision of the children attending Research Project Dash, and that as a result, minor Jane Doe suffered emotional trauma. Lauderdale v. Purdue Univ., et al., No. 49D05-1810-CT-040284.

- The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit rules in favor of the University of Notre Dame in a breach of contract lawsuit filed by a former tenured professor who was awarded $501,367 in back pay at the district court level. In Collins v. Univ. of Notre Dame du Lac, Nos. 18-2559 & 18-2579, the appellate panel reverses the ruling by Judge Joseph Van Bokkelen of the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Indiana after finding that Oliver Collins' employment contract did not require a faculty member who participated in the informal mediation process to automatically recuse from the hearing committee.

IDOI insures it claims title to win

Big win on Ohio company title industry case we detailed for you in 2015

The Indiana Department of Insurance (IDOI) scores a major win from a federal appellate court panel . . . and if you were a close reader of this newsletter four years ago, you would have read our analysis of the situation which proved to be spot-on, with the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit precisely adopting our logic in dismissing an appeal filed by an Ohio firm against IDOI.

Four years ago we told you about IDOI entering into a settlement agreement with an Ohio title insurance firm, an example of Commissioner Stephen Robertson successfully pursuing the title industry for insurance-related overcharges. But that particular case, as we explained a few months later, turned into a test case of sorts, challenging Commissioner Robertson and IDOI for how the Department has chosen to address such alleged violations – and also fit into a broader rubric of title company enforcement actions.

Ohio-based American Homeland Title Agency, Inc. (AHT) filed a civil rights lawsuit against the Indiana Department of Insurance in federal court in Ohio (later moved to Indiana), alleging that the Indiana title insurance laws and regulations have been selectively enforced in violation of the U.S. Constitution. A portion of the claims in this case also sought “prospective relief to end a continuing violation of federal law.”

A routine January 2015 IDOI desk audit of three years worth of transactions conducted by AHT and information from a pre-audit questionnaire revealed what IDOI contends were “significant violations” that included unlicensed agents performing functions that require an Indiana title producer’s license. AHT also was said to have failed to properly disclose and collect Indiana title fees. The IDOI audit additionally revealed that AHT overcharged Indiana consumers on government fees and insurance premiums and added unnecessary endorsements to policies which significantly increased the amount Hoosiers had to pay to close on their property transactions. Excess fees ranged from $75 to $625 per transaction and totaled more than $42,000. Finally, IDOI concluded that the firm failed to remit and issue a significant number of title policies within a reasonable amount of time after the transaction closed. AHT seemed to have effectively failed on just about every audit benchmark, as we explained to readers.

In lieu of an administrative hearing – which would have provided an opportunity for AHT to deny and defend their actions in a public forum – AHT opted for an Agreed Entry to resolve the violations identified during the audit. In the Agreed Entry, AHT offered its consent to reimburse consumers (identified by transaction files) $42,202 for overcharges of fees and premiums and to pay $70,082 in administrative fines and penalties. Additionally, both of the firm’s owners agreed to permanent suspensions of their Indiana title producer license and the agency’s title producer license.

AHT contended in its federal lawsuit, however, that IDOI failed to follow Indiana state law. According to AHT’s attorneys, “IDOI did not allow AHT the opportunity to receive and to rebut the findings of the audit. AHT decided to settle with the State of Indiana rather than risk the entire company on a protracted legal fight. AHT compensated consumers, paid a hefty fine, and agreed to not compete for Indiana business.”

Fracking exposure Emerges

INPRS faces Ch. 11 investment setback

Emerge Energy Services LP, a Texas-based limited partnership engaged in mining, producing, and distributing silica sand, a key input for the hydraulic fracturing of oil and natural gas wells, filed for chapter 11 bankruptcy reorganization last week, leaving the Indiana Public Retirement System with exposure. In re: EmERGE Energy Services LP, et al., No. 19-11563.

Emerge had signed a restructuring agreement in April – INPRS was one of 17 creditors consenting – but a Tuesday court filing in Delaware explained bankruptcy was necessary after negotiations with railcar and terminal providers proved unsuccessful at freeing it from “burdensome” contracts and leases.

INPRS has an unspecified stake in Merge Energy courtesy of investment manager Oak Hill Advisors, L.P., whose general counsel signed off on the restructuring agreement on behalf of INPRS fewer than three months before the bankruptcy filing. The agreement intentionally omits the principal amount of both revolving loan obligations and notes purchase obligations, so there is no way of knowing just how much INPRS has invested in EmERGE through Oak Hill, particularly given that there is no elaboration of the investment in the most recent INPRS annual report.

In one instance, AHT claims that it was threatened with a $9.5 million fine, $10,000 fines for employees, and that corporate license forfeiture would be a condition precedent to any settlement. AHT alleged it “was told that its effort to negotiate or make a ‘counter-offer’ for a reduced fine had insulted” state officials. The company also claims that it was told “that hiring an attorney would be harmful to the negotiation process and would probably lead to a greater fine.”

According to the original 2015 federal lawsuit, IDOI officials allegedly told AHT, “If you guys were not writing this (title insurance) business in Indiana, people in Indiana would be writing it.” AHT contends that the company and its officers “have been subject to purposeful discrimination in the form of more aggressive enforcement and less favorable treatment based on the fact that it is an out-of-state company providing title services in Indiana,” and this constitutes “unconstitutional discrimination against out-of-state title companies in favor of in-state title companies.”

AHT’s attorneys asserted that “Approximately two months after settlement with AHT, IDOI issued a press release which contained false statements. It became clear Indiana was willing to put the West Chester, Ohio company out of business. It was at this point in time that AHT decided to file its federal lawsuit.”

Attorneys for AHT said in announcing the lawsuit’s filing that “It appears that the IDOI Commissioner has been targeting out-of-state title insurance companies for vigorous enforcement to protect Indiana businesses from competition.”

Department staff tell us that while it is no secret that Commissioner Robertson has pursued several cases against the title industry for insurance violations, “his aim is clearly to protect Indiana consumers from a practice of overcharging rather than to protect Indiana businesses from out-of-state competition.”

Robertson, we told you in 2015 – and nothing has changed our mind since – “has taken a particularly tough stance in pursuing underwriters for effectively turning their heads when agents overcharge.”

The federal lawsuit added that “Since the settlement, AHT has learned that IDOI has targeted other out-of-state title companies for aggressive enforcement in order to protect in-state Indiana businesses.” According to AHT’s top executive back then, “It appears that the IDOI Commissioner has been targeting out-of-state title insurance companies for vigorous enforcement to protect Indiana businesses from competition.”

AHT had alleged that through the first five months of 2015:

- 83% of all $10,000.00+ fines against title insurance companies by IDOI have been against out-of-state title companies;
- 63% of all enforcement actions have been against out-of-state title companies;
- 100% of press releases touting enforcement by IDOI have been against Cincinnati, Ohio area title companies;
- Almost all enforcement actions against Ohio title insurance companies have been for multiple violations while all actions against Indiana title companies have been for single violations; and
- Fines against out-of-state title companies under IDOI’s most popular fine have averaged over 1100% higher as opposed to what IDOI assesses against in-state title companies.

After the lawsuit was filed, AHT and its attorneys issued a statement saying that “Many Cincinnati area title companies have decided that it is too risky to continue to do business in Indiana. A few other major Cincinnati area title companies have made a business decision to cease doing business in Indiana for fear of being targeted next by IDOI.”

We cautioned you back then, however, that “The American Homeland Title numbers may, however, not tell the whole story. They seem to conflate agencies and underwriters under the ‘companies’ label, making the numbers redound to their benefit because most of the underwriters are out-of-state entities. AHT is an agency.”

IDOI provided your favorite newsletter information at the time that painted a different picture.

We wrote in 2015 that “Since 2012, nine agency licenses have been suspended or revoked, with six of those being Indiana agencies and only three were non-resident agencies. There are 264 resident title insurance agencies currently operating in Indiana and 375 non-resident title agencies operating in Indiana . . . and IDOI thus suggests that AHT’s allegation of disparate treatment for non-resident agencies by the Department of Insurance is meritless. Larger fines have also been assessed against underwriters than agencies.”

And here’s where you really need to start paying attention.

We told you in 2015 that “One line also stuck out to us in the settlement agreement: ‘Respondent voluntarily and freely waives the right to judicial review of this Order.’ This appears to be the equivalent of a covenant not to sue, and in addition to any substantive defense the State offers, we would assume that OAG will take the position that ‘judicial review’ applies to more than a simple appeal of the Order, and should bar AHT’s ‘as-applied’ lawsuit over the law and/or settlement.”

And we added that “Both of the title insurance company principals are attorneys, so we anticipate that the settlement language will prove a major hurdle to their chances of pursuing their action on constitutionality”

Well, last week, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, in American Homeland Title Agency, Inc., et al., v. Robertson, No. 18-3293, upheld a ruling by Senior Judge Sarah Evans Barker of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana granting summary judgment to Commissioner Robertson in this matter.

Writing for the court, Judge Diane Sykes – one of those on the President’s short list for potential nomination to serve on the Supreme Court of the United States – explains, “We need not reach the merits of that discrimination claim. In its agreement with the Department, American Homeland consented to the same penalties it now challenges. It hasn’t provided a valid reason to void that agreement, so judicial review is unavailable. We therefore affirm summary judgment in favor of Robertson.”

She continued, “In 2015 the Department randomly audited American Homeland’s files and found hundreds of code violations, none of which American Homeland denies. The Department’s examiners recommended that the Commissioner fine American Homeland $70,082 and order $42,202 in consumer reimbursements.”

Judge Sykes then serves up key details: “To calculate those penalties, the examiners started with what their guidelines recommended but then deviated upward. The guidelines are fully advisory, so everyone agrees that the examiners had the discretion to do so. The parties then went through several rounds of negotiation. But not only did the examiners refuse to adjust the fines, they added a new sanction: [its owners, both attorneys] would lose their licenses to do business in Indiana. Later, one of the Department’s attorneys informed American Homeland that if it refused to agree to the penalties, it could seek administrative review. But if American Homeland did that, it could face the maximum fine of $9.5 million. Fearing that exposure,” the appellate judge notes, “American Homeland agreed to the recommended sanctions.”

Judge Sykes channels precisely what we told you four years ago as she concludes, “In sum, American Homeland has offered no meaningful reason to ignore the Agreed Entry. Because the company waived its right to judicial review of the penalties, its claims are foreclosed. As a result, we need not reach the merits of American Homeland’s equal-protection claim.”

IN Politics

Federal Office Races . . .

● The Federal Election Commission decides a pair of complaints filed by the American Democracy Legal Fund arising from the 2018 Republican U.S. Senate primary, one against former U.S. Rep. Luke Messer (R), his campaign committee, and treasurer Craig Kunkle (who now handles the same duties for the leadership PAC of U.S. Rep. Greg Pence (R)) . . . and the second against former U.S. Rep. Todd Rokita (R) and his campaign committee and treasurer. The respective complaints alleged that the two men and their committees violated the registration and reporting requirements of the Federal Election Campaign Act by failing to file a statement of candidacy in connection with testing-the-waters activities that they each undertook in connection with their separate 2018 campaigns for Indiana’s U.S. Senate seat. The Commission exercised its prosecutorial discretion and “dismissed the allegations in consideration of Commission priorities.”

□ Chair Ellen Weintraub, Vice Chair Matthew Petersen, and commissioners Caroline Hunter and Steven Walther issued a formal Statement of Reasons applicable to both cases explaining that evidence “indicates that both candidates conducted their exploratory activities out of their respective House re-election committees, but that the funds raised and spent in connection with testing-the-waters activities were not clearly identified as such on the committees’ disclosure reports. Based upon the failure to distinguish Senate activities from House activities, the Office of General Counsel (‘OGC’) recommended that the Commission find reason to believe that both committees violated [federal law] by failing to accurately disclose receipts and disbursements for the candidates’ House and Senate campaigns and [violated federal regulations] by failing to maintain separate campaign organizations.”

□ However, “the Commission exercises its prosecutorial discretion and dismisses these matters.” Why did it do so? “The Act does not address whether individuals who have declared their candidacies for one federal office and are testing the waters for a second federal office need to establish separate campaign committees. Nor has the Commission addressed this precise issue in prior matters . . . There is no allegation that respondents failed to comply with the regulations that require that testing-the-waters activities be funded with money that complies with the restrictions and limitations of the Act/. Additionally, although the testing-the-waters activities were not clearly identified as such in the disclosure reports, the underlying activity was reported. Based on these facts and the lack of explicit guidance on this issue, the Commission has chosen to exercise our prosecutorial discretion to dismiss these matters. OGC also noted that Rokita filed a late Statement of Candidacy for his House re-election campaign and Messer may have triggered his Senate candidacy prior to his official announcement. In light of our finding above, however, we do not believe that either of these potential violations merit the use of additional agency resources. Therefore these allegations are also dismissed.”

● The vote by U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R) to condemn the President’s July 14 tweets about “The Squad” could prove to be a plus – or a minus – for Republicans seeking to replace her in CD 05. Her vote makes it safe for a more moderate or establishment Republican candidate to take issue with the President (or at least his modus operandi, making it look like they are willing to take issue with a president of their party), while at the same time allows a candidate from the right to stand with the President and against the outgoing incumbent, and stake out a position potentially more acceptable to the more hardcore GOP base. Although in this district Republican primary voters are probably more moderate than in any other Republican-leaning district statewide, there are likely to be fewer 2020 GOP primary candidates on the far right than in the middle, allowing a candidate from the right to potentially emerge because of split votes in a larger moderate field – and this could be the point of coalescence of such a candidate from that end of the spectrum.

□ Former Rep. Christina Hale (D), who entered the CD 05 open seat race on July 11, reported raising $100,000 in fewer than 100 hours. The 2016 lieutenant governor nominee raised more money in less than one week of campaigning than did 2018 CD 05 nominee Dee Thornton (D) by the end of the second quarter of 2018. Thornton didn’t hit the six-figure mark until the third quarter of the election year. As no doubt intended, the Hale haul announcement overshadowed Thornton’s campaign kickoff. She says she will concentrate on health care and the environment; Hale is focusing on middle-class issues . . . Ellen (Elle) Kizik, a Butler University alum and research assistant at Anacore, Inc., opens a campaign committee for the CD 05 seat as a write-in candidate.

● CD 06 challenger Jeannine Lee Lake (R) comes out of the box swinging in her campaign to take on U.S. Rep. Greg Pence (R), to whom she lost overwhelmingly in her 2018 open-seat bid (and that was a non-presidential year, with only one Pence on the ballot). She staked out the Governor's re-election announcement in Knightstown (in CD 06), waiting for Rep. Pence to exit the rally. She tried to politely engage him to, as she framed it, "answer questions about children being put in cages at the southern border. He refused to debate me in the 2018 campaign - and is still evading me." Rep. Pence greeted her by name, and then turned and walked away without answering her queries. "I'm rested and ready to take on him, his famous name and the cruel administration he supports!" writes Lake on her Facebook page . . . Rep. Pence's Greg Pence Victory joint fundraising committee has raised $338,152 during the first half of 2020, made $337,252 in expenditures, and began July with $56,700 in cash on hand. Among the disbursements made in the last week of June: $123,074 to his congressional campaign committee; $11,945 to his Mustang PAC leadership political action committee (after $17,070 in March); $14,786 to the National Republican Congressional Committee; and $10,741 to the Great America Committee, the political action committee operated for the benefit of his brother, the Vice President . . . Rep. Pence's Mustang PAC collected $39,180 during the first six months of 2019, spent $14,111, and began July with $43,086 in cash on hand.

□ Former U.S. Rep. Dan Burton (R) entered July with a cash-on-hand balance of $105,985 in his campaign treasury, while former U.S. Rep. Baron Hill (D) posted a balance of $91,890, former U.S. Rep. Luke Messer (R) retains only $6,225, and former U.S. Rep. Todd Rokita (R) is sitting on $49,380 (and his state political committee had $2,151 at mid-year) Former U.S. Sen. Joe Donnelly (D) retains $344,176 . . . former Sen. Brent Waltz (R) still is owed $120,844 from loans he made to his 2016 CD 09 primary campaign . . . Jonathan Lamb (R) still owes himself $470,000 from loans he made to his 2018 CD 06 primary effort . . . Dr. Richard Moss (R) still owes himself $81,199 from loans made to his various unsuccessful CD 08 primary campaigns . . . U.S. Rep. Trey Hollingsworth (R) still has not been repaid $606,401.66 in loans he has made to his CD 09 campaign . . . U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R), who decided not to seek re-election, made $27,700 in contribution refunds during the second quarter. She also transferred $30,000 to the National Republican Congressional Committee, and another $5,000 to the Majority Committee PAC, the leadership political action committee of U.S. House Republican Leader Kevin McCarthy (R-CA) . . . 2018 CD 02 candidate Mel Hall (D) boasts a $91,889 cash balance as of July 1 . . . U.S. Rep. Greg Pence (R) is the only Republican member of the House delegation seeking re-election whose campaign spent more in the second quarter than it brought in, largely because of extremely high fundraising-related expenses.

State Office Races . . .

● Governor Eric Holcomb (R) launches his 2020 re-election campaign with a new theme. "Putting People First" will be focused around Hoosiers, their stories, and "how Governor Holcomb's work is making a real difference in real Hoosier lives." Democrats complain that he's focused more on the business world than people, and you can expect them to hit hard on health and education issues: Department of Child Services shortcomings, the lack of a statewide teacher pay raise, the lack of spending on (and attention to) tobacco cessation efforts, work requirements for some Healthy Indiana Program recipients, early childhood education programs, and infant mortality rates . . . all items the Guv plans to attack in Term II.

□ Kyle Hupfer will serve as the Guv's campaign manager. Hupfer will play a dual role, overseeing the campaign and continuing to chair the Indiana Republican Party. This could prove to make the fight for the attorney general nomination (and election) even more interesting.

□ The Governor's campaign committee adds a $15,000 July 10 contribution from Krieg Devault LLP and $10,000 two days later from Beck's Superior Hybrids top exec Sonny Beck, a Purdue University trustee since 2013.

IN Legislative Races . . .

● Add Marion City Councilmember Steve Henderson (R) to those declaring for the HD 31 vacancy selection caucus July 30. Ann Vermilion (R), a former Marion General Hospital top administrator was the first to officially jump in.

IN the Presidential Race . . .

● Several Democratic presidential candidates will converge on Indianapolis July 24-27 to speak at the National Urban League's 2019 Conference at the Indiana Convention Center. Among the speakers will likely be former vice president Joe Biden (D); U.S. Sens. Cory Booker (D-NJ), Kamala Harris (D-CA), and Amy Klobuchar (D-MN); South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D); U.S. Rep. Tim Ryan (D-OH); and former U.S. Rep. John Delaney (D-MD).

● South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D) is down one point over the prior week in the most recent Morning Consult poll of prospective Democratic primary voters, and at five percent, he is in fifth place, top among the candidates not polling in the double-digit percentages (he is at seven percent among Democratic primary voters in a largely contemporaneous Wall Street Journal/NBC News poll). A CNN poll conducted by the University of New Hampshire of likely Democratic primary voters July 8-15 in the First State finds Buttigieg placing fourth with 10% (but a 5.0% margin of error means the top four are all potentially in second place to former vice president Joe Biden (D)). Morning Consult finds that he is not the second choice of those who prefer any of the other six leading candidates, but is the third choice of those polled who back U.S. Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) – whom Buttigieg leads by one point in New Hampshire . . . with all of the second quarter campaign finance reports now publicly available, not only does Mayor Pete lead all candidates with a $24.9 million Q2 haul, but he also paces the field in attracting more campaign cash from individual donors than any other Democratic hopeful. Hizzoner also did not have the ability to transfer in funds from a federal campaign account as nine of his primary opponents did during the first half of the year . . . Mayor Pete's campaign spent $8.8 million during the quarter, and cash-on-hand numbers at the beginning of July show his campaign with $22.7 million, more than any other Democratic candidate than U.S. Sen. Bernie Sanders (D-VT). His campaign has already raised more than $31 million in the first half of 2019 alone (approaching 10% of the overall 2019 City of South Bend budget of approximately $388 million) . . . the Buttigieg campaign points out that he has raised more than twice as much money – $2.35 million – from New York City residents during the second quarter than the $1.1 million that New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio (D-NY) raised in total, nationwide, during his entire campaign . . . the President took on Mayor Pete directly at his nationally televised South Carolina Wednesday, contending that the contender “runs a failed city,” and that “His city is doing so badly African-Americans literally were so angry at him for the lousy job, and he's supposed to be a hot young star,” the President adds. The President also said Vice President Mike Pence (R), who never had a publicly negative word about Mayor Pete's administration (just the religious-based criticism), spoke with him about Buttigieg, “And Mike said, ‘He never did a good job. I'm so shocked to see him running,’ he says.” . . . Morning Consult finds that during Q2, Buttigieg – a Harvard classmate of Facebook's Mark Zuckerberg – received $121,973 from 214 employees at Facebook Inc., Amazon.com Inc., Alphabet Inc. and Apple Inc., more cash than any other candidate raised from the big four tech companies . . . two new key Team Pete hires: Buttigieg hires: Jess O'Connell, a former Democratic National Committee CEO signs on as a senior advisor, and Georgetown University's Sonal Shah, an economist and director of the Office of Social Innovation and Civic Participation in the Obama White House, as national policy director.

IN Political News . . .

● New Morning Consult approval numbers (January - March polling for governor; April through June for U.S. Senate), for which we added historical data for U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R):

	Approve	Disapprove	Don't Know
Holcomb	50%	22%	28%
Young	40%	25%	35%
Braun	42%	27%	31%

Sen. Young Q2	2019	2018	2017	2016
Approve	40%	42%	48%	48%
Disapprove	25%	28%	28%	25%
DK/No Opinion	35%	30%	24%	27%

□ There are 22 governors with higher approval ratings than Indiana Governor Eric Holcomb (R), an unusually high set of approval numbers for governors generally, but 28% of Hoosiers still don't venture an opinion of his work, a figure topped by only two other governors nationally – one of whom ascended to office in mid-term as a result of the resignation of the governor originally elected in 2016 and the other just elected in 2018 without having previously served statewide . . . Sens. Young and Mike Braun (R) are in the lower half of the overall Senate approval numbers . . . Sen. Young's historical approval numbers have dropped, but have lodged in the “Don't Know/No Opinion” column instead of becoming disapprovals.

● The Oakland, California-based ColorOfChange PAC registers its federal political action committee with the Indiana Election Division with the stated purpose of “Mobilizing Black voters to shape the political agenda in Indiana” . . . the Outdoor Advertising Association of Indiana, Inc.'s Outdoor Advertising Political Action Committee registers with the state, seeking to “Enhance outdoor advertising industry for better service to advertisers. Issues: Transportation, taxes, regulation” . . . RISE INDY PAC of Indianapolis registers with the state with the stated purpose of “Electing candidates for Indianapolis School Board, City Council, and the Indiana General Assembly who have a kids first agenda in education policy.” Charity Stowe of Hiron, a former legislative affairs staffer for the House Democratic Caucus, is the treasurer.

IN Brief

IN Federal Circles . . .

● A sharp-eyed reader last week caught that we had somehow wrongly included former U.S. Rep. Bill Hudnut (R) among those who had served with U.S. Rep. Pete Visclosky (D), the longest-serving member of the House delegation (first elected in 1985) in Hoosier history . . . despite the fact that Hudnut had been out of Congress for a decade before Visclosky was first elected. That means we need to recalculate, and tell you that Rep. Visclosky has served with 37 other Hoosier members of Congress (25 Republicans and 12 Democrats) . . . a number that will increase by at least one in 2021 if he is re-elected.

● U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) joins U.S. Sens. Pat Toomey (R-PA), and Tom Cotton (R-AR), in introducing the “Government Bailout Prevention Act,” legislation that would ensure federal dollars will not be used to help insolvent state, territory, or local governments – such as Puerto Rico today – pay off their obligations. Under this bill, no arm of the federal government, including the Federal Reserve System and the U.S. Treasury Department, can pay or guarantee state and local obligations if that state or local government entity has filed bankruptcy, has defaulted on its debts, or is at risk of bankruptcy or default. “Unfortunately, a number of state and local governments continue to spend more money than they bring in and are racking up dangerous levels of debt,” said Sen. Young. “It is unfair for Hoosiers to be expected to pay taxes to bail out this fiscal irresponsibility. These governments need to be on notice that they can’t continue down their fiscally risky path and expect federal taxpayers to pick up the check” . . . taking a page from Purdue University’s innovative financing tool for students pursuing postsecondary education, Sen. Young teams with U.S. Sens. Mark Warner (D-VA), Marco Rubio (R-FL), and Chris Coons (D-DE) to introduce the “Income Share Agreement (ISA) Student Protection Act” to impose consumer protections and improve ISA effectiveness – protecting students and ensuring their success in the workforce. ISAs provide opportunities for students to design financial aid suited to their needs based on their future income and job success. Under an ISA, a student agrees to pay a percentage of their income over a given time period in exchange for tuition payments from nongovernmental sources. When the agreed timeframe ends, the student stops payments regardless of whether the initial amount was paid back to the ISA funder. “Far too often I hear of students and their families being forced to endure financial hardship in exchange for a quality education,” says Sen. Young. “Government-provided student loan debt continues to skyrocket while the average household income decreases. That’s why I have introduced a bill to offer students from all backgrounds with a private – or philanthropically – funded, debt-free financing option catered to their own income needs through the use of Income Share Agreements. If we strengthen the framework of ISAs, we can help colleges and career and technical schools prepare Americans for rewarding careers, all without any additional cost to taxpayers.” In the last session of Congress, Sens. Young and Rubio introduced a version of this bill, the “Investing in Student Success Act” (other versions were introduced in the House and Senate). This is the first Senate version to win bipartisan support. The bipartisan measure would codify the these safeguards and consumer protections for ISA recipients:

- Individuals earning less than 200% of the Federal Poverty Level ($24,980 in 2019) would be exempt from making payments towards their ISA.
- ISA providers would be barred from making agreements with students that require payments higher than 20% percent of income for shorter-term contracts, with the cap decreasing to 7.5% for the longest contracts allowed (30 years).
- ISAs would be dischargeable in bankruptcy.
- Funders would be required disclose to students how monthly payments would compare under the ISA to payments on a private or federal loan for the same amount of money and number of payments.
- Federal consumer protection laws (i.e. Fair Credit Reporting Act, Fair Debt Collection Practices Act, Military Lending Act, Servicemembers Civil Relief Act, Equal Credit Opportunity Act) would be applied to ISAs, and the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau would have oversight authority over ISAs.
- The tax treatment of ISA contributions for both funders and recipients would be clarified.

● U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) reflected on the legacy of Ross Perot, describing him as an outsider candidate who helped pave the way for his own “outsider businessman” run for Senate. “Ross Perot was right about the dangers of NAFTA and runaway government spending because he spoke from real experience – not as a career politician – and paved the way for entrepreneurs like me and President Trump to shake the system in D.C.” . . . the U.S. Senate passed the “Payment Integrity Information Act of 2019,” on Tuesday, a bipartisan bill introduced by Sen. Braun and U.S. Sens. Tom Carper (D-DE), Ron Johnson (R-WI), and Gary Peters (D-MI). The legislation aims to cut down on government waste and improper payments made by the federal government – including overpayments, underpayments, payments made to ineligible recipients or payments that were not properly documented. “As a former entrepreneur who left Main Street to help President Trump drain the swamp of corruption in Washington, I’m proud to spearhead the Payment Integrity Information Act of 2019 which will reduce billions of dollars of improper payments from the federal government,” said Sen. Braun . . . Sen. Braun told a gaggle of reporters in D.C. that he wasn’t thrilled about the President’s tweets about “The Squad.” “The President is better than that. He knows better,” said Sen. Braun. “I didn’t like the content of it.” He added, “I don’t think he’s a racist. I think he’s a guy that says what comes to his mind, and a lot of times we then have to spend time to talk about it.” He told POLITICO, “I don’t think he’s got a racist bone in his body. He’s got an approach that might let the other side talk about it. That’s what I don’t like.”

● U.S. Rep. Greg Pence (R) talks about the President’s tweets about “The Squad” with Eagle Country 99.3-FM News Director Mike Perleberg Thursday morning, telling listeners in the Lawrenceburg area, “I don’t think the President is a racist. I don’t speak for the administration. I thought the President the day after that clarified what he meant, but it sure became an opportunity for the national media and the Democrats to just go back to the name-calling, the ugly words.”

● U.S. Rep. Trey Hollingsworth (R) poses his question of the week to constituents: “Do you support continued investment in space exploration, including an effort to land on Mars?”

● U.S. Rep. Jackie Walorski (R) voted against H.R. 2500, what her office portrayed as “a partisan version of the National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA) that would harm military readiness.” Rep. Walorski herself explained, “Congress’ most important responsibility is to provide for the national defense and support our brave men and women in uniform. Sadly, the NDAA passed by the House . . . falls short of these goals and breaks a longstanding tradition of bipartisan cooperation. While the Senate passed its bill with overwhelming support from both parties, House Democratic leaders offered a partisan proposal that underfunds our national defense, undercuts military readiness, and reverses prohibitions on transferring terrorist detainees from Gitmo. I hope they will put politics aside and pass a commonsense, bipartisan national defense bill, including two provisions I authored to encourage adoption of military working dogs by their former handlers and connect more wounded warriors to service dogs” . . . Rep. Walorski tweeted Monday about the President’s tweets and comments regarding “The Squad” of female freshmen Democrats: “As Americans, we can disagree on fundamental issues and condemn radical ideas without resorting to personal attacks on our fellow citizens. In order to find commonsense solutions to the challenges people face, both parties need to put aside divisive rhetoric and engage in a civil debate that reflects our nation’s values.”

● U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R) “Supports Senate Version of National Defense Authorization Act,” is how her office characterized the Brooks vote against the House version of the National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA) and her backing “for the bipartisan Senate version of the NDAA,” which passed the Senate 86-8. Rep. Brooks said “It is critically important to provide the men and women in our armed forces the resources and tools they need in order to safely defend and protect our country. For 58 years, the Armed Services Committee has passed a bipartisan NDAA. I am disappointed [this] House version of the NDAA is extremely partisan, endangers U.S. national security and undercuts authorities’ abilities to combat serious threats on an international level, including combating terrorism. This bill cuts critical programs designed to deter Russia and China, cuts personnel accounts by over one billion dollars, cuts nuclear deterrent programs and cuts readiness recovery. Keeping Americans safe is government’s first job, and that is why we must have a military that is properly equipped to keep us safe at home and abroad. As the legislative process continues, I urge House leadership to consider the Senate’s version of the bill because it rises above partisan politics in order to prioritize our national security and provide needed funding in order to increase military readiness” . . . on Monday morning, Rep. Brooks posted a statement on Facebook and Twitter in reference to the President’s remarks about “The Squad.” She commented that “As Americans, there is more that unites us than divides us. The President’s remarks to my colleagues across the aisle are inappropriate and do not reflect American values. ALL of our elected officials need to raise their level of civility in order to address the serious issues facing our country.” Then, on Tuesday afternoon, Rep. Brooks became one of only four Republican House members to vote for a House resolution denouncing the President for “racist comments” in his Sunday, July 21 tweets. Said Rep. Brooks Tuesday evening: “Yesterday, I issued a statement regarding the President’s recent inappropriate remarks because I believe they do not reflect American values. I believe our diverse backgrounds as Americans make our country greater and stronger. These differences should be celebrated by all of us. Today, I voted to condemn the racially offensive remarks the leader of our country made. However, I remain disappointed that the Democrats refuse to hold their own members accountable for their targeted, anti-Semitic and hateful speech. The lack of civility between the executive and legislative branches has reached an unacceptable low. We must remember our words matter and carry great weight. Our words and the ways in which we deliver them have a lasting impact on those who hear them. My hope for our country is that we can move beyond divisive rhetoric in order to more effectively govern.”

● U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R) tweeted Monday afternoon about the presidential tweets regarding “the Squad”: “Until House Dems remove Rep. Ilhan Omar from the Foreign Affairs Committee or address her anti-Semitic remarks in any way, it’s hard to take any of their efforts to condemn the President, or anyone else, seriously” . . . Rep. Banks serves up kudos for the U.S. Department of Education’s recent scrutiny of, and investigations into, the reporting of foreign gifts to U.S. colleges and universities. Rep. Banks is the lead sponsor of the “Protect Our Universities Act,” which would outline new ways to disclose and examine the influence of foreign governments in our nation’s academia, including the students and entities with access to sensitive information. Said Rep. Banks, “Money talks. For many years, companies and individuals alike have donated large sums of money to colleges and universities to exert soft power and influence their decision making. Recently, Chinese sources have donated hundreds of millions of dollars to influence and equip academics and researchers tasked with handling sensitive government information – that is extremely concerning.” He continues, “I am glad to see the Department of Education follow up on concerns that I’ve highlighted over the past year. In March 2019, I asked the Department of Education to clarify their policy on Confucius Institutes and Department of Defense research, as funding streams and personnel support between the two programs could pose national security concerns.” Additionally, in July and September of 2018, he asked USDOE to clarify policies regarding private donations made to universities, and adds that he still hopes that these concerns will also soon be addressed by the Department. He wants USDOE to:

- Provide a full list of institutions involved with any partnership with Huawei, including those receiving less than $250,000 in Title IV funding per calendar year;
- Provide information regarding any research personnel (including Chinese nationals involved in the “Talents” program) at institutions that are involved in research activities connected to Huawei;
- Specify if and when the Department will convene a senior-level working group to understand China’s efforts to gather the United States technology and intellectual property on American college campuses and develop recommendations to protect the U.S. technological advantage.

“While there is additional work to be done on this issue, I’m pleased that Secretary DeVos and the Department of Education are taking steps to investigate these foreign contributions and craft new rules to more thoroughly report such gifts,” says Rep. Banks, who concludes, “Government officials and school administrators must be clear-eyed and about the threats posed by government intelligence agencies masquerading as private businesses. It is a danger that no sum of money can mitigate.”

● U.S. Rep. Larry Bucshon (R) “Votes Against House Democrats Partisan National Defense Authorization Act,” is how his office portrayed his vote against the National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA) (H.R. 2500) “due to the lack of adequate allocation of resources requested and blatant partisanship.” Rep. Bucshon explains, “Traditionally, the NDAA process has been light on partisanship with Republicans and Democrats coming together to advance policies that support our troops and strengthen our national defense. Unfortunately, House Democrats are risking the safety and security of our freedom at home and abroad with this partisan legislation that they intend to use as a political tool. While there are important measures within the NDAA for Hoosiers, the overall bill does not address our national security needs so I must vote to protect our military personnel, our safety, and our way of life. I urge Speaker Pelosi and House Democrats to abandon their partisanship with this NDAA and put the safety of our nation first” . . . after voting Thursday against what he called the “Raising Unemployment for Americans Workers Act,” which his office characterized as “legislation put forth by House Democrats that mandates a 107-percent increase of the minimum wage that could eliminate 3.7 millions jobs,” Rep. Bucshon had this to say about H.R. 582: “Thanks to the conservative, pro-growth economic agenda put forth by the Trump Administration and House Republicans in Congress for two years, the American prosperity economy is flourishing. After nearly a decade of stagnation, family incomes and job opportunities are finally rising once again. In the past few months, the unemployment rate has hit near record lows, wages have increased – particularly for lower-income workers, and there are more job openings than there are unemployed workers. This short-sided attempt by House Democrats to artificially raise the minimum wage will reverse the economic progress made over the past couple of years and hurt American workers. In fact, the American workers who will be hurt the most will be those looking to get onto or move up from the bottom step on the ladder of economic success – which are those that Democrats claim they are trying to help. The irreversible damage done by this bill could result in an estimated 3.7 million Americans losing their jobs and move our economy backwards and be a crushing blow to small businesses. Instead of focusing on minimum wage policies, we should instead be focused on policies that maximize economic opportunities for Americans.”

● U.S. Rep. André Carson (D) responded to what his office characterized as “the GOP’s latest efforts to strike down protections for people with pre-existing conditions, as well as every last benefit and protection provided by the Affordable Care Act” as the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit heard oral arguments Tuesday in the Texas v. U.S. lawsuit, to which Indiana is an amicus party, seeking to repeal the Affordable Care Act. “Hoosiers want their representatives in Washington to strengthen and expand critical care that helps working families thrive,” Rep. Carson said. “But this disastrous lawsuit, if successful, could rip coverage away from millions of Americans and destroy life-saving protections for people with pre-existing conditions. For years, Republicans have worked to overturn, weaken, and downright sabotage the Affordable Care Act, which has culminated in this lawsuit” . . . Rep. Carson joined CNN live Monday evening on Erin Burnett OutFront to tell host Erin Burnett that the President’s tweets the day before were “racist” and “possibly Islamophobic.” He explained, “His remarks coming from the highest office in the land, they’re destructive, they’re hurtful, and – dare I say – they’re anti-American.” He suggested the President’s tweets were “a Hail Mary” to reassure his political base. “He’s speaking to that particular segment, that very toxic segment of our society,” Rep. Carson told the national audience. Rep. Carson tweeted shortly after that “President Trump’s remarks telling my colleagues to ‘go back where they came from’ further reveals his narrow-minded ideas about who belongs in this country. They are principled Americans who belong right where they are – in Congress – pushing back against his dangerous agenda” . . . “At a time when this president is ignoring the truth about domestic terrorism and his administration is concealing and hiding the proliferation of white supremacist-inspired incidents, Congress and the public urgently need more information to better understand and prevent domestic terrorism,” Rep. Carson, a senior member of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, told his colleagues on the House floor Tuesday night as he pushed for passage of a measure requiring an annual report on domestic terrorism. “It is important that we acknowledge domestic terrorism as a very serious threat and we must do more than just talk about it as a societal problem.” He also urged passage of his amendment to the Intelligence Authorization Act with U.S. Rep. Elise Stefanik (R-NY) that he tweeted “protects the American supply chain from threats to our national security. I also praised the long-overdue steps taken in this bill to tackle domestic terrorism.” The Carson amendment would require the National Counterintelligence and Security Center to develop a plan to improve defenses against foreign exploitation of the domestic business supply chain . . . Rep. Carson was scheduled to host an event Friday afternoon, July 19, after we headed to press with this issue, with U.S. House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-CA) at the Indianapolis Central Library. The two lawmakers were slated to lead a conversation on women’s equality, health care, the economy and the minimum wage.

IN State Circles . . .

● Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) decides that rather than appeal the June 28 preliminary injunction issued by Senior Judge Sarah Evans Barker of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana against Indiana’s ban on dilation and evacuation, or “dismemberment” abortion, he will focus his office’s resources on the larger issue proceeding to summary judgment or trial – the inherent constitutionality of the second-trimester procedure ban itself.

□ The Office of the Attorney General notes that the Supreme Court of the United States “recently declined to hear a case involving an Alabama ban on dismemberment abortions held to be unconstitutional by a federal appellate court, but five other states – Texas, Arkansas, Kentucky, Louisiana and Ohio – have ongoing cases concerning dismemberment bans.” “I remain committed to protecting the value and dignity of fetal life by defending Indiana’s law banning this brutal and inhumane procedure,” General Hill says. “At this juncture, I believe our best path forward in this case is to proceed to summary judgment as we continue to gather evidence and formulate strategy.”

● We told you a few months ago to watch for county consolidation of services – potentially in part to avoid larger consolidations – and now Pulaski County is considering “sharing” a county engineer from another county to qualify for another $40,000 in Motor Vehicle Highway Account funding.

● Indiana’s alcohol laws are being challenged again, this time in federal court by a discrete group of plaintiffs that include a former Senate Democratic leader and represented by an Indiana University School of Law professor who has handled alcohol sales cases before the Supreme Court of the United States. In The Chicago Wine Co., et al., v. Holcomb, et al., No. 1:19-cv-02785-TWP-DML, the plaintiffs (the Dennis Neary of Indianapolis who is a named plaintiff is not former Senate minority leader Dennis Neary (D) now of Indianapolis), who are represented by attorneys from Epstein Cohen Seif & Porter of Indianapolis, including experienced alcohol law litigator and high-profile appellate advocate Alex Tanford, challenge the constitutionality of Indiana law, practices, and regulations that allow in-state wine retailers to sell and deliver wine directly to consumers but prohibit out-of-state wine retailers from doing so.

□ A the plaintiffs frame it, “This is a civil rights action brought pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983 challenging An out-of-state wine retailer, such as The Chicago Wine Company, and many other wine internet sellers throughout the United States, cannot sell, ship, and deliver to Indiana consumers because Indiana makes this practice illegal. The plaintiffs seek a declaratory judgment that this regulatory scheme is unconstitutional for Case two reasons: (1) it violates the Commerce Clause because it discriminates against out-of-state wine retailers engaged in interstate commerce and constitutes unlawful economic protectionism, and (2) it violates the Privileges and Immunities Clause of Article IV, section 2, because it denies nonresident wine merchants the privilege of engaging in their occupation in Indiana on terms equivalent to those given to citizens of Indiana.” In addition, they seek an injunction barring the defendants from enforcing these laws, practices and regulations, and requiring them to allow out-of-state wine retailers to sell, ship, and deliver wine to Indiana consumers upon equivalent terms as in-state wine retailers. Judge Tanya Walton Pratt of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana is assigned the case.

□ The plaintiffs are Hoosiers who are legally permitted to purchase, receive, possess, and drink wine at their respective residences, and have been unable to have their orders for delivery processed by at least three named online sales sites after entering Indiana as the state of residence. The Chicago Wine Company is an Illinois company that operates a retail store and engages in internet sales and makes deliveries nationwide in states where it is legal to do so. Many of its customers live in Indiana, and “It has developed long-term relationships with customers for whom it makes special purchases. It has received requests that it sell, ship, and deliver wine to Indiana from customers, but is unable to do so because Indiana law makes such interstate sales and deliveries unlawful. It intends to sell, ship, and deliver wines directly to consumers in Indiana if the rules and regulations prohibiting such sales and shipments are removed or declared unconstitutional.”

□ The plaintiffs allege that “By refusing to allow it to sell and deliver wine upon the same terms as retail in-state wine dealers, the State of Indiana is discriminating against interstate commerce and protecting the economic interest of local businesses by shielding them from competition, in violation of the Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution.” Because state law requires “retail wine dealers to deliver to consumers using their own vehicles and employees, and forbidding the use of common carriers, Indiana is assuring that only in-state wine dealers will be able to make home deliveries and is protecting them from competition from out-of-state wine sellers, in violation of the Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution.” Finally, claim the plaintiffs, “No substantial reason exists for denying citizens of Illinois the same privilege to consult about, advise on, obtain, sell, ship, and deliver wine to Indiana consumers as is given to citizens of Indiana. Indiana’s ban on wine sales and deliveries by out-of-state merchants denies Mr. Warner the privilege to engage in his occupation in the state upon the same terms as Indiana citizens, and therefore violates the Privileges and Immunities Clause in Article IV of the United States Constitution.”

□ The plaintiffs ask Judge Pratt to declare “Ind. Code §§ 7.1-3-21-3, 7.1-5-11-1.5, and other related laws, practices and regulations that prohibit out-of-state win retailers from selling, delivering, and shipping wine directly to Indiana consumers unconstitutional as a violation of the Commerce Clause,” and “Indiana’s law, practices and regulations that prohibit a nonresident from obtaining a license to sell, ship, and deliver wine directly to Indiana consumers unconstitutional as a violation of the Privileges and Immunities Clause.” They also seek an injunction prohibiting the State “from enforcing those rules and regulations and requiring them to allow out-of-state wine retailers to obtain licenses and to sell, ship, and deliver wine directly to customers in Indiana. Plaintiffs do not request that the State be enjoined from collecting any tax due on the sale of wine.”

□ Similarly . . . in the U.S. District Court for the District of Western Kentucky, the Epstein law firm and Tanford join forces again in Tannins of Indianapolis, LLC, et al. v. Bevin, et al., No. 3:19-cv-00504, a lawsuit filed against the governor of Kentucky and other commonwealth officials that largely mirrors the Indiana action. This lawsuit is also a civil rights action brought pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983 challenging the constitutionality of Kentucky law, practices, and regulations that allow in-state wine retailers to sell, deliver, and ship wine directly to consumers but prohibit out-of-state wine retailers from doing so.

□ An out-of-state wine retailer, such as Tannins’ Tastings – A Wine Experience, a wine bar it owns and operates in downtown Indianapolis, and other wine internet sellers throughout the United States, cannot sell, ship, and deliver to Kentucky consumers because Kentucky laws make this practice illegal. “The plaintiffs seek a declaratory judgment that this regulatory scheme is unconstitutional for two reasons: (1) it violates the Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution because it discriminates against out-of-state wine retailers engaged in interstate commerce, and (2) it violates the Privileges and Immunities Clause of Article IV, section 2 of the United States Constitution, because it denies non-resident wine merchants the privilege of engaging in their occupation in Kentucky on terms equivalent to those given to citizens of Kentucky. The plaintiffs seek a permanent injunction barring the defendants from enforcing these practices and regulations and requiring them to allow out-of-state wine retailers to sell, ship, and deliver wine to Kentucky consumers upon the same terms as in-state wine retailers.”

- Indiana’s state health commissioner, Dr. Kristina Box, on Monday signed what was described as a “statewide standing order” that will enable Hoosiers to obtain all tobacco-cessation products from Indiana pharmacists without a prescription, and also eliminate Medicaid recipient co-pay requirements for stop-smoking products used by pregnant women or women who are one year post-partum. The Medicaid program will also cover tobacco counseling during maternity care.

- Austin, the effective Ground Zero for the opioid (and AIDS and hepatitis) epidemic in Indiana, finally joins in the wave of federal litigation against opioid manufacturers, as City of Austin v. Purdue Pharma L.P. et al., No. 4:19-cv-00155, is filed on Wednesday in U.S. District Court for the District of Southern Indiana, removed from Scott County Superior Court 1 at Purdue Pharma’s request (Endo Pharmaceuticals Inc. is also a defendant). Frost Brown Todd LLC is the lead firm for the City of Austin.

- Despite all the attention directed to high-profile fatalities on I-65 and I-70, the almost 300-mile stretch of U.S. from the Illinois state line in Chicago to Evansville takes the title as the deadliest road in Indiana, with the 111 deaths between 2008 and 2017 on this road which parallels the Illinois border (about 10 per year) proving higher than the number of fatal accidents on any other road in Indiana. The numbers are derived by the driving data (fleet management software and GPS vehicle tracking devices) company Geotab from National Highway Traffic Safety Administration data.

- Expect the Request for Qualifications for the I-69 Section 6 Contract 5 project to be advertised July 26. This work includes the construction of I-69 from Fairview Road (equidistant between Smith Valley Road to the South and County Line Road to the north) in Johnson County’s White River Township to I-465, a system interchange at I-465 and I-69, and additional improvements on I-465 to I-70 to the west to I-65 to the east. This project is being procured as a Design-Build-Best Value contract . . . and construction is estimated to occur in calendar years 2021-2024.

- The Department of Correction promulgates an emergency rule that temporarily adds a noncode provision to authorize a community corrections program director or designee to deprive earned good time credit from a person placed in a community corrections program for any violation of one or more rules or conditions of the program.

● The Natural Resources Commission Tuesday unanimously declined a citizen petition for a rule change to amend the definition of “state park,” in 312 IAC 8-1.5-21-5.

□ The goal of the petition was to re-designate Salamonie River State Forest as Salamonie River State Park, and to identify Frances Slocum State Forest as a “small state park” – or transfer it back to status as a state recreation area. The unstated goal of the petition was to manage those state forests as state parks, a change which would exclude them from all forest management.

□ In a report presented to the Commission, the Department of Natural Resources multi-division committee that studied the proposal recommended the petition be denied, finding “no synergies or advantages, in terms of fiscal or resource management, with the request ... the reality is making such a change may actually reduce recreational opportunities, since hunting, various types of collecting and firewood cutting are not allowed or are limited under state park management.”

● The opening lines of the State’s two-page motion to dismiss (accompanied by an 18-page memorandum in support) the sexual harassment lawsuit filed against Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) and the State of Indiana: “The State of Indiana and Curtis T. Hill, Jr., in his official capacity as the Indiana Attorney General, by counsel, move to dismiss Counts I, II, VI, and VII against the State, as well as Counts III through V against the Attorney General, inasmuch as Plaintiffs actually bring claims against him in his official capacity. These counts should be dismissed under 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.” The response asserts that some of the claims “are barred by sovereign immunity and because the State of Indiana is not a ‘person’ for purposes of § 1983” of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, and the plaintiffs are also not covered by Title VII of the Civil Rights Act because “with respect to Plaintiffs who are legislative employees and an elected official, Indiana law explicitly provides that they are excluded from the State Civil Service System.”

□ The memo also argues that the allegations against the AG fail to meet the legal standard of a misuse of official power.

□ Perhaps of particular interest and importance in other unrelated proceedings going forward is that the State’s response suggests that the three plaintiffs who are House and Senate staffers “could be ‘personal staff’ of legislators,” which raises interesting implications for things such as public records laws and personnel discipline and pensions if taken to the extreme (despite prior case law).

IN the Economy

● We brought you the year-end numbers in our last issue, but here are the details for the June revenue collections. Revenues exceeded estimates (from the mid-April forecast) in every category except sales tax, driving General Fund revenue collections to the highest June level in state history. General Fund coffers received $2.044 billion during June, exceeding expectations by $85.5 million (4.4%). June revenue collections increased on a year-over-year basis, soaring over June 2018 by $127.6 million (6.7%). June 2019 posted higher individual and corporate income tax receipts than any prior month of June in state history. As a result, FY 2019 total General Fund revenues rocketed to a fiscal year-end record high of $16.406 billion – with fiscal year-end estimates exceeded by $266.8 million (1.7%).

□ Sales tax collections for June fell below the monthly estimate by $8.4 million (- 1.2%), totaling $675.7 million for the month, while also suffering a year-over-year shortfall of $4.2 million (- 0.6%). June becomes the only month of the fiscal year in which sales tax numbers failed to improve on a year-over-year basis. Sales taxes in FY 2019 reeled in a solid $7.915 billion – $51 million (0.6%) above year-end estimates from April – as well as posting a $252.4 million (3.2%) year-over-year increase from FY 2018.

□ Individual income taxes generated $604.6 million for the General Fund in June, which is $38.1 (6.7%) above the most recent monthly estimate, and $124 million (25.8%) north of June 2018 numbers. While individual income taxes met their monthly expectations during only half the months in FY 2019, the category finished the fiscal year with $99 million (1.7%) more than estimated, a total of $6.057 billion – up by $240.9 million (4.0%) from the FY 2018 tally.

□ Corporate tax collections registered $290.6 million during June, $42.3 million (17.1%) above the April forecast, and up on a year-over-year basis by $45 million (18.3%) from June 2018. Fiscal year-end corporate tax revenues equaled $948.3 million, $77.2 million (8.9%) above estimations and a staggering $287.9 million (30.4%) higher than in FY 2018, representing the highest corporate tax fiscal year-end collection numbers in state history ... despite continuing rate cuts.

□ Riverboat and racino wagering taxes in June hit their high for the fiscal year, with gaming contributing $53.7 million to state General Fund coffers – beating the April forecast by $16.8 million (4.5%); however, the two categories combined for an over-the-year decline of $45.3 million (- 45.8%). FY 2019 year-over-year performance for gaming taxes took a dip as well – though not as dramatic as the month of June – dropping by $1.1 million (- 0.26%) from FY 2018.

● The Governor requests a U.S. Department of Agriculture disaster designation for 88 counties – all but Benton, Rush, Shelby, and Warren counties – due to losses caused by flooding and excessive rain this planting season. A USDA disaster designation can be requested when at least 30% of one crop is damaged or lost in a county. The designation would allow emergency low-interest loans to be made available to farmers. The low-interest financing can also be made to counties contiguous to counties in the disaster zone, effectively adding the remaining four counties. The request was signed by the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, and Indiana Farm Service Agency Executive Director Steve Brown – whose home county, Warren, was ironically one of the four not included in the disaster declaration.

● In an important Hoosier economic metric that we’ve been tracking for you, the RV Industry Association’s May survey of manufacturers finds that total RV shipments ended the month with 39,724 wholesale shipments, a decrease of 14.2% from the 40,966 units shipped in April. Motorhomes finished the month with 4,886 units, down (-8.8%) compared to the May 2018 total of 5,356 units.

□ For the first five months of 2019, RV shipments have reached only 179,943 units, down by 22.1% from the 230,850 units at this same January - May point last year. The first five months of 2018 had all showed improvements over the prior year. July 2018 is now the last month in which RV shipments exceeded those of the same month in the previous year.

● Earthjustice, on behalf of Southwestern Indiana Citizens for Quality of Life and Valley Watch, appeals the Indiana Department of Environmental Management's grant of an air quality permit for the proposed $2.5 billion Riverview Energy coal-to-diesel plant (C2D) in Spencer County. As we've told you, this would be the nation's first C2D direct coal-hydrogenation project. The appellants contend that the 1.6 million tons of coal projected to be used each year "would emit massive amounts of hazardous air pollution every year, including known carcinogens like benzene and polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons, in addition to significant amounts of particulate matter and other pollutants that contribute to asthma. The refinery also would emit more than two million tons of greenhouse gases every year." They contend that this would adversely impact the health of those in the area.

□ The appeal alleges IDEM acted unlawfully in granting the air permit, contending:

- Issuance violated public participation requirements
- IDEM has no basis to determine the air pollution impacts
- Approval relied upon deficient and erroneous emissions calculations and deficient and inaccurate air quality models
- Permit requirements do not mandate the best available control technology for certain pollutants
- The permit fails to adequately address flaring emissions.

● A federal court in Ohio late last week approved a modified decree allowing American Electric Power Company to retire AEP's coal-fired plants in Indiana. AEP says the modification – the fifth amendment to a deal it originally reached in 2007 with regulators and other parties – will accelerate emission reduction from AEP's remaining coal-fired power plants in the Midwest; eliminate a requirement to install emission reduction equipment at the company's plant in Rockport; and retire unit 1 of the Rockport plant by the end of 2028.

● Indiana is one of 17 states receiving a grade of "A" from the Volcker Alliance, which examined the rainy day fund balances and related policies and practices of all 50 states. Rainy Day Fund Strategies: A CALL TO ACTION, serves up 10 "best-practice" recommendations for how states can strengthen their respective fiscal stability.

□ Indiana is cited as a "Best-Practice Example" for rules governing withdrawals from Rainy Day funds. "The statute governing Indiana's Counter-Cyclical Revenue and Economic Stabilization Fund requires a transfer into the general fund when the annual growth rate of that fund for the current fiscal year drops by 2 percent or more from the previous one. After the state auditor and budget director certify that condition, the state treasurer makes the transfer."

● ERAPSCO, joint venture of Sparton and USSI of Columbia City, is awarded a not-to-exceed $1,041,042,690 Naval Air Systems Command contract for the manufacture and delivery of a maximum quantity of 37,500 AN/SSQ-36B, 685,000 AN/SSQ-53G, 120,000 AN/SSQ-62F, and 90,000 AN/SSQ-101B production sonobuoys for fiscal years 2019-2023. Sonobuoys are air-launched expendable, electro-mechanical anti-submarine warfare acoustic sensors designed to relay underwater sounds associated with ships and subs. Columbia City will be the site of 49% of the work to be performed by September 2025.

● There were high hopes in St. Joseph County when Seres Automotive (SF Motors) purchased the hulking former AM General commercial assembly plant in Mishawaka, planning to invest $160 million in purchasing and retooling the purpose-built 675,500 square-foot facility on 35 acres so that the subsidiary of Chinese automaker Sokon Industry Group could establish "intelligent" electric vehicle manufacturing operations domestically. Seres planned to create up to 467 new jobs by 2020 and promised to hire many of the displaced workers from AM General. The Governor even attended the announcement in Mishawaka, and the Indiana Economic Development Corporation dangled up to $3.847 million in (performance-based) tax credits and up to $500,000 in training grants based on the company's job creation plans. IEDC also offered up to $653,000 in conditional tax credits from the Industrial Recovery Tax Credit ("DINO") program, which encourages companies to invest in former industrial facilities requiring significant rehabilitation or remodeling expenses. St. Joseph County offered additional incentives. But after only 85 employees were brought aboard, those employees were told this month by Seres that the promised new SF5 electric SUV for the domestic market "is on hold," with the SF Motors chief explaining to them, "The uncertain outcome of the U.S.-China trade tariffs has already forced many business decision makers to announce cancellations, delays or change their current plans."

□ Seres becomes the latest in a litany of (purported) electric vehicle manufacturers who have received state or local incentives to site in Indiana, only to fail – or, at best, to fail to meet any of the promised performance metrics (recall that many of these companies were start-up ventures that sought to set up shop in Anderson, Elkhart, Goshen, Muncie, and New Castle, among others, in part with funding from the 2009 federal economic stimulus package).

□ CleanTechnica writes, "How utterly confounding it must be for the people of Indiana to find that the person they expected to reinvigorate the local economy has instead killed opportunities for new industry to develop in the area."

● Grace College trims its workforce, eliminating 12 full- and part-time staff jobs, another nine vacant jobs face attrition, and several faculty members have been offered early retirement.

BRAUN, YOUNG BALK AT EXPANDED BACKGROUND CHECKS: Both of Indiana's U.S. Senators balk at support for universal background checks for all gun sales. That comes amid renewed debate over gun regulations in the wake of mass shootings in Texas and Ohio (Smith, Indiana Public Media). Federal background checks for gun purchases don't apply to many sales, including online. Legislation approved by the U.S. House would greatly expand the number of sales required to go through background checks. Sen. Todd Young (R-Ind.) won't say whether he'd support that expansion. "We are, of course, dealing with a constitutional right here, in the Second Amendment – recognizing that every single right has its limitations," Young says. Many gun regulation advocates want Congress to revive a federal ban on assault weapons. Sen. Mike Braun hinted he's open to that possibility. "We gotta do common sense things so that those of us that believe in the Second Amendment don't have harsher restrictions that get put in place," Braun says.

McCONNELL RECONSIDERS BACKGROUND CHECKS: Under intense pressure to take action on gun safety in the wake of two weekend massacres, Senator Mitch McConnell, the majority leader, expressed a new willingness Thursday to consider a measure expanding background checks for all gun purchasers, saying it will be "front and center" in a coming Senate debate on how to respond to gun violence (New York Times). "There is a lot of support for that," he said. Mr. McConnell, who has strongly opposed background checks in the past, made his remarks in an interview with a Kentucky radio host, Terry Meiners of WHAS in Louisville. While he did not support a bill requiring background checks, his remarks appeared to underscore the possibility of a shift in the politics of Washington's divisive gun debate. Mr. McConnell has refused to take up a background checks bill passed by the House because President Trump has threatened to veto it. But Mr. Trump appears increasingly open to the idea and said recently there is "great appetite for it." Mr. McConnell told Mr. Meiners that he had spoken with Mr. Trump and said the president was "very much open to this discussion."

INDIANA'S RED FLAG LAW STUDIED: In the wake of two shootings last weekend that killed a total of 31 people in El Paso and in Dayton, Ohio, momentum is building in Congress for legislation that would offer federal grants to states to help them pass and enforce red flag laws (New York Times). The few statistical studies of the effects of red flag laws have focused on Connecticut and Indiana, the first and second states to pass them. Connecticut's law was enacted in 1999, following a shooting at the state lottery headquarters in which five people, including the gunman, were killed. Jeff Swanson, a psychiatry and behavioral sciences professor at Duke University who worked on the studies, said researchers found that for every 10 to 20 gun-removal actions, one life was saved by averting a suicide. He said he believes the laws have probably also averted mass shootings, but that as a scientist, he does not know for sure, because that is something inherently almost impossible to study. "They're certainly not a panacea," Mr. Swanson said of the laws. "But I think they are one piece of the puzzle of gun-violence prevention."

COUNTRIES ISSUE TRAVEL WARNINGS FOR U.S.: Venezuela, Uruguay and Japan issued traveler warnings about U.S. gun violence after this weekend's massacres, AP reports. Japan's consulate in Detroit warned its citizens that the U.S. is a "gun society," and advised its citizens to pay attention to the potential for gunfire "everywhere" in the U.S.

HOLCOMB ANNOUNCES $22M FOR BROADBAND EXPANSION: Gov. Eric J. Holcomb today announced $22.1 million in funding for 11 broadband expansion infrastructure projects across the state as a part of the initial round of the Next Level Broadband program. "Hoosiers need affordable, quality internet regardless of where they live, work or go to school," Gov. Holcomb said (Howey Politics Indiana). "Access to broadband brings countless opportunities and that's why I'm excited to see these key infrastructure projects positively impact economic development, health, agriculture and quality of life." This funding will provide broadband infrastructure to more than 4,800 homes and commercial locations in 12 counties. The $100 million Next Level Broadband program is the largest single state investment in broadband. For the initial round of funding, service providers could apply for up to $5 million per project to expand service to unserved areas if they provided at least a 20 percent match. Unserved areas are those without at least one telecommunication provider offering internet fast enough to provide the most basic services – at least 10 Mbps download and 1 Mbps upload. In addition to the $22.1 million awarded through Next Level Broadband, the seven telecommunications providers and utility cooperatives contributed $14 million in matching funds, resulting in $36.1 million total investment for broadband. "I'm thrilled to think about how many communities in unserved areas will get access to broadband through this grant program," Lieutenant Governor Suzanne Crouch said. "Gov. Holcomb's Next Level Connections initiative is a significant step towards bridging the digital divide and bringing greater opportunities for all Hoosiers."

HOLCOMB CLEARED OF ETHICS ACCUSATION OVER FLIGHTS: The Indiana inspector general has concluded no state laws or ethics rules were violated when Gov. Eric Holcomb last year flew to two Republican Governors Association meetings on private planes paid for by the parent company of Gary's Majestic Star casinos (Carden, NWI Times). In an investigative report released this week, Inspector General Lori Torres determined Holcomb was under no obligation to list the trips as gifts on his state financial disclosure statement because the flights were arranged by the RGA, intended to benefit the RGA, and reported, as required, to federal tax authorities as in-kind contributions to the Republican governors group. According to the IG report, Spectacle Entertainment, formerly known as Centaur Gaming, spent $21,486.15 to fly the governor and wife Janet Holcomb to the July 22-25 RGA meeting in Aspen, Colorado, and $33,961.95 to take the Holcombs to the Nov. 27-29 RGA meeting in Scottsdale, Arizona. "Although it is likely that the governor's attendance at the RGA meetings, and therefore the flights, had some benefit to the governor and/or first lady, the OIG found no evidence to dispute the claim that the flights primarily benefited the RGA," Torres said.

WABASH VALLEY FARMERS FRET TRADE WAR: Chinese companies have ceased purchases of U.S. agricultural products, a blow to Wabash Valley and Midwestern farmers in an intensifying trade war with the United States (Greninger, Terre Haute Tribune-Star). China's commerce ministry said Tuesday the measure was in response to President Trump's announcement last week of new tariffs on Chinese imports. The new 10 percent tariffs on $300 billion of retail goods such as clothes, shoes and toys, are set to take effect Sept. 1. "Every third soybean grown in the U.S. went to China, but now they are not taking any, so it is a big deal," said Brad Burbrink, an owner in BE N AG Family Farm in southeastern Vigo County, which farms 6,000 acres. "The problem is China has not been taking anything now from us probably for the last nine months," Burbrink said, especially in soybeans. "Exports are dead right now and I don't know how much worse it is going to get, but it is definitely an issue. It would sure spur the agricultural market and make a huge difference if we had China on board" to take agricultural products, he said. The action taken by China in the trade war "is a devastating blow," said Jeff Gormong, who serves as the District 7 director on the Indiana Farm Bureau Inc. board of directors, Indiana's largest farm organization. "We were already having a very tough year and this will cut into our market. But, I think farmers for the most part understand and believe that China has to be dealt with" due to alleged unfair trade practices, Gormong said.

TRUMP LASHES OUT AT LOCAL LEADERS IN DAYTON, EL PASO: On a day when President Trump vowed to tone down his rhetoric and help the country heal following two mass slayings, he did the opposite — lacing his visits Wednesday to El Paso and Dayton, Ohio, with a flurry of attacks on local leaders and memorializing his trips with grinning thumbs-up photos (Washington Post). In his only public remarks during the trip, Trump lashed out at Sen. Sherrod Brown of Ohio and Dayton Mayor Nan Whaley, both Democrats, over their characterization of his visit with hospital patients in Dayton. He alleged that their news conference immediately after the president's visit "was a fraud." As he departed the White House on Wednesday morning en route to Ohio, Trump told reporters he would refrain from attacking his adversaries during the trip. "I would like to stay out of the political fray," the president said. Asked about his rhetoric, he said he thinks it "brings people together" and added, "I think we have toned it down." That detente lasted only a few minutes. Answering a reporter's question about Biden, Trump pounced. "Joe is a pretty incompetent guy," the president said. "Joe Biden has truly lost his fastball, that I can tell you." By the time the president had left Dayton, he was back on Twitter and sniping at Democrats, a tirade triggered by his consumption of cable television news aboard Air Force One. "Watching Sleepy Joe Biden making a speech. Sooo Boring! The LameStream Media will die in the ratings and clicks with this guy," the president wrote.

INDOT TO CLOSE I-465 SOUTHEAST THIS WEEKEND: The Indiana Department of Transportation (INDOT) will continue road work around Marion County this weekend with I-465 closing on the southeast side this weekend (CBS4). INDOT says contractors will work to repair winter damage and improve pavement conditions in five different zones around Indianapolis interstates. Full closures: I-465 EB/NB from I-65 to I-70

ALL LANES CLOSED Friday, August 9 at 9 p.m. to August 24. Detour: Thru traffic is asked to take I-70 EB through Indianapolis back to I-465 NB. From I-74 WB: Take I-465 SB to I-65 NB to I-70 EB back to I-465 NB.

CHISOX, YANKEES TO PLAY ON FIELD OF DREAMS: If you build it, the White Sox and Yankees will come. The Sox and Yankees will play a regular season game at the "Field of Dreams" diamond next season in Dyersville, Iowa, where the award-winning baseball movie was filmed in 1988 (Chicago Sun-Times). Construction on a temporary 8,000 seat ballpark at the site will begin later this month. The Sox-Yankees game will be the first major-league contest played at the popular tourist destination. The ballpark's design will pay homage to the original Comiskey Park, home of the White Sox from 1910-1990, including the shape of the outfield and bullpens beyond the center-field fence. The game will be played on a Thursday and televised nationally on Fox at 6 p.m. (CT).

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: If anything happens on gun reforms, it will all come down to President Trump. And as we've seen in so many other cases, where the president ends up often depends on who he talks to last. So we've seen Trump float the idea of expanded background checks, Senate Majority Leader McConnell say he would consider such legislation after the summer recess, but the NRA's Wayne LaPierre will oppose. And he has considerable clout with the president. So we're likely to witness a lot of rhetoric and no action until Trump decides what to do. And we'll repeat all of this after the next massacre (which might have been avoided last night at a Missouri Walmart). - Brian A. Howey

BUTTIGIEG ROLLS OUT RURAL HEALTH PLAN: Democratic presidential candidate Pete Buttigieg on Friday rolled out a sweeping plan to expand access to health services in rural communities, while addressing drug addiction and tackling rising maternal mortality rates across the country (Politico). "We need to lift rural communities up as places of opportunity, both for this generation and future ones. That work begins with securing the health of all rural residents," Buttigieg, the mayor of South Bend, Ind., said in a statement. Buttigieg proposes to expand access to health care in rural areas by implementing a "Medicare for All Who Want It" approach and increasing federal subsidies for plans sold through the Obamacare exchanges. He aims to beef up the health workforce through loan forgiveness programs and proposes increasing Medicare reimbursement rates specifically for providers in underserved communities.

WARREN 2ND IN IOWA POLL; BUTTIGIEG AT 8%: Joe Biden leads the field in the Monmouth poll in Iowa, the first DNC-approved poll in the key early state taken since the second round of debates last month. He has 28 percent to Warren's 19 percent (Politico). Harris is in third with 11 percent, Sanders has 9 percent and Buttigieg has 8 percent. Andrew Yang, the entrepreneur running an outsider presidential campaign centered on the promise of a universal basic income, has qualified for the fall Democratic primary debates. Yang crossed the second of two required debate thresholds on Thursday, when he polled at 2 percent in a Monmouth University poll in Iowa. He had previously received at least 2 percent in three other polls approved by the Democratic National Committee and has hit the required 130,000 unique donor mark. At the other end of the spectrum, onetime Democratic phenom Beto O'Rourke was outperformed in the poll by Yang, clocking in at under 1 percent.

BIDEN DEFENDS REMARKS: Joe Biden on Thursday adamantly defended his assertions that President Donald Trump embraced white supremacists after a deadly demonstration in Charlottesville, Va., engaging in an animated exchange after his public remarks here (Politico). After the former vice president's turn on the soap box at the Iowa State Fair on Thursday, a Breitbart reporter confronted Biden, accusing him of mischaracterizing Trump's remarks after the 2017 demonstrations. At the suggestion that Trump had condemned the actions of marching white supremacists, Biden grew adamant, wagging his finger as he described the demonstrators as hate-filled with "veins bulging." "No he did not, he walked out and he said — let's get this straight — he said there were very fine people in both groups," Biden said as he slogged through a scrum of media and supporters at the fair. "They were chanting anti-Semitic slogans, carrying flags."

TRUMP CAMPAIGN EMBRACES WHITE SUPREMACIST CHARGE: What's new: Trump campaign officials and sources close to the president tell Axios that they believe Democrats' extraordinary charge that the president is a "white supremacist" will actually help him win in 2020, Axios' Alayna Treene reports (Axios). Why it matters: These Trump allies tell us that the claim by Democratic opponents is not only emboldening his base, but also alienating some mainstream Republicans who think Democrats have gone too far. At least six Democratic presidential contenders have called President Trump a white supremacist, and several others are suggesting the same. A Trump campaign official said: "They're trying to make the case that anyone who supports this president is a racist. They're talking about [nearly] half the country." AP's Jonathan Lemire quotes former aide Anthony Scaramucci as saying Trump is "feeling smug. He doesn't think he is facing any challenges. His attitude is, 'The economy is doing great, I am putting the hammer down on China, the rest is just noise.'" "The media is against him, his supporters are for him."

DEMOCRATS WHO HAVE CALLED TRUMP A WHITE SUPREMACIST: Sens. Elizabeth Warren, Bernie Sanders and Kirsten Gillibrand, as well as Beto O'Rourke and Pete Buttigieg, have all publicly called the president a white supremacist since Saturday's El Paso massacre (Axios). Buttigieg asked if he thinks Trump is a white supremacist: "Yes, I do. At best, he's emboldening people with that intention."

BUTTIGIEG CITES 'WHITE PROBLEM': Presidential candidate Pete Buttigieg said Thursday "systemic racism is a white problem," adding that the United States isn't "even halfway done dealing with" it (Fox News). The South Bend mayor made the comments in front of the National Association of Black Journalists conference in Miami days after a shooting in El Paso, Texas, that is being investigated as a hate crime. "I think a president like this one is not even possible unless something is already deeply wrong in our country," he said about President Trump's rhetoric, which is under scrutiny in the wake of the shooting in the city that killed 22 people. "The story in my region and the story for my generation reflects those deeper problems growing up in an era of endless war and school shootings."

ROSS FRETS FALLOUT FROM TRUMP FUNDRAISER: Billionaire New York real estate developer Stephen Ross privately expressed qualms about going ahead with his Hamptons fundraiser for President Trump today, Axios' Jonathan Swan reports. Liberal customers had threatened to boycott Equinox and SoulCycle, the high-end fitness brands owned by a parent company that Ross chairs. Ross, who also owns the NFL's Miami Dolphins, "freaked out" at the backlash, a source said, adding that Trump associates persuaded him to go ahead with the event at his Southampton mansion. "Stay strong, it's not going to be that bad. Not that many people are going to boycott the gym," was another source's paraphrasing of what Trump's associates conveyed to Ross.

Congress

YOUNG DISCUSSES FORT WAYNE HOUSING EVICTIONS: A roundtable discussion Wednesday generated plenty of ideas for shrinking Fort Wayne's home eviction rate, the 13th highest among the nation's large cities. Among the suggestions: Increase funding for affordable housing from the public and private sectors (Francisco, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). Improve legal protections for tenants. Provide better support services for low-income renters. Use lower-cost manufactured housing. Persuade landlords and tenants to take advantage of available options for education and training on their rights and responsibilities. U.S. Sen. Young, R-Ind., said the nation suffers from a "housing affordability crisis." He has introduced bills addressing it, including legislation signed into law that aims to help public housing voucher recipients relocate to lower-poverty areas. "Getting people into safe and stable housing saves on health care and education expenses and public safety and corrections," Young said.

TWITTER SUSPENDS MCCONNELL ACCOUNT: Twitter has suspended Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell's reelection campaign account Thursday after posting a video showing threats against the long-time Kentucky Republican. McConnell's campaign spokesperson, Kevin Golden, called out the social platform for its decision in a statement to CBS News. The Republican Party, Trump campaign and other GOP organizations are halting their Twitter spending in response.

General Assembly

DeLANEY PUSHES FOR VIRTUAL SCHOOL STUDY: Democrats at the statehouse want legislative leaders to take a closer look at virtual charter schools in Indiana as two scandal-ridden schools prepare to close (Lindsay, Indiana Public Media). Rep. Ed DeLaney (D-Indianapolis) is frustrated by the state of virtual learning in Indiana, especially because of the problems facing the two closing virtual charter schools, Indiana Virtual School and Indiana Virtual Pathways Academy. Now he and other House Democrats are asking legislative leaders to study the risks and rewards of virtual schools as part of lawmakers' summer study committees. DeLaney says it's especially crucial since lawmakers have allocated millions of dollars in state funding to the schools. Early findings of a state audit recently revealed the schools owe the state more than $40 million in tuition support. "The money was lost or wasted and it's our responsibility to figure out how, and to make sure that doesn't happen again," he says.

PORTAGE NEEDS FUNDS TO COMBAT RISING LAKE MICHIGAN: A bipartisan panel of Hoosier lawmakers agrees that both urgent and long-term funding is needed to prevent further destruction of Portage lakefront visitor amenities and to address Lake Michigan beach erosion in Indiana generally (Carden, NWI Times). But despite hearing nearly four hours of increasingly dire testimony on the issue Wednesday, the General Assembly's Interim Study Committee on Agriculture and Natural Resources won't actually be doing anything about it. Portage Mayor John Cannon said that could be too late for the $17 million city-managed lakefront pavilion that's the gateway for many of the 3.6 million annual visitors to the Indiana Dunes National Park. He noted that beach erosion, rising lake levels and strong storms already have dramatically shrunk the beach, destroyed a concrete walkway to it and toppled a handicap-accessible observation deck. Now, without $2 million in immediate sand replenishment, the 3,500-square-foot Portage lakefront pavilion could meet the same fate in the next 10 years, Cannon warned. "We don't have that kind of revenue," he said.

STUDY COMMITTEES PROBE VIRTUAL SCHOOLS: State Rep. Tonya Pfaff, D-Terre Haute, is among a group of legislators calling upon the state Legislative Council to assign issues surrounding virtual charter schools to a summer study committee (Loughlin, Terre Haute Tribune-Star). The letter, addressed to House Speaker Brian Bosma, was signed by Pfaff, and representatives Vernon Smith, Edward DeLaney and Sheila Klinker; all four are Democrats who serve on the House Education Committee during legislative session. "Recent scandals surrounding both Indiana Virtual School and Indiana Virtual Pathways Academy highlight the need for swift action from the General Assembly to increase oversight and accountability in Indiana's virtual charter program," the letter states. Recently-passed legislation, HEA 1400, urged the Legislative Council to assign the topic to study committee, but that did not happen. The legislation received broad bipartisan support, passing the House by a vote of 93-0 and Senate by a vote of 48-0, according to the letter. The four legislators "urge the Legislative Council to reconsider."

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB DINES AT THE BRICK - Gov. Eric Holcomb gave local residents a preview of an announcement of $22.1 million in funding for 11 broadband expansion infrastructure projects around the state, including Bartholomew County (East, Columbus Republic). And since The Brick was on his way to the announcement in Perry County, he stopped by the iconic restaurant for one of his favorite cheeseburgers with lettuce, tomato, pickle, and grilled onion and side of chips. It was a surprise to The Brick customers who don't see Indiana's governor drop by for lunch, but they took the media attention in stride. According to Holcomb's staff, Thursday's visit to The Brick was a highlight of his week.

GOVERNOR: UTILITIES GET BROADBAND FUNDS - Indiana Gov. Eric Holcomb announced Thursday two Indiana electric cooperatives and their partner organizations will receive nearly $7 million in grants from the Next Level Connections Broadband Grant Program. The program, in its first phase of awards, is designed to foster broadband infrastructure investment in unserved areas of the state (Howey Politics Indiana). "Several of Indiana's electric cooperatives are responding to this need and are making significant investments to bring this essential service to the Hoosiers they serve," said John Gastrom, CEO of Indiana Electric Cooperatives. "These grants help cooperatives as they continue to find ways to close the rural digital divide." The two Indiana electric cooperatives and their partners received a total of $6,944,558 in this phase of the grant program include: Southern Indiana Power and Perry-Spencer Rural Telephone Cooperative, Inc.: $6,500,000 serving Perry and Spencer Counties. Tipmont REMC: $444,558 serving northwestern Tippecanoe County.

HEALTH: DROP IN OVERDOSE DEATHS - Indiana health experts say a sharp increase in naloxone prescriptions may be responsible for a minor drop in overdose-related deaths in the state (Hogan, Indiana Public Media). Following a nationwide trend, the number of naloxone prescriptions nearly doubled from 10,460 in 2017 to 19,472 in 2018. The total number of Hoosiers who died because of drug overdoses dropped from roughly 1,846 in 2017 to just over 1,600 in 2018. That's about a 13% decline according to The Center for Disease Control data. Dan Rusyniak is the Chief Medical officer for the Family and Social Services Administration. He says Indiana has been tackling the epidemic on all fronts. "I think one of the more important goals is to realize what impact we can have when we focus on a problem," Rusyniak says. "And the problem with opioid use disorder has really come into public attention because the number of deaths but the bigger problem really is the addiction epidemic."

HEALTH: INDIANA RECEIVES $8.4M FROM HSS FOR OPIOIDS - A federal agency has awarded Indiana $8.4 million to help fight the opioid epidemic by boosting access to substance abuse treatment and mental health services (AP). The funding was announced Thursday by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. The agency says the funding will enable academic institutions and community health centers funded by the federal Health Resources and Services Administration to expand access to both treatment and mental health services. The funding will also help organizations fight the opioid crisis in Indiana's rural areas. The new funding supports the Health and Human Services' Five-Point Opioid Strategy drafted in 2017.

HEALTH: LITTLE DATA ON RED FLAG LAWS - While many states have passed "red flag" gun laws in the aftermath of mass shootings, there is no data to support that they reduce homicides, experts say. "Red flag" laws allow guns to be temporarily taken away from individuals who may be dangerous to themselves or others (Hurt, Statehouse File). "Every state that's put a "red flag" law on the books has done so in response to a homicide, usually a mass homicide," said Aaron Kivisto, associate professor of clinical psychology at the University of Indianapolis. "And to date, we have no research that has looked at whether these laws have any effect on homicide let alone mass homicide." Indiana's law allows law enforcement to seize and temporarily keep firearms from mentally unstable or dangerous individuals without a warrant or judge's signature.

NATIONAL GUARD: GEN. CARR FACES DEFAMATION LAWSUIT - Maj. Gen. Courtney Carr, Adjutant General of the Indiana National Guard, is being sued in Marion County Superior Court. Carr is accused of having an affair with a subordinate, then having the woman who reported the affair harassed and intimidated (Darling and Davis, WIBC). The woman who filed the lawsuit, Shari McLaughlin, who was a contract employee working with the Indiana National Guard, accuses Carr of getting her fired from her subsequent job after she had resigned from her contractor job with the Guard because of harassment. McLaughlin said in the court filing that Carr "intentionally induced breach of McLaughlin's contract" with Alutiiq Global Solutions "without legal justification and for personal reasons of a vendetta" against her. While she worked for Skyline Unlimited, a contracting firm working with the Guard, she said Carr was going after her for having reported a sexual affair he was having with her "mentor". The court documents also detail McLaughlin's knowledge of other sexual relationships going on between some of her co-workers and active-duty members of the Indiana National Guard. The filing accuses Carr of threatening to pull a contract with Alutiiq if they continued to employ McLaughlin. She said Alutiiq "accommodated Carr's request" and fired her. McLaughlin is suing for damages, lost wages, pain and suffering, and defamation. She also requests a trial by jury.

EDUCATION: IU HAS RECORD YEAR IN RESEARCH FUNDING - Indiana University President Michael McRobbie says the university broke a record in the amount of research money it received in 2019. During a presentation to the IU Board of Trustees, McRobbie said the university took in $680 million in external funding, representing more than 2,800 IU research proposals (Mills, Inside Indiana Business). "This is a truly extraordinary accomplishment," said McRobbie "It reflects the excellence and importance of IU faculty research in a funding environment that continues to grow increasingly more competitive." IU says the previous external funding record for the school was $614 million set in fiscal year 2016. McRobbie said outside dollars for research from both public and private sources have increased nearly 45-percent since FY 2009. The university says 66 percent of all IU's research dollars came from federal sources in FY 2019. Of that amount, $235 million came from the National Institutes of Health supports health sciences research. Much of that money goes to fund research at the IU School of Medicine.

EDUCATION: MOLD AT FOSTER, McNUTT QUADS AT IU - Students at Indiana University will move into their dorms in a little over a week (CBS4). But thousands of students won't be in the dorm they originally planned. That's because IU is still renovating several dorms and working to remedy a mold outbreak that happened last year. The two dorms affected are Foster and McNutt Quads. Mold issues started in those dorms last year.

MEDIA: WTHR-TV SALE FINALIZED - The sale of WTHR-TV in Indianapolis has been finalized in a cash deal worth $535 million. Virginia-based broadcast company TEGNA Inc. (NYSE: TGNA) announced it has completed the acquisition of Dispatch Broadcast Group's TV and radio stations in Indy and Columbus, Ohio (Mills, Inside Indiana Business). WTHR and its sister station in Columbus, WBNS-TV, have long been powerhouse television stations in the Midwest. "WTHR and WBNS are broadcasters of the highest caliber, and a natural fit for TEGNA as we expand our portfolio of Big Four affiliates in top markets," said Dave Lougee, president and CEO of TEGNA. "These acquisitions further enhance our commitment to excellence in local journalism while creating value for our shareholders." In addition to the TV stations, Tegna also purchased WBNS radio in Columbus.

MEDIA: JACK HOWEY FUNERAL SATURDAY - Funeral services for the late Indiana journalist Jack E. Howey will take place at 2 p.m. Saturday at Union Chapel United Methodist Church, 2720 E 86th St, Indianapolis. Howey was an editor of Howey Politics Indiana.

SPORTS: UPLAND BEER TO BE SOLD AT IU FOOTBALL GAMES - Sports fans may want to pack an Upland Brewing Co. koozie the next time they're gearing up for a game at Indiana University's gridiron or putting green (AP). The Monroe County Alcoholic Beverage Board gave Upland permission Wednesday to sell alcohol at Indiana University's Memorial Stadium and golf course. Football fans will be able to buy beer and wine in Memorial Stadium as soon as this fall, but golfers will have to wait until next spring to grab a brew at Upland's pared-down restaurant concept in the golf course's new clubhouse. "This is an extension of an ongoing and really strong partnership with IU," said Upland President David Bower. "It's not just beer and sports. It runs deep."

WHITE HOUSE: GORDON OUT AT DNI - President Trump on Thursday abruptly decided to install Joseph Maguire, the director of the National Counterterrorism Center, as the acting director of national intelligence after Dan Coats steps down from the post next week (New York Times). Mr. Trump announced his decision to elevate Mr. Maguire, a retired vice admiral who once led the Navy's Special Warfare Command, on Twitter shortly after confirming that Sue Gordon, the nation's No. 2 intelligence official — who by law had been in line to temporarily take over as director — would instead depart with Mr. Coats on Aug. 15. Ms. Gordon, who served more than 30 years in intelligence posts at the C.I.A. and other agencies, informed Mr. Trump of her decision to retire in a letter on Thursday after it became clear that he would not permit her to rise to the position of acting director.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP MAY COMMUTE BLAGO'S SENTENCE - President Donald Trump says he's "very strongly" considering commuting the sentence of former Illinois Gov. Rod Blagojevich, who is serving a 14-year prison term on multiple federal corruption convictions (AP). Trump suggested more than a year ago that he was considering a commutation for Blagojevich, who then filed paperwork requesting a commutation. The Republican president told reporters Wednesday night while returning to Washington aboard Air Force One that he thought Blagojevich, a Democrat, had been treated "unbelievably unfairly."

WHITE HOUSE: SUMMIT ON ONLINE EXTREMISM TODAY - The White House has invited tech giants including Facebook, Google and Twitter to a discussion Friday about the rise of violent online extremism, one of the Trump administration's first major engagements on the issue despite years of warnings that racial and ethnic animus on social media is linked to some of the country's deadliest attacks (Washington Post). But President Trump's own attendance isn't certain — he's scheduled to be in New York raising campaign cash — leaving some to question the sincerity of the effort after months during which Trump has chastised social-media companies as his political foes.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SCHEDULE - President Trump will leave the White House at 9:30 a.m. en route to Westhampton Beach, N.Y., where he will attend a roundtable with supporters and fundraising lunch. At 1:20 p.m., the president will depart for Water Mill, N.Y., where he will deliver remarks at another fundraiser. He will leave at 3:05 p.m. en route to Bedminster, N.J.

IMMIGRATION: BORDER ARRESTS FALL IN JULY - Border Patrol arrested roughly 72,000 migrants at the southwestern border in July, according to statistics published Thursday by Customs and Border Protection (Politico). The latest statistics represent a 24 percent drop compared with June and mark the second month in a row in which border arrests declined.

ECONOMY: RECESSION ODDS RISE - The likelihood of a U.S. recession in the next 12 months rose to 35% in an August survey of economists, from 31% forecast previously, as global trade tensions fuel economic uncertainty (Bloomberg). Growth in the world's biggest economy will average 2.3% this year, down from 2.5% seen in a July survey. Gross domestic product expansion is forecast to slow to a 1.8% annualized pace in the third quarter, from 3.1% in the first three months of the year and 2.1% in the second quarter. "Trade tensions are needlessly roiling financial markets, which could eventually destabilize a stable economy," Parul Jain, chief investment strategist at Macrofin Analytics LLC in Wayne, New Jersey, said in comments attached to her survey response.

MEDIA: FACEBOOK TO PAY FOR CONTENT - Facebook Inc. FB 2.71% is offering news outlets millions of dollars for the rights to put their content in a news section that the company hopes to launch later this year, according to people familiar with the matter (Wall Street Journal). Representatives from Facebook have told news executives they would be willing to pay as much as $3 million a year to license entire stories, headlines and previews of articles from news outlets, the people said. The outlets pitched by Facebook on its news tab include Walt Disney Co.'s ABC News, Wall Street Journal parent Dow Jones, The Washington Post and Bloomberg, the people said.

MISSISSIPPI: ICE RAIDS LEAVE KIDS WITH NO PARENTS - Mississippi residents rallied around terrified children left with no parents and migrants locked themselves in their homes for fear of being arrested yesterday, a day after the country's largest immigration raid in a decade, AP reports. 680 people were arrested, but more than 300 had been released by yesterday with notices to appear before immigration judges. Those released included 18 juveniles, with the youngest being 14 years old. "The children are scared," said Ronaldo Tomas, speaking in Spanish, who said his cousin with two children was detained in one of the raids. 150 students were absent yesterday from the county's 4,000-student district. School officials are trying to coax parents into letting their children return through phone calls and home visits.

MISSOURI: MAN IN BODY ARMOR ARRESTED AT WALMART - Police are investigating after an "armed individual" was arrested at a Missouri Walmart Neighborhood Market on Thursday evening (Tribune Media). The incident happened at 3150 W. Republic Rd., according to a Facebook post from the Springfield Police Department. Police said the man was wearing body armor and military fatigues when he walked into the store around 4:30 p.m., according to a report from KYTV. He was carrying a rifle, roughly 100 rounds of ammunition and was walking around the store recording video with a cellphone. "His intent was not to cause peace or comfort ... He's lucky he's alive still, to be honest," Lt. Mike Lucas told KYTV. A store manager pulled the fire alarm to evacuate shoppers in the store, the report states. An off-duty firefighter held the man at gunpoint until police could arrive and detain him.

CITIES: STUDENT BROUGHT GUN TO TECH HS - A weapon was discovered in a student's backpack at Arsenal Technical High School on Thursday (Fox59). Indianapolis Public Schools says IPS Police were immediately called and IPS protocol was followed, but didn't say what that protocol is. According to the school district, no other students were around when the weapon was discovered. "Student safety and security will continue to be our priority as we provide a positive educational experience," IPS wrote in a statement.

CITIES: VIGIL AGAINST VIOLENCE IN MUNCIE - Two mass shootings in Ohio and Texas and a close call in Muncie after an armed student was arrested near a school became a reason for people to unite on Thursday for a vigil on the Ball State campus. Muncie residents gathered to honor lives lost and connect the community as a new school year begins (WRTV). Standing side by side, a crowd gathered on Ball State's campus to remember and reflect on the lives of 31 people killed in mass shootings in Dayton and El Paso. "This is becoming all too familiar. We are all just folks, aren't we?" Sarah Mahboudi, a Ball State alumna, said. "We are all just muddling through this life and trying to make it better. And our motto should be to respect each other and to realize this is not normal. This should not become our new normal." The vigil came just a day after learning about an armed student arrested near Muncie Central High School makes unifying now more critical than ever before. "It's all too close; it's all too close. If you think of humanity as your neighbors, of all of humanity as your neighborhood, and your brothers and sisters around the world — it's all too close," Mahboudi said.

CITIES: HOGSETT WANTS SLUR INVESTIGATED - Indianapolis Mayor Joe Hogsett has called for an independent investigation into a derogatory slur aimed at his newly hired public housing director and for an outside review of how public housing is organized in Indianapolis. FOX59 obtained a letter dated July 30 that Hogsett sent to Indianapolis Housing Agency (IHA) Executive Director John Hall after the mayor became aware of an allegation that a member of the board of Insight Development Corporation, IHA's development arm, used a slur to describe Hall during a conversation with an employee. At the time of the insult, the board member was reportedly belittling Hall's attempts to reform the agency. "The nature of these allegations is unacceptable and, if proven true, I can assure you and your viewers that action will be taken," the mayor told FOX59 in an exclusive interview in which he backed Hall. "He's a reformer and I'm sure that decisions he is making are changing things at IHA and human nature being what it is perhaps he's engaged some people who are trying to push back."

CITIES: DAV COMMANDER COULD FACE TRIAL - A former Disabled American Veterans commander accused of swiping about $40,000 from a Crown Point chapter said he wants to see his criminal case go to trial, but his defense attorney has some hesitations (NWI Times). Kent M. Proctor, 69, of Gary, appeared before Judge Clarence Murray on Thursday in Lake Criminal Court on one level 6 felony theft count. During the hearing, which comes a week after Lake Criminal Court Judge Pro Tempore Kathleen Sullivan granted a continuance in the case, defense attorney Susan Severtson said Proctor's case first appeared in Lake County Veterans Treatment Court in 2017, but "things didn't work out for him, unfortunately," and the case was sent back to Lake Criminal Court.

CITIES: COLUMBUS COUNCIL EYES TAX ABATEMENT - A Columbus-based manufacturer may receive a 10-year tax abatement for its $1 million investment in new manufacturing equipment if the request is approved by Columbus City Council later this month (Columbus Republic). The council approved the tax abatement resolution Tuesday for Rightway Fasteners Inc. for new manufacturing equipment to accommodate an increase in production volume. The $1 million investment includes one cold forging machine, four sorting machines and two shot blast machines, company officials said. The planned purchase and installation would result in 385 retained jobs and seven new positions by the end of 2019.

COUNTIES: FIGHT COMING OVER VIGO JAIL DESIGN - With the rezoning of property approved and the final purchase of property imminent, Vigo County commissioners are looking forward to the next phase of jail planning and construction. But an outspoken citizens group isn't ready to give up its fight for a less costly jail just yet (Terre Haute Tribune-Star). Commissioner Judy Anderson said she's glad to have rezoning of property behind the commissioners and to be moving on in the jail debate that's been ongoing for years. The Terre Haute City Council voted 6-3 Aug. 1 in favor of rezoning just more than 22 acres at 500 W. Honey Creek Drive for a new Vigo County jail.

Cris Johnston: Healthy reserves protect essential government services

the debate: How important is it that Indiana maintain a surplus?

Because of the strong economic stewardship of Gov. Eric J. Holcomb and our partners in the General Assembly, the state of Indiana closed the fiscal books earlier this month with more than $2 billion in reserves. This is great news for Hoosier taxpayers.

The general fund budget adopted in April appropriates over $34 billion over the next two years for programs and services to Hoosiers, including Medicaid and child protective services. More than half of the budget goes to our K-12 schools.

Many families create emergency funds for unexpected disruptions in monthly budgets. Similarly, states maintain reserves to pay for services when tax revenue, primarily sales and income taxes decline, but more Hoosiers require government services. Yes, $2 billion in reserves is a significant amount of money, yet it translates into running the government for roughly 43 days.

Sustained fiscal discipline creates the flexibility to consider how future investments are made. Holcomb and the General Assembly have been presented with those opportunities recently. Earlier this year, the governor, with the support of the General Assembly, used reserves to pay off a pension liability that schools currently fund. This investment by the state will save local school districts $140 million over the next two years, with continued savings in the years following, providing dollars that can go straight into teachers' paychecks. This is just one example of a prudent, one-time use of reserves to offset future ongoing costs.

With the closing of the books for fiscal 2019, the governor identified new opportunities for making near-term cash investments that will free up future resources. Several higher education building projects, state fairgrounds infrastructure, and finishing the free flow of U.S. 31 were approved in the most recent budget for borrowing, but now can be paid with cash. This avoids the payment of over $100 million in interest costs over the next 20 to 25 years.

Holcomb's decision to prioritize strong reserves and a balanced budget is a key contributor to our AAA rating, the highest rating a state can receive. Indiana is one of 13 states with a AAA rating from all three rating agencies. Moody's Investors Service recently recognized the preservation of these reserves and the governor's proposal to spend a limited portion of these reserves on one-time expenses in maintaining the state's long-term fiscal stability.

We in state government have a duty to manage taxpayers dollars responsibly so that, during a time of strength, we can retain our position as the fiscal envy of the nation, and during a time of need we can continue providing great government service to Hoosiers without interruption. •

Greg Porter: It's time for GOP to loosen grip on surplus

the debate: How important is it that Indiana maintain a surplus?

Greg Porter

Plain common sense would dictate the need for maintaining a savings account, whether it be for a family or the state of Indiana. None of us want to be caught short during an emergency, be it a family crisis or an economic downturn.

That is why states maintain rainy day funds and budget reserves and surpluses—to protect the interests of their citizens. Many states—including our neighbors Ohio and Michigan—choose to maintain a reserve of around 10%. In Indiana, the stated preference by our Republican fiscal leaders is up to 12%. As our House speaker has said, “More than 12% is not, I don’t think, responsible. I think that’s holding taxpayer money that should be expended.”

As I write this, Indiana has a reserve of $2.27 billion, which translates to 14%. Because Republicans were proclaiming until the end of this year’s legislative session that our state might have shortfalls in revenue, this hefty figure should give cause for relief, clearing the way for many ideas that had fallen by the wayside to now get the support they deserve.

We can give teachers a 5% pay raise. We can fund programs to extend pre-K statewide and keep all our students safer in schools. We can make sure thousands of Hoosiers who stand to suffer if the Trump administration demolishes the Affordable Care Act can still get the health care they deserve. We can fully protect at-risk children. Heck, we can even provide the $20,000 needed to fund a doula program to support pregnant mothers.

We are doing none of these things. Instead, we are using $300 million to pay for projects that already are funded through the state budget. We are told we cannot fund a teacher pay increase because the matter is still being debated by a governor’s commission that just happens not to include any teachers.

This is where we start to hear things like the need not to be too hasty in case we have an economic downturn. That seems like an odd hedge from a party loyal to the work being done by their president in Washington.

We’ve heard this refrain before over the past several administrations. We cannot spend funds for a critical need because we need to study it more or because we are concerned about what could happen.

You hear it enough, and you start to wonder whether it's not so much a matter of being careful as it is that they simply don't want to spend our reserves, and they don't care enough to spend it on things like teacher pay or safe schools or health care. Their urge to spend taxpayer dollars comes only when they want to cut corporate and business taxes.

IBJ.COM EXTRAClick here to read Cris Johnston's answer to this question.

This is the kind of commitment that might win them plaudits from business magazines.

However, Indiana is failing miserably when it comes to meeting the demands of human infrastructure. Until we reach the point where our state's greatest priority is not hoarding taxpayer dollars, we will continue to fall short where it counts. That makes no sense at all. •

Early learning panelists say state has ways to go

August 8, 2019 | Samm Quinn

KEYWORDS EDUCATION & WORKFORCE DEVELOPMENT

Indiana has made some progress in improving access to early education opportunities for Hoosier children, but the state still has a ways to go.

That was the consensus in a panel discussion presented by Early Learning Indiana and the Indianapolis Business Journal at the Marriott Indianapolis Downtown on Thursday morning focused on the importance of early education in developing the state's future workforce.

The discussion featured experts in education and child development: Dr. Paul R. Haut, chief operating officer at Riley Hospital for Children and associate professor of pediatrics at Indiana University School of Medicine; Aleesia Johnson, superintendent of Indianapolis Public Schools; Jason Kloth, president and CEO of Ascend Indiana; Ted Maple, program director of the Education Lilly Endowment Inc.; and Dr. Jennifer Walthall, secretary of the Indiana Family and Social Services Administration.

Titled "How We're Failing Tomorrow's Workforce," the event focused on why quality early education programs, like pre-kindergarten, are vital to developing a strong workforce.

But the panelists agreed that early childhood education is about more than just schooling.

By the time a child reaches 5 years old, brain architecture is largely in place, Haut said. With that in mind, he looks at early learning more broadly and said it needs to include an emphasis on health and wellness.

Toxic stresses children are exposed to early in their development—hunger, abuse, unsanitary living conditions, and a lack of love—will impact them for the rest of their lives, and constant exposure to toxic stress before a child turns 3 keeps nerve cells from developing normally, Haut said.

It's harder for children who have exposure to such stresses to develop the skills they need to be successful. So ensuring students grow up in a healthy environment is critical in preparing them for school and the workforce, he said.

Walthall said the state FSSA recognizes the impact of those stresses and has several programs in place that focus on the first five years of life.

The OB Navigator program, for example, supplies a home visitor to pregnant Hoosier mothers on Medicaid who provides in-home guidance and support during the mother's pregnancy and the first year of her baby's life.

"The commitment to starting life right, regardless of where you were born, is absolutely fundamental to what state of Indiana is committed to," Walthall said.

FSSA also manages Paths to Quality, the statewide rating system for early care and education programs. Today, 39 percent of child care centers across the state are ranked Level 1 on Paths to Quality, meaning they meet the health and safety needs of children but don't address their learning needs. Only 16 percent of centers are rated Level 4, which is the highest rating and means they meet health and safety needs while also providing a learning environment with a planned curriculum.

Child care can't just provide babysitting if the state is going to develop a skilled workforce, Haut said. So increasing the number of Level 3 and Level 4 centers is vital.

At Indianapolis Public Schools, the city school system has used Title 1 funding to start pre-K programs in several neighborhoods, Johnson said. But the district can't provide pre-K to every 4-year-old in the city, so government bodies, businesses, schools and not-for-profits will need to work together to make a difference.

Still, Indiana has made headway, the panelists said.

It wasn't all that many years ago the state had no childcare quality assessment program and no state-funded pre-kindergarten program, Maple said.

Today, Paths to Quality helps parents find quality child care and early learning centers in their communities. The state's On My Way To Pre-K is a statewide program that provides grants to low-income families to help them enroll their 4-year-olds in high quality pre-K programs.

"Most would agree we've made some positive steps in the state," Maple said. "We shouldn't take our foot off of the pedal."

And Kloth argued that shoring up early learning opportunities won't just help kids. Improving the availability and affordability of quality early learning drives economic development, he said.

In a veiled reference to the city's Amazon HQ2 bid, he said one company wanted to know how many high-quality pre-K programs there were in Indianapolis. Having many increases participation in the labor market, he said, because parents know their children are not only safe while they're at work but also getting the educational footing they need to be successful.

Still, one of the biggest challenges in providing more early childhood learning programs rests on finding a balance between paying pre-school teachers a living wage and making programs affordable for families.

"The financial model of childcare is really a challenge," Maple said. "It's hard to pay teachers what they deserve when parents are footing most of the bill."

INDIANA LEGISLATIVE INSIGHT

Pondering prisoner population

Lots to think about given the state and local numbers and policies

There's a lot going on behind the scenes – or, more appropriately, behind the bars – than meets the eyes with respect to Indiana prison and jail population and growth.

Sharp-eyed readers may recall us telling you that the Indiana Department of Correction asked for a greater than $13 million increase to their budget from FY 2019 during State Budget Committee hearings in December – a request that the General Assembly delivered on with their appropriations in the FY 2020-21 biennial state budget.

IDOC will receive $758.8 million for FY 2020 and $761.8 million for FY 2021 from the State General Fund, up from the FY 2019 appropriation of $739.2 million. The increment was intended to cover for increases in contract expenses as well as an additional $12.1 million each year of the biennium for the County Jail Maintenance Contingency Fund, which reimburses local sheriffs for housing DOC's level 6 offenders in local jails (the result of legislative changes under the major Criminal Code reforms that began six years ago).

However, the state is experiencing the opening stages of prison growth, stemming in part from the changes in law brought about by HEA 1006-2013, growth that is expected to continue for many years.

The law diverted the lowest level felons from state prisons but simultaneously increased the overall incarceration time for medium and high-risk offenders by reducing credit time for days served (previous state law stated for every one day served an inmate could receive one day credit time, but the new law changes the ratio to one day credit for every four days served). The effect of keeping higher risk offenders in prison for longer was not unintended, but attempts to adjust down the sentencing ranges for felonies to offset the population growth have not succeeded in curbing the growth.

Correction Commissioner Rob Carter warned the State Budget Committee about prison growth in December, explaining "As things stand, the prison population will continue to expand for the foreseeable future, and will exceed optimal capacity limits by the Summer of 2020."

By our calendar, that's less than a year away. That cautionary note also comes even as some of our neighbors are seeing decreases; the Illinois prison population doubled in the 1980s and doubled again in the next decade before peaking in early 2013, at 49,401 – and dropping sharply in subsequent years. Late last year, Illinois saw its prison population fall below 40,000 for the first time since the late '90s.

As of July 1, there were 26,881 offenders in DOC custody – up by more than 500 over the year – but there were also over 2,627 low-level felons being held in county jails around the state (the June and July numbers were record highs), and that number has not only created friction between local and state officials, it continues to grow in unsustainable amounts, according to local officials.

While the 2013 law decreased the state's prison minimum-security population (which allowed DOC to close two of its facilities for minimum-security male offenders), local jail cells have seen tremendous increases in occupancy.

IN county tops in national naloxone scripts

The first national study of naloxone prescriptions dispensed by retail pharmacies finds that the highest naloxone dispensing rate in 2018 was in Marshall County.

Some 1,800 naloxone prescriptions were filled last year in Marshall County – more than the 1,200 total naloxone scripts filled nationally as recently as 2012 – according to Centers for Disease Control/IQVIA data on prescriptions from 50,000+ retail pharmacies across the country. The number may be even higher; only ≈ 20% of the overdose reversal drug was sold to retail pharmacies in 2017, and the figure doesn't include Narcan kits distributed by the Marshall County Health Department. Nationally, naloxone prescriptions dispensed from retail pharmacies increased by 106% from 2017 to 2018 alone.

The details come from Associated Press Medical Writer Mike Stobbe, who had access to more data than was contained in CDC's Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report piece.

Substantial regional variation was found in naloxone dispensing, including a 25-fold variation across counties, with the lowest rates seen in the Midwest and rural counties, despite Marshall County's showing. Of the 30 counties with the highest rate of naloxone dispensing in 2018, 13 were in Virginia and five were in Kentucky, AP finds.

The state makes a $35 per diem reimbursements to counties for each F6 level felon incarcerated in a county's jail, which cost the state more than $20 million in FY 2018. The per diem for housing state prisoners in county jails was set at $35 per day 28 years ago and "In 28 years, they haven't raised that money by one cent," complains Vanderburgh County Sheriff, Dave Wedding (D), president of the Indiana Sheriffs' Association, to a southwestern Indiana television station.

Sheriff Wedding notes that a state prisoner receives three meals per day, and the per diem must also cover laundry services for jail uniforms and bedding, - as well as plus routine medical care, but fails to account for regular maintenance and wear and tear (as well as potential increased personnel costs) nor facility upgrades or expansion.

Some Hoosier jails that do have excess capacity will often open their cell doors to federal inmates (sometimes in lieu of accepting state prisoners) because the federal government pays out at a rate of $55 per day per inmate.

Clinton County tried to reap some Additional income from the offenders themselves, implementing a $30 per day fee for those in jail for more than three days . . . but local pushback (including from Frankfort's Republican mayor) caused county officials to renege. Carroll County is looking into such a fee, and cites successful implementation in Porter County.

The number of state prisoners held in local jails has increased by more than 1,500 since 2016, and the population has topped 2,500 since April 2018. County sheriffs report that the state fee does nothing to maintain or expand local jails whose populations are swelling, due in large part to the state criminal code reform.

A vast majority of the counties are home to at least a double-digit number of DOC diversions, and some which house none or a minimal number do so because the local facilities are beyond capacity.

Several counties are looking at or completing expansion (Hamilton County, for example) or entirely new construction (such as Decatur County, Hancock County, Jefferson County, Jennings County, Sullivan County, and Vigo County), with others (Henry County and Madison County, for example, contemplating joint new construction on a regional facility - effectively uncharted territory, which builds on what we told you a few months ago about shared county services).

According to a report from the ACLU this Spring, Indiana's imprisonment rate grew by 18% between 2000 and 2016, a period during which the national incarceration rate dropped by eight percent.

But an interesting new national report from the Council of State Governments (CSG) Justice Center finds that a major chunk of the growth appears to be for what some might consider to be technical violations of the law - and typically those of a minor nature.

In Indiana, 53% of prison admissions were found to be a result of supervision violations (above the 45% national rate), with 32% attributable to probation violations and 21% to parole violations - something potentially as simple as like missing a curfew or skipping out on a meeting with a supervision officer (or failing a drug test).

CSG finds that "On any given day in Indiana, 7,913 people are incarcerated as a result of a supervision violation at an annual cost to the state of $153 million. Technical supervision violations account for $81 million of this total amount, and new offense supervision violations make up $72 million. These figures do not account for the substantial local costs of keeping people in jail for supervision violations." CSG estimates technical probation violations account for 19% of the violations and technical probation violations are believed to be about 17% of the supervision violations, while only 17% total of the 53% of supervision violations are for new (substantive) offenses.

Some states have started to respond to these findings by implementing practices such as providing special treatment for people with mental illnesses and substance addiction, and revamping policies for how they assess, case-manage and respond to behavior of supervisees with the goal of reducing technical violations and revocations.

At the state level, since 1980 Indiana has authorized expanding prison capacity via construction 12 times, - an increase every 2¾ years from 1980 to 2012. Commissioner Carter reminded the State Budget Committee in December that the state had gone six years since the last prison expansion . . . and explained that with any new projects estimated to take between two and five years to build, even if lawmaker were to authorize new construction in 2019 (which they didn't) it will be eight or more years since Indiana's last prison capacity expansion.

Two ideas other than entirely new prison sites were floated by DOC's Carter to curb the prison overpopulation problem that threatens to swallow the state by 2020. His first option included increasing prison capacity by retrofitting existing facilities to be more efficient and capable of holding more high-security inmates, or building additional housing units within the secured perimeters of existing facilities.

The second alternative he floated looked to decrease the prison population by simplifying the education credit awards that are currently in statute and increasing evidence-based case management plans. Streamlining the education credit process would preserve credit time restrictions but could have a flattening effect on prison growth for the immediate future, and comported with DOC goals to provide more offenders with nationally recognized industry certifications and to decrease the released offender unemployment rate through the Hoosier Initiative for Re-Entry (HIRE) - also a key initiative of the Governor going forward.

Federal Office Races . . .

- Former Sen. Mike Delph (R) was spotted at mid-week attending a Grant County Republican Party event, adding to speculation that he's ready to pull the trigger on an open seat CD 05 bid.

IN Legislative Races . . .

- Candidates Are starting to emerge for the upcoming caucus selection in SD 18 to replace retiring Sen. Randy Head (R), who will formally vacate his seat August 12. The district includes all of Cass, Fulton, and Miami counties, and portions of Carroll, Kosciusko, and Marshall counties.

□ Flora Town Councilmember Jacob D. “Jake” Adams (R) is the first person to publicly declare an intention to seek the seat. Adams, who grew up in Delphi, spent nine years on active duty with the U.S. Marine Corps (2005-14), works for Ivy Tech Kokomo as a workforce and community development consultant, and runs Indiana Marketing Group, his own digital marketing company focused on small business social media. The IU alum with an MBA from Western Governors University was director of community development for the City of Delphi, and director of Business Services for Indiana’s Region 4 Workforce Board in Lafayette. He serves on the Greater Kokomo Economic Development Chamber Council, NIPSCO’s community advisory council, and should soon join the board of directors of the Miami County Chamber of Commerce Board in the next month. If selected, Adams looks to direct his legislative energies to job creation and workforce development.

□ Also throwing his hat in the ring for the SD 18 caucus is Jeffery Staker (R) of Peru, a long-time security officer and firefighter at Grissom Air Reserve Base and part-time real estate appraiser and real estate agent. Staker, a lifelong Hoosier, served 11 years in the Marines as a scout sniper and drill instructor, and then also spent time with the Indiana Army National Guard and Indiana Air National Guard. A member of the VFW, American Legion, AMVETS, and Disabled American Veterans, he is the founder of Hoosier Veterans for Medical Cannabis (HVMC), a nonprofit organization formed a few years ago “To inform, educate, lobby, support and maintain legislations [sic] for the ‘legal’ Medical use of Cannabis within the State of Indiana.” The 53-year-old did so after being prescribed oxycodone for eight years by Veterans Administration physicians before he learned there were potential alternatives to opioids.

□ Expect other candidates to emerge (keep your eyes on Cass County) before mid-month.

IN the Presidential Race . . .

● South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D) remains in fifth place nationally among the field of Democratic presidential candidates after the first two rounds of debates, according to Morning Consult polling, but is up by one percentage point to six percent (only U.S. Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) enjoyed a larger gain), and among all Democratic primary voters, he trails the fourth-place contender, U.S. Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA), by only three percentage points. Among Democratic primary voters in the early states – Iowa, New Hampshire, South Carolina, and Nevada, Mayor Pete drops one percentage point and one place in the ratings, with five percent, just behind fifth-place impeachment advocate Tom Steyer (D) who earns six percent of the early-state vote (but again, he is only three points behind Sen. Harris). He is eighth in name ID

(77%), but tied for fourth in favorability (45%) and is tied for fourth in the “Very Favorable” silo (19%) . . . an August 2-3 College Reaction survey finds South Bend’s mayor, the youngest presidential hopeful, the choice of 8.0% of U.S. college students, fourth among Democratic hopefuls and fifth overall when the President is factored in. All four candidates placing above Mayor Pete are in their 70s . . . Mayor Pete on Tuesday unveiled his “action plan to combat the threat of white nationalist terrorism, abetted by weak gun laws and the gun lobby.” He tweeted Tuesday, “Weapons like the one I carried in Afghanistan have no place on our streets or in our schools – least of all in the hands of white nationalists” . . . on Tuesday, Judicial Watch filed an Access to Public Records Act (APRA) open records lawsuit against the City of South Bend for records of communications between Mayor Buttigieg’s office “related to the creation of a municipal ID card for illegal aliens that was created by La Casa de Amistad, a local not-for-profit corporation.” Judicial Watch v. City of South Bend, No. 71C01-1908-M1-000389. His campaign labels the suit a “political stunt that is intended to scare immigrants,” and city officials say the records were maintained by the nonprofit, and not the city, and thus inaccessible under APRA . . . in a sign of the times, the Buttigieg campaign hires Mick Braccio, who worked on cyber issues in the Obama White House and the Department of Health and Human Services” as in-house chief information security officer, “in what appears to be a first for major 2020 candidates,” according to POLITICO Cybersecurity Pro’s Tim Starks, himself a former Evansville Courier & Press State House reporter . . . Dayton, Ohio Mayor Nan Whaley (D-OH), in the national spotlight and presidential crosshairs last week, is a native Hoosier (Morgan County) as we told you two years ago when she announced she was running for governor of Ohio in 2018 (she dropped out before the primary, endorsing the ultimate nominee), whose mother, former Mooresville Clerk-Treasurer Ann Whaley (D), was the Democratic nominee for state auditor in 1990, 20 years before Buttigieg made his own quixotic bid for statewide office (state treasurer). Mayor Whaley, a 1994 graduate of Immaculate Conception Academy (now Oldenburg Academy) in Batesville, was one of the mayors from outside Indiana who traveled to South Bend to endorse – and introduce – Mayor Pete at his formal April announcement . . . Mayor Pete want to retain Obamacare, with a public option . . . per Axios, Obama 2008 senior spokesperson, Hari Sevugan, later the Democratic National Committee’s national press secretary, joins Team Pete (deputy campaign manager for brand and media, based in Chicago). Staff count hits 250, and grows. Axios notes other key recent hires: Jess O’Connell as senior strategist; Michael Halle as senior advisor; Larry Grisolan and John Del Cecato of AKPD Media; and Katie Connolly of Benenson Strategy Group . . . asked Thursday at a National Association of Black Journalists event if he thinks the President is a white supremacist, hizzoner replied, “Yes, I do.”

● While the President's net approval numbers in Indiana have decreased by 17 percentage points since he took office according to Morning Consult polling, his approval rating in Indiana rose by two percentage points from June to July, not only the first time this year in which his approval numbers grew, but the first time he has achieved a majority (51%) approval since last December (52%). His approval numbers locally have not been under water in two years – since July 2017. Among our surrounding states, only Kentucky (55%) gives the President a higher July approval rating,

● The National Association for Gun Rights (NAGR) will be cosponsoring a Political Leadership School in Auburn on August 24. Why should this be of broad interest? NAGR, the nation's second largest gun rights organization, took on Rep. Jim Lucas (R) in 2017 after the ardent Second Amendment advocate helped to block an amendment by Rep. Curt Nisly (R) to amend a bill to allow constitutional carry after an earlier personal dust-up between the two over a different Nisly amendment. NAGR then launched a major effort to discredit Rep. Lucas, who has been widely viewed as being the most firearm-friendly House member . . . and since then, some of the NAGR focus has shifted to House Committee on Public Policy Chair Ben Smaltz (R), who is also perceived by his colleagues as gun-friendly, but in his committee role, has slowed down some of the more far-reaching gun bills. Rep. Smaltz is from Auburn . . . site of this month's NAGR seminar.

□ Here's a snippet of what Rep. Lucas had to say about – and to – his national detractors on social media two years ago: “Hey National Association for Gun Rights, or NAGR, your group reminds me of a pack of jackals among lions. You sit back in the shadows while good people do the hard work, and then you swoop in after the hard work is done while taking credit for the kill. You are nothing more than political terrorists and have to stoop to the destructive politics of fear mongering and character assassination because you're not capable of building anything for the long haul!”

IN Brief

IN Federal Circles . . .

● Statements from the Hoosier congressional delegation on the mass murders in El Paso and Dayton:

□ U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) said “We are all heartbroken for the victims of these terrible acts of hate. I pray for those who were injured and for the families of those who lost loved ones. And I am sincerely grateful to the first responders and law enforcement officers who acted swiftly. There is no place in this country for hate of any kind – period. The President rightfully spoke out against acts of racially motivated violence and we must, as a nation, do more. That starts by grappling with the underlying disease in our communities: ideologies of hate, mental derangement, and a loss of respect for human life.” On Monday, he added another comment on the underlying causes of gun violence: “Clearly we have multiple problems in this country – problems of hate, social alienation, and the devaluing of human life – and we're going to have to work together as a nation to address these challenges. I think Indiana has done a good job with respect to our red flag law and that's something that needs to be part of the conversation moving forward across the country” . . . U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) said “Maureen and I are deeply troubled by the recent shootings in El Paso and Dayton – there is no place for hate in our great country, our prayers are with the victims of this horrific event, and I commend the swift action from law enforcement and first responders. Mass shootings and gun violence across our country is a complex situation; watching Congress do nothing is unacceptable, and I agree with President Trump's call for bipartisan legislation to address this crisis. Any bipartisan legislation needs to include: stronger background checks, red flag laws known as extreme risk protection orders that address mental illness, commonsense solutions that complement the Trump administration's ban on bump stocks so we can crack down on modifications that turn guns into military-style assault weapons, and steps that are responsive to a culture that glorifies violence. We live in the greatest country in the world, but the tone and destructive rhetoric across the ideological spectrum is tearing our country apart and we must return to a society that works towards finding common ground on issues where we disagree.”

□ U.S. Rep. Jim Baird (R) said “My prayers are with the people affected by the recent senseless acts of mass violence. Thank you to law-enforcement and first responders for their continuous dedication to our communities to protect and save lives. These acts of evil must be stopped! We can protect the Second Amendment, while also exploring the use of Red Flag laws and how we conduct background checks. Policy alone will not stop evil. We must search deeper to find what our families, neighbors and communities can do to address the root of the problem. In Congress, I am committed to working with my colleagues toward solutions that make America safer” . . . U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R) tweeted “I deployed to Afghanistan as a response to radical Islamic terrorism. We now face a different enemy that has also emerged from the shadows but demands the same focus and determination to root out and destroy. #WhiteSupremacistTerrorism should be named, targeted and defeated” (note that this tweet came almost a full day before the President's comments on white supremacy). He added, “The violence this weekend was perpetrated by extremists from both sides of the political spectrum. It's clear that those using these tragedies to attack @potus and others are shortsighted. It's time to put politics aside, come together and address this evil with determination” . . . U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R) – a former U.S. Attorney – tweeted “We must and can do more to prevent these senseless acts of violence. Red flag laws, like Indiana's Jake Laird Law, save lives while ensuring due process rights. It's past time for Congress to act!” . . . U.S. Rep. Larry Bucshon (R) said “The tragic events this past weekend in El Paso, Texas and Dayton, Ohio were acts of cowardice carried out by wicked individuals trying to strike fear in our hearts. I join the President and the nation in praying for the victims and their families during this difficult time, as well as expressing my gratitude for the law enforcement personnel and first responders who leapt to action to protect and care for their fellow citizens. When it comes to preventing these senseless acts of violence, as a physician I believe that it's important to treat the disease and not the symptoms. That means as a nation we must prevent individuals from turning to violence in the first place by swiftly and soundly confronting and rooting out white supremacist terrorism – no differently than we have dealt with the threat of radical Islamic terrorism – and by improving access to mental health care and confronting the underlying glorification of violence that is unfortunately the norm in our culture today” . . . U.S. Rep. André Carson (D) tweets “My heart breaks for the victims of the shooting in El Paso, Texas and their loved ones. Though we don't know all the details of this tragedy, one thing is clear: Far too many of our fellow Americans are falling victim to gun violence, and we must take bold action to save lives” . . . U.S. Rep. Greg Pence (R) offered this innocuous comment: “It is now time for all of us to come together and take action against evil and hate. Thank you to the swift response by law enforcement and first responders in El Paso and Dayton, who saved countless lives by putting their own on the line” . . . U.S. Rep. Jackie Walorski (R) said “After the horrific acts of violence our nation witnessed this weekend, I am praying for the innocent victims, the survivors, and their families. We must all come together as Americans to confront the evils of white supremacy, hatred, and terror in all its forms. I am committed to working with my colleagues to confront the threat of domestic terrorism, address gaps in mental health care, ensure our laws are fully enforced, and protect the rights of law-abiding citizens.” As for background checks, Rep. Walorski added that she “voted against this misguided legislation because it would turn upstanding citizens into criminals while doing nothing to prevent mass shootings or stop firearm thefts and straw purchases that are already illegal. Instead of partisan proposals that infringe on Americans’ constitutional rights, we should focus on strengthening security and law enforcement, addressing gaps in mental health care, and building on commonsense reforms like the Fix NICS Act Congress passed into law last year.”

● U.S. Sens. Todd Young (R), a member of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) are among a complement of 45 Republican senators who have sent a letter to British Prime Minister Boris Johnson pledging “unwavering” support for the United Kingdom as it exits the European Union in the coming months. The letter calls for a new bilateral trade agreement between the United States and the United Kingdom and reiterates the importance of U.S.-UK cooperation within the NATO security alliance and the “Five Eyes” intelligence partnership.

● U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) teams up with U.S. Sen. Joni Ernst (R-IA) to introduce the “Define WOTUS Act,” which would reassert congressional responsibility to define the term “Waters of the United States” (WOTUS). “President Trump and his Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) are working hard to fix this atrocious Obama-era rule,” says Sen. Braun. “But as the Administration has repeatedly noted, it’s Congress job to write laws. The Define WOTUS Act will solidify and amplify the Administration’s work on WOTUS. I am proud to join with President Trump who is doing a tremendous job deregulating these job-killing regulations that hurt Hoosier farmers and those who reside in the Heartland of America.” Sen. Braun explains that like the EPA’s rule, the Ernst-Braun measure would provide greater certainty to American farmers, workers, businesses, and landowners by offering landowners clear guidelines by which they can clearly determine what is regulated by the EPA and what is not with respect to their land. The bill would specifically outline what is, and is not, a federally regulated waterway. His office says that the legislation “provides a clearer definition with more obvious safeguards to protect against a runaway bureaucracy.”

● U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R) is a vice chair of the Congressional Diabetes Caucus, whose leaders wrote at the end of July to the Food and Drug Administration’s acting chief urging FDA to “take concrete, immediate steps to reduce or eliminate any hurdles associated with bringing lower-cost insulin to market.” “More specifically,” according to STAT’s D.C. Diagnosis, they ask “for FDA to work with manufacturers to ensure lower-cost insulins aren’t delayed from coming to market because of a regulatory change set to go into effect in March that will change the specific way the drug is classified by the agency.”

● U.S. Rep. Trey Hollingsworth (R) tells his constituents that “On April 30, 2019, Rep. Diana DeGette introduced the Tobacco to 21 Act in the House of Representatives. This legislation would prohibit the sale of tobacco products to anyone under the age of 21. The U.S. Senate has an identical bill for consideration.” He then poses his “Question of the Week: Do you support increasing the minimum age to purchase tobacco from 18 to 21?” . . . Rep. Hollingsworth joined WIBC 93.1-FM’s Rob Kendall for an Indianapolis radio interview August 2 which focused on the (growing) debt. “When I talk to Hoosiers and tour local businesses, what I hear is this deep concern is that the next generation may not live better than the last. That is disheartening,” Hollingsworth told WIBC’s Kendall. “We have got to get our spending under control in Washington. We have got to get (House Speaker) Nancy Pelosi’s purse strings under control and back focused on putting the American people and the future of the American people first, not Washington’s out of control habits first,” he added. Asked if there was pressure on him to vote for the spending bill at the end of July (he was one of five members of the Hoosier House delegation to vote against the wishes of the President and GOP congressional leadership), Rep. Hollingsworth replied, “There was a lot of pressure. What I tell them every single time is ‘Hoosiers back home don’t want to see more red ink. Hoosiers back home don’t want to see their futures mortgaged for today’s career politicians.’”

Lake Co. Conv. & Visitors Bureau D/B/A So. Shore Conv. & Visitors Auth., et al.*, No. 45D01-1908-PL-000468. The City of Hammond files suit in Lake County Superior Court, Civil Division 1, seeking to have some of the board member appointment language in I.C. 6-9-2-3 declared unconstitutional, alleging due process concerns in its application, and claiming that it also violates the Art. 4, Sec. 23 ban on special legislation in the Indiana Constitution. The City argues that there are no similar provisions for appointment of “a member to the board of any other bureau in any other county, despite there being specific innkeepers and other local tax statutes in many counties and a uniform county innkeepers tax for other counties.”

□ The City, which gets in some gratuitous digs against the pay and bonus package of the Bureau's top administrator, is represented by Bryan Babb and Brad Dick of Bose McKinney & Evans LLP (Babb just won a major constitutional fight for Hammond) and City Attorney Kevin Smith, while Robert G. Berger is the attorney for the Hammond Common Council.

□ Judge John Sedia sets a hearing on the City's request for a preliminary injunction for August 14.

● Private counsel representing Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) file their response to the Office of the Inspector General's motion to quash the OAG subpoena for the bulk of material compiled during the course of the IG investigation into the sexual harassment allegations (transmogrified into professional misconduct claims) against General Hill. OIG had largely argued to Supreme Court Hearing Officer Myra Selby that the requested materials are privileged. Hill's attorneys contend that the requested materials "are relevant and not protected by privilege," and ask her to order OIG "to produce them forthwith."

□ Hill's attorneys assert the primary reason the materials are not protected from discovery is that they are included within the investigative materials developed in a joint and coordinated investigation by a special prosecutor, OIG and the Indianapolis Metropolitan Police Department. "Although the OIG is the repository for the investigative materials, they are also investigative materials of the special prosecutor," and the special prosecutor consents to the disclosure of the materials to Hill. "The OIG cannot claim them as privileged if it has shared them with others who do not claim privilege. The statutory provisions in the statute governing the OIG do not create an evidentiary privilege. At most, they create certain confidentiality interests vis-à-vis the public that do not protect the Requested Materials from appropriate discovery under the trial rules."

□ Then the Hill legal team introduces a new wrinkle into the battle: a unique separation of powers argument. "To the extent the statute purports to uniquely exempt the OIG from discovery, it is an improper effort by the legislature to control litigation procedures which falls within the province of the Supreme Court. The bulk of the OIG's investigation fell outside the scope of its legislative authority. It is not entitled to claim protections of a statute when it did not limit its investigation to matters authorized by the General Assembly."

□ Finally, Team Hill asserts, "by issuing the unredacted IG Report, publicly identifying the individuals who requested the investigation, and identifying all witnesses by name, the OIG has waived the ability to protect the Requested Materials from discovery. Because the IG Report is an action against the respondent, the OIG may not keep him from having access to the Requested Materials. Even if the Requested Materials are otherwise protected, the respondent has a particularized need for them and cannot obtain them from another source. By asserting a blanket claim of privilege, the IG has not properly raised any privilege objections by failing to claim privilege on a document-by-document basis."

□ From a practical perspective, the AG's lawyers also tell Selby, "It is impracticable for the respondent to interview 60 witnesses between now and the hearing date. Even if he could, he would never be able to know for certain what those witnesses told the investigators who assisted the OIG and the special prosecutor. Nine months have passed since the IG Report was issued and longer since the witnesses were interviewed. Their recollections of what transpired at the sine die event were fresher at the time they were interviewed, and their recollections now of what they told the OIG in the fall of 2018 will inevitably be flawed due to the passage of time. The recorded recollections of the witnesses to the sine die event cannot be obtained from another source. The special prosecutor has indicated that the OIG is the repository of the investigative materials that were as much his work product as the OIG's."

□ The Hill legal team also takes aim at OIG for "gratuitously weighing in on the respondent's alleged conduct at the sine die event and publicly and broadly disseminating a report of factual findings that had no bearing on whether the respondent engaged in ghost employment or misused state property. The IG Report tried to set the stage for this unsupported expansion of its authority by mischaracterizing its jurisdiction The bulk of the IG Report was a gratuitous and unauthorized take-down of the respondent that fell outside the OIG's legislative mandate. Now that another agency of state government, the Disciplinary Commission, has charged the respondent with professional misconduct on the same facts, after publicly excoriating the respondent in the IG Report for alleged conduct falling outside the purview of her statutory responsibilities, the IG claims that the respondent is not entitled to see the prior statements of the witnesses who the Commission has said it will call as witnesses against him in this case and potentially many witnesses who might have exculpatory testimony. The IG should be prohibited from wielding the IG Report as a sword to launch an unauthorized attack on respondent, and then hide behind the shield of Ind. Code 4-2-7-8(c) to keep the respondent from discovering the actual evidence behind the IG Report." The Hill response also contends that "Except when it comes to depriving the respondent of important information needed for his defense, the IG has run roughshod over her confidentiality rules."

□ We look for Hearing Officer Selby, a long-time proponent and practitioner of civility in the legal process, to suggest that the Hill team town down its rhetoric (there was more than we cited), but for that display not to impact her decision making. What these arguments might do is produce a ruling by Selby, a former Supreme Court justice, that could be the subject of an interlocutory appeal to the Supreme Court itself - not a typical avenue in an attorney disciplinary case - that could buy Hill more time . . . a valuable commodity for him as he prepares for the 2020 election season, and affords him more bargaining power if eventually slapped with an adverse decision that could impact his ability to practice law and remain in (or again seek) office. While Hill would benefit from more time, it is not inconceivable that a favorable ruling for him on the motion to quash might produce an interlocutory appeal as well from OIG, which might be more concerned about the long-term impact of such a ruling on its powers in what appears to be a matter of first impression (we're not sure, however, whether interlocutory appeals can even be taken from a disciplinary commission hearing officer order; whether a third-party non-participant has standing to appeal such an order; or if a state entity such as OIG has any special standing in such a messy procedure - which happens to center upon an elected state official). Get your pencils and scorecards ready . . .

● Caught by reporters at the Indiana State Fair and asked to comment about the weekend's mass shootings in El Paso and Dayton, Governor Eric Holcomb (R) labeled the actions as "counter-American, counter-Hoosier." He said "It's not what we stand for," adding "We ought to go after them - whether it's international or domestic terrorism - with all the resources that we have."

□ Chicago Mayor Lori Lightfoot (D-IL) echoed the words of her predecessor in the office by pointing to Indiana laws and practice as a factor in Windy City gun violence. Then-mayor Rahm Emanuel (D-IL) frequently pointed out that some 20% the guns recovered by police in Chicago were purchased in Indiana – more than one-half the amount purchased in Illinois. Mayor Lightfoot – a former federal prosecutor and Chicago Police Department administrator – questioned the effectiveness of a red flag law and background check law for Illinois, contending that a national solution was needed. “How do you have a red flag if you don’t have universal background checks? How do you have a red flag if you have this patchwork of state regulations that are not uniform?” she asked. “If the President weighs in, if he shows these Republicans that they can actually have courage, we can get this done. We are very different in Illinois than we are in Indiana and we’re neighbors. Same thing with Wisconsin and Michigan,” she added. “That’s why we need the federal government to step up and do its job to fill these voids. Of course we shouldn’t allow people who have a demonstrated track record of violence or mental illness to have guns. But that becomes increasingly difficult when every state has a different set of rules and people can travel and purchase firearms at an alarming rate.”

- AT&T’s ESInet is selected by the Indiana Statewide 911 Board as the new statewide 911 system infrastructure.

- In a Tuesday news release, Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) expressed support for the President’s embrace of “red flag laws” in the wake of recent mass shootings. Indiana was one of the first five states in the nation to enact such a law, back in 2005. Today, 17 states and the District of Columbia have such laws.

□ “Indiana’s red flag law is a common-sense measure that in no way inhibits the Second Amendment rights of law-abiding citizens,” General Hill said. “As President Trump takes concrete actions to stop gun violence in our country, he is wise to encourage more states to adopt these kinds of provisions.”

□ Hill’s office reports that “On a White House visit in February of 2018, Attorney General Hill touted the value of red flag laws in conversations with President Trump and other officials. He traveled to Washington D.C. again in March of 2018 to discuss red flag laws with U.S. Sen. Lindsey Graham of South Carolina.”

- The Office of the Inspector General clears Governor Eric Holcomb (R) on charges that he allegedly failed to report on his 2018 Financial Disclosure Statement a pair of 2018 flights to Republican Governors Association (RGA) events funded by Spectacle Entertainment, LLC, now the owner of two casinos, and a major mover behind changes in the casino laws during the 2019 session signed into law by the Governor. The complaint filed by an undisclosed complainant (the Indiana Democratic Party had publicly called for an investigation) “also raised concerns that the flight ‘included, and apparently required, uninterrupted access to the Governor by those seeking to lobby the State for changes in Indiana’s gaming laws.’”

□ OIG determined that the gift rule does not apply to a governor or his or her family members, and conflicts of interests and confidentiality rules also did not apply to the allegations. However, “The financial disclosure statement statute falls within the OIG’s jurisdiction and applies to state officers, such as the Governor.” Thus, OIG opened an investigation into whether Governor Holcomb failed to disclose information required by the financial disclosure statement statute.

□ The eight-page OIG report explains that records were requested and received from all relevant parties, and “The RGA explained that the flights were donated to the RGA as in-kind contributions. The RGA explained that IRS rules require them to properly capture and report all in-kind contributions made to the RGA for any in-kind flight that is utilized to benefit the RGA. The RGA reported that they received an in-kind donation in the amount of $21,486.15 from Centaur Gaming (Centaur) for the Governor’s Aspen flight and received an in-kind donation in the amount of $33,961.95 from Spectacle for the Governor’s Scottsdale flight. The RGA provided ... RGA’s IRS Form 8872 for the third quarter of 2018 and an amended IRS Form 8872 for part of the fourth quarter of 2018, which disclosed the in-kind contributions for the Aspen and Scottsdale flights respectively. The RGA stated that the ‘the purpose of the Governor’s travel was to benefit the RGA, and therefore the in-kind contribution in the amount of the travel was properly made to the RGA.’ The Campaign similarly stated that ‘the flights worked to the benefit of the RGA: that is why the RGA expended the flights to transport Governor Holcomb to RGA events, and that is why the RGA reported the flights, under penalty of perjury, as in-kind donations to the RGA.’” The Governor serves on RGA’s Executive Committee, and thus is part of the group’s leadership.

□ The basic OIG conclusion: The Governor received the flights “through the RGA. The Governor’s Office coordinated the travel primarily through the Campaign staff. The OIG found no evidence that the Governor’s Office worked directly with Spectacle or Centaur to arrange the flights. Moreover, according to the RGA’s IRS filings, Spectacle and Centaur provided the flights to the RGA as in-kind contributions. As a result, it appears the Governor accepted the flights from the RGA and not from Spectacle or Centaur. Furthermore, the OIG found that both the RGA and the Campaign believed the flights primarily benefitted the RGA rather than the Governor or First Lady. Although it is likely that the Governor’s attendance at the RGA meetings, and therefore the flights, had some benefit to the Governor and/or First Lady, the OIG found no evidence to dispute the claim that the flights primarily benefitted the RGA. In addition, the RGA stated that they often offer to pay for travel for governors to attend their meetings. This further supports the idea that the flights were gifts to the RGA and not to the Governor or First Lady.”

□ The bottom line: “Based on the investigation, the OIG found that neither the Governor nor the First Lady accepted the flights to the RGA events as gifts from an entity or entities with a business relationship with the Governor’s Office. As a result, [OIG] found insufficient evidence to support an allegation that the Governor failed to disclose information required on his Financial Disclosure Statement with regards to the flights. As such, the OIG is closing this case for insufficient cause.”

- A pair of Indiana Supreme Court rulings Wednesday serve up some clarity with respect to legislative changes in recent years to the sentence modification statute, I.C. 35-38-1-17. Defense attorneys were arguing that even in cases where a defendant entered into plea agreements with a fixed sentence, the statutory changes still allowed defendants to seek and trial courts to grant a sentence modification, and they found support for that notion from some panels of the Indiana Court of Appeals.

□ With its Wednesday rulings, however, the Supremes have now unanimously and definitively held that fixed-sentence guilty plea defendants cannot have such a sentence modified. “Simply stated, if the terms of the plea agreement – to which the State, defendant, and court are bound – allowed any sentencing discretion by the trial court at the time the sentence was imposed, the trial court only possesses the degree of discretion to modify a sentence that was contemplated by the terms of the original plea agreement,” writes Justice Steven David for the Court in Rodriguez v. State, No. 18S-CR-143. “As a matter of statutory interpretation, we find the decades-old rule of sentence modification remains undisturbed: courts may modify a sentence only if the new sentence would not have violated the terms of the valid plea agreement had the new sentence been originally imposed.” The bottom line, the Indiana Prosecuting Attorneys Council tells county prosecutors, is that “if a plea gave the trial court no sentencing discretion, the court also lacks discretion to modify it later.”

● Kudos to our sister Hannah newsletter, INDIANA EDUCATION INSIGHT, which last week published its 600th biweekly issue. The newsletter has been providing the state’s most comprehensive coverage of education policy, finance, curriculum, personnel, physical facilities, and regulation and legislation since 1997.

● While the Office of the Attorney General is seeking a six-day extension of the deadline by which it is required to respond to a lawsuit challenging the constitutionality of SEA 516-2019 – which legalizes the commercial production of hemp in Indiana, but effectively continues to criminalize smokable hemp despite federal laws declaring all hemp derivatives to be legal – their response to the request for a preliminary injunction is currently due August 15. C. Y. Wholesale, Inc., et al., v. Holcomb, No. 1:19-cv-02659-SEB-TAB. Senior Judge Sarah Evans Barker of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana wants the plaintiffs – the Midwest Hemp Council, Inc. and a passel of wholesalers and retailers of hemp products who wish to distribute and sell smokable hemp products declared legal under federal law (represented by attorneys from Bose McKinney & Evans LLP) – to file a reply memorandum in support of their motion by August 22, and she sets the matter for hearing on August 28.

□ And if you’re hep to the hemp world, you’re aware that the nascent industry is eagerly awaiting federal regulations covering both hemp cultivation and CBD products, which were anticipated this month . . . but now are expected to be released this Fall, for the 2020 growing season. While the most recent Farm bill authorized state-level hemp production programs, those programs are subject to strict federal oversight, and not all of the rules are in place, causing some concern for Hoosier farmers who are in the midst of making – in some cases – multi-million-dollar investments in hemp production in rural counties.

□ The new U.S. Department of Agriculture regulations are expected to address issues including testing standards, law enforcement compliance, inspections, disposal, and certification for both products and industry workers – some of which now fall into “gray areas” for Indiana stakeholders.

□ Further troubling the Hoosier hemp hopefuls: Some have viewed hemp (and related seed) production as an alternative crop to help tide them through the trade war with China and continued price and market volatility for traditional corn and soybean crops.

IN the Economy

● The State Fiscal Health initiative of the Pew Charitable Trusts crunches the numbers and learns that while the national recovery from the economic crisis late in the last decade has been extended, state economic growth, reflected in the combined personal income of all residents, lags its historic pace. Through the first quarter of 2019, total U.S. personal income rose by the equivalent of 1.9% annually year since the recession began, compared with the equivalent of 2.6% across the past 30 years, after accounting for inflation. State personal income has also increased unevenly among states, but Indiana leads its neighbors in annual growth rate for inflation-adjusted income from the fourth quarter of 2007 to the first quarter of 2009 (even as all five states lag the national recovery rate). Indiana trails Ohio and Kentucky in personal income growth from the first quarter of 2018 to the first quarter of 2019 (and again, each state lags the national average growth; 31 states outpaced U.S. growth in personal income).

State Personal Income Growth

State	Q4 2007 - Q1 2019	Q1 2018 - Q1 2019
Indiana	1.8%	1.4%
Illinois	1.0%	1.1%
Kentucky	1.4%	1.7%
Michigan	1.4%	1.1%
Ohio	1.4%	1.7%
National	1.9%	2.0%

● Our sister Hannah newsletter, INDIANA GAMING INSIGHT, is the bearer of some bad news this week: Indiana’s 13 commercial gaming properties reported a 2.50% decrease in semi-annual revenue, the first downturn in January-June results since 2015. For the six months ending June 30, 2019, statewide casino win amounted to just $1.10 billion, a 14-year low . . . and we don’t think Hoosiers are just saving up their nest eggs to bet it all on football games when sports wagering goes live in Indiana beginning next month.

● The Tax Foundation find that the median property tax bill in Indiana ranges from a low of $403 in Pulaski County to a high of $2,343 in Hamilton County.

□ On a related note, Fred Swift writes in the Hamilton County Reporter that Hamilton County saw an increase in assessed valuation of more than $1.4 billion to a record $23.5 billion. “Carmel experienced the greatest gain: $570 million, but $195 million of that was due to annexations. Arcadia was the only unit to suffer a loss in valuation, dropping from $38.7 million to $37.9 million.”

● The Indianapolis Airport Authority heads to market Tuesday with a $107 million refunding package sold via the Indianapolis Local Public Improvement Bond Bank, seeking to reduce its exposure from floating-rate debt issued in 2010 by replacing it with a fixed-rate structure.

● Peabody Indiana Services LLC’s Somerville Central Mine near Oakland City in Gibson County is slated to close in October after 19 years, ending more than 120 jobs . . . the last Sears department store in Northwest Indiana (Southlake Mall in Hobart) and one in Mishawaka (University Park Mall) are closing . . . HOYA Optical Labs of America, Inc. (formerly 3M, AO Safety, and American Optical), will permanently close its prescription safety eyewear manufacturing facility in Plymouth beginning in early October and running through next March, ending more than 80 jobs . . . the Goshen News reports “Plans by Lippert Components Inc. to construct a $20 million facility on the city’s southeast side have apparently been scrapped”

● Micropulse, Inc., a company that develops and manufactures medical implants, instruments, cases and trays, and sterile packaging, plans to invest $6.8 million building and equipping about 15,000 more square feet at its facility outside Columbia City, as well as renovating existing space. Micropulse expects to create 25 new jobs by the end of 2020 with the help of up to $115,000 in performance-based tax credits from the Indiana Economic Development Corporation, and a 10-year property tax abatement from the Whitley County Council . . . Guardian Machine Protection, a provider of preventive maintenance services for manufacturers' industrial machinery, plans to add up to 170 new jobs in Fort Wayne. The Indiana Economic Development Corporation offers Guardian Machine Protection up to $1 million in performance-based tax credits. Northeast Indiana Works will provide Guardian with hiring and training assistance. The Fort Wayne City Council also will consider real and business personal property tax abatements.

● Former Sen. Allen Paul (R) could face felony charges due to his alleged unregistered lobbying efforts for the Indiana Department of Veterans' Affairs (IDVA), reports Tony Cook in the Indianapolis Star. Paul, hired without fanfare by IDVA in the Pence Administration for nebulous duties, never registered as a lobbyist despite questions about his role and a request by the Indiana Lobby Registration Commission (there were also questions about his work hours and pay). After the Commission was stonewalled in its efforts to force registration and enter into a deal over fines, it referred the matter to the Marion County Prosecutor's Office. Former Sen. Brent Steele (R) is representing Paul.

IN Court

● You've probably let it slip your mind that it has been five years since the Judicial Nominating Commission last picked Indiana's Chief Justice . . . and, by law, it's time again for the Nominating Commission to select a CJ. Chief Justice Loretta Rush will interview with the Commission to seek reappointment. She was unanimously selected to lead the Court in 2014, becoming the first female CJ, and she had served on the Court for only 637 days at the time, the briefest amount of service for anyone selected chief justice since at least before 1970, when that title was rotated among the justices. She easily won her initial public retention vote in November 2014.

□ All current Supreme Court Justices have been invited to share their thoughts with the Commission about the qualities and attributes important in a Chief Justice during the public portion of the meeting, and each has agreed to do so before the Commission moves into executive session for discussion. Following the executive session, the Commission will convene in a public session to vote on its selection of Indiana's next Chief Justice, and there is no reason to believe that Chief Justice Rush will not retain the post, having earned high marks among the judiciary for her work on innovation, modernization, broader public access, automation, and focus on more assistance for classes which have traditionally had difficulty accessing or traversing the system. While the Court itself has been markedly less unanimous in its decision making than in recent decades (despite having all justice appointed by Republican governors), this has not been seen as a problem by judicial observers.

□ Bear in mind that there hasn't been a CJ selection process that wasn't effectively a fait accompli since the late 1980s.

IN Transition

● The Fort Wayne Journal Gazette details new staff joining the office of U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R). Mitchell Hailstone is the new communications director, coming to the post from work as communications director for U.S. Rep. Mark Green (R-TN) . . . Rep. Banks has also hired Buckley Carlson, "the son of Fox News political commentator Tucker Carlson," who "had applied for a communications job with Banks, according to David Keller, his chief of staff. Keller said that Banks has never met Tucker Carlson, host of the Fox News Channel show "Tucker Carlson Tonight," and did not know that Buckley Carlson was his son when Buckley interviewed. Buckley did not disclose the relationship at the time." Carlson takes "an entry-level job as a special assistant in Banks' office." The University of Virginia alum "is answering phones, responding to correspondence from the congressman's northeast Indiana constituents and assisting with media communications"

● Former Indiana Sen. Doug Eckerty (R) is named by the Madison County Board of Commissioners as the county's new JobSource director, a job that pays some $60,000 annually as well as full county benefits. Eckerty was a key player on workforce development legislation during his Senate tenure.

IN the Lobby

● Joel Elliott leaves his post as chief of staff to U.S. Rep. Abby Finkenauer (D-IA) after service as chief of staff to former U.S. Sen. Joe Donnelly (D) both in the House and Senate, and the former Davis Administration lieutenant gubernatorial aide joins Salesforce as its lead Democratic lobbyist. He founded Consulting for a Common Good before working for Rep. Finkenauer.

● Eli Lilly and Company spent $2.3 million lobbying Congress during the second quarter of 2019 . . . which was not even enough to lift Lilly into the top 20 among the Q2 spenders.

● Expect Vincennes University to restructure the university's government relations office following the death of its longtime leader, the well-liked and respected Phil Rath, who led the government relations function for VU in his role as vice president for financial services and government relations under several different VU presidents. The financial services department has already been reorganized and staffed, with changes in Indianapolis representation expected soon.

PENCE BLAMES MEDIA FOR ECONOMIC UNCERTAINTY: Vice President Mike Pence on Monday insisted the economy is strong and blamed many in the mainstream media for their "irresponsible rhetoric" suggesting otherwise, as some economists raise alarm bells over the U.S. economic outlook (CBS News). Pence, speaking at the Detroit Economic Club, continued the Trump administration's messaging that the economy is strong despite market volatility, and the media is to blame instead. "Despite the irresponsible rhetoric of many in the mainstream media, the American economy is strong, and the U.S. economic outlook remains strong as well," Pence told the group in Detroit Monday. "Now, last week, despite some volatility in global markets, leading retailers also reported strong sales and earnings, and consumer spending posted its strongest reading since March. And under President Trump's leadership, as a son of the heartland myself, I couldn't be more proud to say that the automotive industry is roaring back here in Michigan and all across the heartland." The "fundamentals" of the U.S. economy are solid, the White House asserted Monday, invoking an ill-fated political declaration of a decade ago amid mounting concern that a recession could imperil President Trump's reelection. Senior advisor Kellyanne Conway declared to reporters, "The fact is, the fundamentals of our economy are very strong" (Los Angeles Times). It's a phrase with a history. Republican John McCain was accused of being out of touch when he made a similar declaration during the 2008 presidential campaign just hours before investment bank Lehman Brothers filed for bankruptcy, setting off a stock market crash and global financial decline.

PROFS. DeBOER, GUELL SEE 'SOLID' SIGNALS FOR RECESSION: A recent yield-curve inversion on the bond market, widely considered a negative economic sign, may not mean an imminent recession this year but one is still a possibility through next year, say some Indiana economists (Greninger, Terre Haute Tribune-Star). Economists say that inversion is an indication that investor confidence in the economy is down, as small gains in bonds might be better than potential losses by holding stocks into a recession. "It is a relatively solid signal of an economic downturn as signals go. It hasn't been wrong, but that doesn't mean it can't be wrong now," Robert Guell, professor of economics at Indiana State University. "That has only happened in the past in advance of what has ultimately become a recession." Guell said he does "not think a recession is coming yet, but it is not out of the realm of possibility. President [Donald] Trump's trade policy is making things much more likely for a recession." During the last 50 years, yield curve inversions have occurred before each of the last seven recessions, said Larry Deboer, professor of agricultural economics at Purdue University. And each time a recession started within five to 16 months, he said. This year, the first inversion happened in May, making it possible for recession between October this year and September next year, Deboer said. "This is all a measure of confidence," Deboer said. "It is weird, in a way, because sometimes the markets act as a yield curve inversion causes a recession, but all it is really is a read on what they [investors] are really thinking."

74% OF ECONOMISTS PREDICT RECESSION: A strong majority, 74 percent, of U.S. business economists appear sufficiently concerned about the risks of some of President Donald Trump's economic policies that they expect a recession in the U.S. by the end of 2021 (AP). The economists surveyed by the National Association for Business Economics, in a report released Monday, mostly didn't share Trump's optimistic outlook for the economy, though they generally saw recession coming later than they did in a survey taken in February. Thirty-four percent of the economists surveyed said they believe a slowing economy will tip into recession in 2021. That's up from 25 percent in the February survey. An additional 38 percent of those polled predicted that recession will occur next year, down slightly from 42 percent in February. Another 2 percent of those polled expect a recession to begin this year. In February, 77 percent of the economists expected a recession either this year, next year or in 2021.

BUCHSHON TALKS TRUMP, GUNS AT TOWN HALL: U.S. Rep. Larry Bucshon finally hosted a town hall meeting Monday night in the Tri-State which is his first in a few years (Gorman, WFIE-TV). Some people in the audience call it long overdue. "And I explained this to the crowd, that I was going to do some town halls in the August recess and because of the hot political climate, the Capitol police said it's pretty hot right now, and they recommended members of congress limit this type of event," Bucshon responded when asked about the gap. Bucshon told the crowd he's optimistic about America. The first question of the night was related to the President. "The reality is I don't support him on everything," Bucshon stated. "But, if you look at his agenda, it is a right of center conservative agenda, and that's what I support as a congressman." One hot topic discussed related to his stance on gun control. "Just hypothetically, we're going to ban them," Bucshon used as an example. "Are you going to confiscate every weapon that is currently in every household in America that is that kind of weapon? Ok, I understand that. Then you are violating the constitution."

BIDEN LEAD INCREASES IN CNN POLL: Joe Biden has expanded his edge over the Democratic field in a new CNN poll conducted by SSRS, with 29% of Democratic and Democratic-leaning registered voters saying they back the former vice president. That's up 7 points compared with a late June CNN survey. No other candidate has made meaningful gains over that time. The shift returns Biden to a double-digit lead over his nearest competitors, Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders at 15% and Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren at 14%. Their support is largely unchanged since earlier this summer. South Bend

Mayor Pete Buttigieg is at 5%. Aside from Biden's increase, the only statistically meaningful change in the candidate standings is a 12-point decline in support for California Sen. Kamala Harris, who stood at 17% support in the June poll but now has the backing of 5% of potential Democratic voters.

TEACHERS TESTIFY ABOUT PAY BEFORE NEXT LEVEL COMMISSION: When Robin Robinson stood in front of the governor's teacher pay commission on Monday, she came prepared with a script: a paper listing her salary, year by year. As the eighth-grade social studies teacher for the Monroe-Gregg School District recited her annual salaries, a trend became clear. She has been teaching for more than 30 years, but around 15 years ago her salary stopped growing. Then it started shrinking, landing below $60,000 (Fittes, Chalkbeat). The seven-member commission panel — made up of former corporate executives, a philanthropist, and non-profit leaders — heard many similar stories as teachers offered their ideas and pleas for better pay. The suggestions put forth over more than two hours largely reiterated familiar calls: to reallocate funding from charter schools to public schools, strengthen teachers' power to bargain their contracts, and bring back a pay scale that guarantees more pay for teachers each year they work. "There are so many seemingly obvious solutions," said Marydell Forbes, an English teacher at West Lafayette Jr./Sr. High School. "With all due respect, this is not rocket science. And while we are passionate, we are not the Peace Corps." Monday night was the public's first chance to provide input to the state commission tasked with making recommendations for how to improve teacher salaries. Until now the group has only met privately — a decision the state's public access counselor previously said was legal although it stirred controversy, especially among educators.

HOOSIER FARMERS IN THE CROSS HAIR: Farmers are in the cross hairs of the ongoing trade dispute between the U.S. and its partners, according to a Purdue professor. Chris Hurt, professor of agriculture economics at Purdue University, said Wednesday the trade dispute with China is having a considerable impact on Indiana farmers. "The tariffs put into place last year are reducing the amount of exports of agricultural products," Hurt said (de la Bastide, Anderson Herald-Bulletin). "The trade dispute with China is the focal point of the Trump administration." He said there are also concerns about the trade talks with Canada and Mexico that have not been settled. China is the largest importer of soybeans and that Canada and Mexico are in the top five when it comes to imports, he said. "Agriculture is in the cross hair," he said. "There is a lot of concern and discomfort among Indiana farmers." Hurt said, for the most part, the agricultural community is supportive of the overall direction of the trade talks. "Farmers want access to the markets," he said. "President Trump has brought the trade issue to the forefront." A survey done by the Indiana Farm Bureau found that 72% of respondents indicated the trade situation is jeopardizing their operation. "The agriculture industry is dealing with a number of issues that impact a farmer's bottom line right now," Randy Kron, president of the Indiana Farm Bureau, said in a press release. "There's a surplus of commodities in the market due to higher than average yields, and over the last five years farmers have seen a 50% drop in farm income. Add the additional impacts of trade wars and tariffs to the existing issues, and the financial situation has become even more concerning.

SENATORS WARY OF USDA CROP REPORT: The U.S. Department of Agriculture has more confidence in this year's corn harvest than Hoosier farmers do, according to Indiana's senators (Francisco, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). Republican Sens. Todd Young and Mike Braun have written to USDA Secretary Sonny Perdue to question the department's projected corn yields. The USDA predicted Aug. 12 that American farmers would produce 169.5 bushels of corn per acre, an increase from 166 bushels in its July outlook. "Given the unprecedented rains this spring, which brought flooding and soggy fields across the Midwest, and particularly in the Hoosier state, this latest estimate perplexes many farmers," Young and Braun wrote in their letter, dated Friday. They said the department's National Agriculture Statistics Service estimated that only 79% of Indiana's corn crop had been planted by Aug. 12, with 15% planted after mid-June, raising worries about this year's harvest after a shortened growing season. "Nothing like 2019 has happened in our history before," Greg Matli, Indiana statistician for the statistics service, said last week at an Indiana State Fair forum on the status of Hoosier crops, according to a report by the Purdue University News Service.

PURDUE FINDS FARMLAND VALUE DECLINES FOR 5TH STRAIGHT YEAR: The value of top-quality farmland in Indiana has declined continuing a five-year trend, according to the latest data from Purdue University. The statewide average of the best cropland is $8,212 per acre, down more than five percent, or $456 per acre, from the same period last year (Mills, Inside Indiana Business). Purdue's survey shows average and poor-quality farmland values also dropped, but not as much. Average quality farmland declined by 0.9 percent. Purdue says the poor-quality farmland decline was so small it resulted in a 0.0 percent change. The survey, conducted with farm managers, lenders, and farmers, compared values from June 2018 to June 2019. The survey also looked at cash rents farmers pay to landowners. The statewide average of top-quality farmland had a cash rent of $249 per acre, a drop of 4.6 percent ($12) per acre. Purdue agricultural economist Michael Langemeier called it an "enigma" on why values of the best farmland had the biggest decline. "I would have thought the lower productive land to decline more than the top productive land. But I think what's going on there's pressure to get the cash rent market, in particular, in line with where the net returns are."

AUTOMAKERS DEFY ENRAGED TRUMP ON AUTO EMISSION ROLLBACKS: The White House, blindsided by a pact between California and four automakers to oppose President Trump's auto emissions rollbacks, has mounted an effort to prevent any more from joining the other side. Toyota, Fiat Chrysler and General Motors were all summoned by a senior Trump adviser to a White House meeting last month where he pressed them to stand by the president's own initiative, according to four people familiar with the talks (New York Times). But even as the White House was working to do this, it was losing ground. Yet another company, Mercedes-Benz, is now preparing to join the California agreement, according to two people familiar with the German company's plans. Mr. Trump, described by three people as "enraged" by California's deal, has also demanded that his staffers step up the pace to complete his plan. His proposal, however, is directly at odds with the wishes of many automakers, which fear that the aggressive rollbacks will spark a legal battle between California and the federal government that could split the United States car market in two. The administration's efforts to weaken the Obama-era pollution rules could be rendered irrelevant if too many automakers join California in opposition before the plan can be put into effect. That could imperil one of Mr. Trump's most far-reaching rollbacks of climate-change policies.

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: It's way, waaaay early, but the CNN Poll is interesting on one key point: The Democratic old folks are leading. Septuagenarians Joe Biden, Bernie Sanders and Elizabeth Warren are turning this into, essentially, a three-person race. The winner gets to take on septuagenarian President Donald Trump. Passing the torch to a new generation doesn't appear to be in the cards at this point. We'll see if this trend holds into the fall. - Brian A. Howey

BIDEN BEGINS IOWA TV AD CAMPAIGN: Joe Biden has kicked off a $500,000 TV ad buy in Iowa (Howey Politics Indiana). "We know in our bones this election is different. All polls agree Joe Biden is the strongest Democrat to do the job." The ad calls President Trump a "vicious president."

WARREN APOLOGIZES TO NATIVE AMERICANS: Sen. Elizabeth Warren opened her remarks at a Native American presidential forum with a more straightforward version of the apology she has offered in the past for identifying as a Native American for two decades while she was a law professor (Washington Post). "I want to say this, like anyone who's been honest with themselves, I know that I have made mistakes," Warren said. "I am sorry for harm that I have caused. I have listened and I have learned a lot, and I am grateful for the many conversations that we've had together." The remarks mark her latest effort to navigate what has been a politically fraught subject dating back to her first run for Senate in 2012. In that race, her Republican opponent criticized her for identifying as a Native American during her career as a law professor. Warren said she did so because of family stories that she had Cherokee and Delaware ancestry, but critics accused her of lying to advance her prospects, even though there has been no evidence she benefited professionally.

28% OF HOOSIERS DON'T KNOW BUTTIGIEG: Do you know who Mayor Pete is? What if he's referred to as Pete Buttigieg? Even though the Democrat mayor of South Bend is running for president and has made the rounds on late night TV and the debates, over a quarter of the people in Marion County don't know who he is or anything about him, says a new poll from Mason Strategies (Davis, WIBC). The poll of likely voters in Marion County, considered a Democrat stronghold, show 28 percent of the people surveyed had no opinion or did not know who Buttigieg was. That means he may have a lot of name recognition problems with voters if he wants to pass front runners Joe Biden and Elizabeth Warren. The poll of 400 people says 41 percent have a favorable or somewhat favorable opinion. Another 28 percent have an unfavorable opinion. Buttigieg has a favorable rating of only 36 percent of African-Americans polled, and 41 percent had no opinion or had not heard of him.

WOMEN FOR TRUMP EVENT IN TAMPA: On Thursday, August 22, 2019 Women for Trump will host "An Evening to Empower", a campaign coalition event centered around the 99th anniversary of the ratification of the 19th amendment. The event is scheduled to take place at the Tampa Convention Center in Tampa, Florida. The Honorable Kellyanne Conway, Florida First Lady Casey DeSantis, and Former Florida Attorney General Pam Bondi will attend the event and address attendees (Howey Politics Indiana). The event will be hosted by the Donald J. Trump for President, Inc. and will include a presentation by the Trump Victory Leadership Initiative (TVLI), a nationwide effort designed to mobilize volunteers, register and engage voters in an effort to re-elect President Trump and to support down-ballot republicans in 2020. Women for Trump will be participating in TVLI efforts across the country on August 22nd all in an effort to register voters ahead of the 2020 elections.

MOOCH PUTTING TOGETHER ANTI-TRUMP COALITION: Anthony Scaramucci, a former White House communications director who has recently withdrawn his support for President Donald Trump, said Monday that he is putting together a coalition of former Trump Cabinet officials to denounce the President ahead of the 2020 election (CNN). "I'm in the process of putting together a team of people that feel the exact same way that I do. This is not a 'Never Trump' situation. This not just screeching rhetoric. This is -- OK, the guy is unstable. Everyone inside knows it, everyone outside knows it. Let's see if we can find a viable alternative," Scaramucci told CNN's Alisyn Camerota on "New Day."

Congress

YOUNG PUSHES FOR TOBACCO AGE BILL: U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R-Ind.) held a press conference with Teens for Tobacco 21, a student organization at Floyd Central High School, on the Tobacco to 21 Act. The bipartisan legislation would prohibit the sale of tobacco products, including e-cigarettes, to anyone under the age of 21 (Howey Politics Indiana). "The CDC estimates that approximately 4.9 million middle and high school students nationwide were current users of some type of tobacco product last year," said Senator Young. "With vaping and e-cigarette use on the rise among middle and high school students, we have to act now to protect Hoosier teens. I'm encouraged to see strong Hoosier leaders in southern Indiana taking a stand to raise the tobacco age to 21."

BANKS DEFENDS ISRAEL OVER REP. TLAIB: Rep. Rashida Tlaib (D-MI) was eligible to travel to Israel as part of a Congressional delegation trip with Rep. Steny Hoyer (D-MD), but the Democratic congresswoman declined to participate after she was asked by the Jewish state to sign a letter promising not to promote boycotting of Israel during her visit (Davis, WIBC). Rep. Tlaib has been lashing out in the press and on social media in the wake of Israel's decision to supposedly block the Michigan Rep. and her colleague, Minnesota Rep. Ilhan Omar from entering the country - a move that has reportedly prompted House Democrats to consider retaliatory moves against two top American and Israeli diplomats. Indiana Rep. Jim Banks took to social media last Friday to provide clarity on the controversy. "Let's be clear: Israel is not barring US Reps entry. @RepRashida could've gone with @StenyHoyer on his delegation trip to Israel," tweeted Banks. "Instead she decided to go with @Ilhan on a trip funded by anti-Semitic, terror-linked group called Miftah - THAT is why Israel refused them."

PAUL RYAN MOVING FROM WISCONSIN TO DC: Paul Ryan is moving his family to the city he was always giddy to leave (Politico). The former speaker of the House and onetime GOP vice presidential nominee is leaving his longtime home of Janesville, Wis., and will rent a house in the Maryland suburbs of Washington. 'Now in the private sector, Paul and his family are temporarily renting a house in Maryland, and he'll be spending time there as well as their family home in Janesville,' a Ryan aide told POLITICO.

General Assembly

BLACK CAUCUS REACTS TO REP. LUCAS NOOSE POSTING: An Indiana lawmaker who posted nooses under a Facebook story about a black man pleading guilty to rape is drawing criticism for using racist imagery (AP). Republican state Rep. Jim Lucas, from Seymour, posted a picture of a gallows with two nooses under a WISH-TV story about Marquise Dozier's case. Lucas says he wanted to punish the man and believes in capital punishment. Dozier faces up to 72 years in prison. Lucas says he's previously posted the image under stories involving white offenders. Lucas says he isn't racist and doesn't believe the photo is. The chair of the Indiana Black Legislative Caucus blasted the photo. Democratic state Rep. Robin Shackleford tells The Indianapolis Star noose imagery is well-known to be connected to the lynchings of African Americans and the "normalization of racism" must end.

BUSINESS: BAYER SELLING DIVISION TO ELANCO - Bayer is selling its animal-health business to an American rival for $7.6 billion, part of the German drug and chemicals giant's plan to divest assets amid mounting legal liabilities from its Roundup herbicide (Wall Street Journal). The deal to sell the unit to Elanco ELAN 1.53% Animal Health Inc., based in Greenfield, Ind., would create a new industry heavyweight in the business of preventing and treating diseases for pets and livestock. The combined company would have a market share of roughly 13%, making it the second-largest animal-health company by revenue, according to Germany's Baader Bank. Bayer said it would get $5.3 billion in cash and retain a stake worth $2.3 billion in Elanco, and said it plans to exit this stake over time.

ENVIRONMENT: CHEMICAL LEVELS RECEDE ON LAKE MICHIGAN BEACHES - Ammonia levels are now within permitted levels and cyanide levels continue to decrease at the site of last week's industrial spill by ArcelorMittal in the local east branch of the Little Calumet River, according to the company (NWI Times). "We have been conducting daily samplings at the two impacted wastewater outfalls, and we are also conducting daily downstream samplings every quarter mile for 2.5 miles of the Little Calumet River," according to a press release from ArcelorMittal. "As a precautionary measure and in support of stakeholder requests, we have expanded our testing to include the lakeshore from Porter Beach to the westernmost extent of West Beach." "Unfortunately, these are not real-time results as there is an inherent delay in processing daily tests by a third-party analytical lab," the company said. "However, the constituents of concern have demonstrated a pattern of daily improvement since Thursday."

CENSUS: COMMITTEE HAS FIRST MEETING - Indiana state officials are kickstarting efforts to support the U.S. Census Bureau ahead of next year's population count (Indiana Public Media). Monday marked the first meeting of Indiana's Complete Count Committee. The census affects a lot in Indiana. Beyond helping decide how legislative districts are drawn, the population count influences urban planning, rural development and, says Census Bureau regional director Marilyn Sanders, federal funding. "Over $675 billion are distributed based on census data every single year," Sanders says.

HEALTH: IN/KY PLANNED PARENTHOOD SEES FUNDING BOOST - Planned Parenthood of Indiana and Kentucky is receiving a nearly $1 million funding boost and is adding staffers since its merger with the group's Seattle-based affiliate earlier this year (AP). Additional money was promised with the merger announced in February as the wealthier chapter for Washington, Idaho, Hawaii and Alaska looked to help in states facing tougher anti-abortion laws. The Indiana and Kentucky group's tax filings show deficits of nearly $1.3 million in 2017 and $1.7 million in 2016 despite closing several clinics in recent years, the Indianapolis Business Journal reported. The organization has been able to increase salaries for its Indiana and Kentucky jobs while adding 45 positions this year, said Chris Charbonneau, who was CEO of the Seattle-based chapter when the merger was announced and is now also leading the Indianapolis-based affiliate. "We can help women that Mike Pence hurt," Charbonneau said, referring to the former Indiana governor who is now vice president. "That's hugely attractive to people who feel like they are undoing damage."

EDUCATION: PURDUE PROF. TYNER DIES - Purdue President Mitch Daniels tweeted Sunday night that Dr. Wallace "Wally" Tyner has died. Dr. Tyner was an Agriculture Economics professor at Purdue (WLFI-TV). According to a biography on the College of Agriculture website, Dr. Tyner worked for more than 40 years researching issues regarding agricultural economics, natural resource and energy economics, and public policy. He has even testified before the U.S. House of Representatives on renewable fuel standard. It is unclear how Tyner passed. President Daniels said in his tweet, "Deeply saddened at the loss of Dr. Wally Tyner. A great scholar and warm, wonderful human being. A tragic way to start the school year. Thank you, Wally, for all you did and meant to Purdue."

EDUCATION: PURDUE PROF. MARGERUM PASSES AT AGE 89 - Purdue is mourning the loss of retired Professor Dale Margerum. According to the university's website, the professor of chemistry died Wednesday at his West Lafayette home (WLFI-TV). He taught at Purdue for 54 years before retiring with distinction in 2008. His wife, Sonya, served as West Lafayette Mayor for 24 years. In 2015, the couple started the Sonya and Dale Margerum West Lafayette History and Research Center Endowment. It supports the West Lafayette Public Library's history and research center. Margerum was 89 years old.

EDUCATION: SCHURZ GIVES $2M TO IU'S KINSEY INSTITUTE - A former Herald-Times publisher has donated $2 million to Indiana University's center for the study of human sexuality (Reschke, Bloomington Herald-Times). Scott Schurz's gift will be used to establish the Kinsey Institute Bicentennial Endowed Chair, according to an IU news release. It will also be used to expand the Kinsey Institute's existing scientific research projects and pursue pilot studies in emerging fields of sexological research.

Horseshoe Hammond Casino and Ameristar Casino East Chicago are both set to open sports betting areas at their respective casinos ahead of the kickoff to the 2019 NFL season (Brown, Inside Indiana Business). Horseshoe Hammond will open The Book, a 5,300-square-foot sports book which will allow people to wager on a variety of sports, including football, basketball, baseball and hockey, beginning September 4. The other locations include Harrah's Hoosier Park Racing & Casino in Anderson, Horseshoe Southern Indiana, Indiana Grand Racing & Casino in Shelbyville, and Winner's Circle locations in Indianapolis New Haven. "The legalization of sports betting in Indiana presents a huge opportunity for Horseshoe Hammond," said Dan Nita, regional president of Caesars Entertainment, the parent of Horseshoe Hammond. "We recognize the need to continually evolve and offer our guests new and exciting entertainment experiences. We are proud to be among the first in Indiana to offer sports betting. I'm optimistic of the positive effect this will have on attracting new customers to our casino."

STATE FAIR: ATTENDANCE INCREASES - Indiana State Fair officials say attendance at this year's state fair increased over 2018. A total of 878,857 people visited the Indianapolis State Fairgrounds to attend the 17-day event, compared to 860,131 last year (Inside Indiana Business). Event representatives say the fair is the state's biggest multi-day event celebrating Hoosiers' spirit and agricultural heritage.

DNR: MAN DONATES HUDSON LAKE PUBLIC ACCESS SITE - Indiana needs more people like Jack DeGroot. If the state had more folks like this generous man, we'd have a lot more public access on northern Indiana lakes. You see, the 75-year old Eagle Global Logistics retiree probably could have made some money on the one acre land parcel he gifted to the Indiana DNR for the new Hudson Lake public access (South Bend Tribune). But he didn't. He chose to donate the land that recently became the Andrew L. DeGroot public access site. "God gave us a reason to do it by blessing my family use of the lake over the years and this was our opportunity to give something back," said the modest Hudson Lake man.

IDEM: CLEANUP PLAN FOR REID HOSPITAL SET - A cleanup plan has been approved at the site of a demolished hospital in eastern Indiana. The Indiana Department of Environmental Management wants cleanup work on two areas at the former Reid Hospital complex in Richmond. The Richmond Palladium-Item reports IDEM wants a former dumping ground in a wooded area cleaned up. A March inspection found solid waste, including a partially buried metal drum. The agency's cleanup plan calls for waste found at the surface to be removed and then replaced by 2 feet of clean fill on top. IDEM also wants a cleanup of a small area with pink soil near what was once the property's main entrance.

ECONOMY: US STEEL LAYOFFS COMING - In a Worker Adjustment and Retraining Notification filed on Aug. 5, the Pittsburgh-based company said it expects to let go fewer than 200 workers following its decision to halt production at the Michigan facility. In mid-June, the company said it would idle two blast furnaces at its Great Lakes and Gary Works plants, citing lower steel prices and softening demand. U.S. Steel said the lay-offs at the Michigan plant could last beyond six months. They will impact nearly every area of the facility, from blast furnace to finishing operations, a company spokeswoman told Reuters.

Tickets for both shows will go on sale this Friday, August 23 at 10 a.m. and will be available at BrownCountyMusicCenter.com and at Ticketmaster.com.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP RETREATS FROM BACKGROUND CHECKS - President Trump appears to be backing away from potential support for gun background check legislation, according to White House aides, congressional leaders and gun advocates, dimming prospects that Washington will approve significant new gun measures in the wake of mass shootings that left 31 dead (Washington Post). Immediately after the carnage in El Paso and Dayton, Ohio, Trump said "there is a great appetite" for tightening background checks on people who buy firearms. But in recent days, Trump has focused in public remarks on the need to keep guns out of the hands of the mentally ill while emphasizing that the nation already has "very strong background checks right now" — positions that hew more closely to the views of the National Rifle Association. Behind the scenes, Trump's communication with key lawmakers, including Sen. Joe Manchin III, a moderate Democrat from West Virginia who has sought to develop bipartisan gun-control measures, has gone mostly cold, according to Capitol Hill aides, in part because Congress has left town for its summer recess.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP PONDERES PAYROLL TAX CUT - Several senior White House officials have begun discussing whether to push for a temporary payroll tax cut as a way to arrest an economic slowdown, three people familiar with the discussions said, revealing growing concerns about the economy among President Trump's top economic aides (Washington Post). The talks are still in their early stages and have included a range of other tax breaks. The officials also have not decided whether to formally push Congress to approve any of these measures, these people said, speaking on the condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to disclose internal discussions. But the White House increasingly is discussing ideas to boost a slowing economy, they said. Even though deliberations about the payroll tax cut were held Monday, the White House released a statement disputing that the idea was actively under "consideration."

WHITE HOUSE: ISIS COMEBACK IN SYRIA, IRAQ AFTER TRUMP'S TROOP DRAWDOWN - Five months after American-backed forces ousted the Islamic State from its last shard of territory in Syria, the terrorist group is gathering new strength, conducting guerrilla attacks across Iraq and Syria, retooling its financial networks and targeting new recruits at an allied-run tent camp, American and Iraqi military and intelligence officers said (New York Times). Though President Trump hailed a total defeat of the Islamic State this year, defense officials in the region see things differently, acknowledging that what remains of the terrorist group is here to stay. A recent inspector general's report warned that a drawdown this year from 2,000 American forces in Syria to less than half of that, ordered by Mr. Trump, has meant the American military has had to cut back support for Syrian partner forces fighting ISIS. For now, American and international forces can only try to ensure that ISIS remains contained and away from urban areas.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP/PENCE SCHEDULE - President Trump will have lunch with the Vice President Pence at 12:45 p.m. At 2 p.m., Romanian President Klaus Iohannis will arrive at the White House. At 2:10, Trump will have a meeting with Iohannis.

JUSTICE: ACTING PRISON CHIEF REMOVED - The acting chief of the federal Bureau of Prisons has been ousted from his post following the suicide of disgraced financier Jeffrey Epstein in a New York detention facility as he faced sex-trafficking charges (Wall Street Journal). Hugh Hurwitz, who had been serving as the head of the federal prison system on a temporary basis since May 2018, was reassigned to a different post, Attorney General William Barr announced Monday. The leadership changes come more than a week after Mr. Epstein hanged himself at the Metropolitan Correctional Center in Manhattan, where Mr. Barr has said investigators uncovered "serious irregularities."

HEALTH: PLANNED PARENTHOOD LEAVES FAMILY PROGRAM - Planned Parenthood's affiliates will tell the Trump administration Monday that they will leave the federal family planning program rather than comply with new abortion restrictions (The Hill). The Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) had set a Monday deadline for Title X family planning grantees to prove they are complying with new rules banning providers from referring women for abortions. Planned Parenthood said Monday its affiliates cannot ethically comply with the changes, which it called a "gag rule" on health care providers. That means Planned Parenthood's affiliates will lose millions of dollars in federal funding that it used to provide birth control and other reproductive health care services to low-income women and men. "Due to an unethical and dangerous gag rule, the Trump administration has forced Planned Parenthood grantees out of Title X," said acting Planned Parenthood President Alexis McGill Johnson.

NEW YORK: NYPD FIRES OFFICER IN GARNER DEATH - After five years of investigations and protests, New York City's police commissioner on Monday fired an officer involved in the 2014 chokehold death of an unarmed black man whose dying cries of "I can't breathe" fueled a national debate over race and police use of force (AP). Police Commissioner James O'Neill's announced at a midday news conference that he had fired Officer Daniel Pantaleo, who is white, based on a recent recommendation of a department disciplinary judge. He said it was clear that Pantaleo "can no longer effectively serve as a New York City police officer." "None of us can take back our decisions," O'Neill said, "especially when they lead to the death of another human being."

CITIES: NOTRE DAME, SOUTH BEND TO BUILD HYDROELECTION FACILITY - The St. Joseph River in downtown South Bend will once again generate power, just as it did a century ago for riverside factories. The University of Notre Dame and the city of South Bend broke ground Monday on a 2.5-megawatt hydroelectric generation facility on the dam that stretches across the river (Mills, Inside Indiana Business). The primarily underground facility is part of the university's efforts to reduce its carbon footprint by offsetting nearly 9,700 tons of carbon dioxide annually. "We move another step closer to our sustainability goals with construction of this facility," said Rev. John Jenkins, the university's president.

CITIES: COLUMBUS SETTLES SUIT WITH FORMER MAYOR - The Columbus Police Department and the city of Columbus have reached a settlement with former mayor Kristen Brown, agreeing to pay her $32,000 for attorneys fees, court costs and other expenses Brown incurred in a public access lawsuit (McClure, Columbus Republic). The settlement agreement was announced today, along with the city and Brown's request that the court dismiss an appeal as the parties have resolved the matter. Brown had said her attorney fees were approaching $50,000 in the case. The city has paid Faegre Baker Daniels $79,813.50 in fees for legal representation in Brown's lawsuit, according to city records. The settlement agreement was signed Aug. 9 by Alan Whitted, Columbus City attorney and Aug. 12 by Brown, according to court documents.

CITIES: CROWN POINT INCREASES EMPLOYEE PAY - Non-public safety workers may be receiving a little more in their paychecks next year. Some department heads can also expect a raise. Looking ahead to September's meeting on the budget, Mayor David Uran and the City Council agreed Thursday on the following pay increases for 2020: 4% raise for non-public safety workers (NWI Times). $5,000 raise for department heads in information technology, human resources, parks, special events and building/planning. City Council salaries would increase to $15,000. The mayor and council had earlier agreed to 2% raises for police and fire personnel. According to Gregory Guerrettaz, city financial adviser with the Plainfield-based firm of Financial Solutions Group Inc., these pay increases are "doable" and in line with other area communities of similar size.

CITIES: WESTFIELD TRANSFORMATION CONTINUES - Indiana's fastest growing city is showing no signs of slowing down. Mayor Andy Cook says now that Westfield has established itself as a destination for family sports with the Grand Park Sports Campus, the $35 million Grand Junction Plaza will transform the city's downtown into a destination, a place "where people want to be." Cook says the project, more than a decade in the making, is an example of a place making strategy necessary for Midwest cities to attract investment and talent. "It's very difficult in this flat topography and lack of natural resources, so we have to be very creative," said Cook, who believes "the time is right" for Westfield to create a signature space. Cook talked about the city's growth and an upcoming trade trip to Japan on this weekend's edition of Inside INdiana Business with Gerry Dick. In March, the Westfield City Council approved a funding plan for the Grand Junction Plaza redevelopment project, which will include three pavilions, an outdoor performance venue, restaurants and cafes and serve as a gathering place for festivals, markets and other events throughout the year.

CITIES: 135 JOBS COMING TO HAMMOND - A Hammond factory recently vacated by Michigan-based Lear Corp. didn't sit empty for very long. Our partners at The Times of Northwest Indiana report Midland Metal Products has taken over the former seat factory, having relocated from Chicago after 95 years, bringing 135 new jobs to the region (Inside Indiana Business). "Midland Metal Products moved to Hammond due to better business climate and convenient location," said Anne Anderson, Hammond director of economic development.

CITIES: NOBLESVILLE PD CHIEF TO RETIRE - Noblesville Chief of Police Kevin Jowitt announced Monday he will retire in a few months (CBS4). His last day will be on Jan. 31, 2020. Jowitt has been in the role for ten years, which officials say is the second longest police chief tenure in the city's history. He was appointed chief in 2009. "After careful consideration the time has come for me to take another path," Jowitt said. "It has been an honor to work alongside my law enforcement colleagues, and a privilege to serve the Noblesville community as chief. My law enforcement career has been challenging, rewarding and personally fulfilling." Jowitt has served in the law enforcement career for more than 40 years.

COUNTIES: FLOYD PAY HIKES COME VIA ATTRITION - Floyd County Auditor Scott Clark is looking for a way to not only attract a qualified employee, but one who will stick around longer than a few months (Morris, News & Tribune). He believes he has found the money to make that happen. The employee, who will be the property tax manager, is critical to his office and the county, he said. But he has had trouble keeping someone in that position due to its salary. Clark will now supplement the new hire's pay out of his ineligible account which he controls. The Floyd County Council agreed to the plan and approved the measure last week by appropriating the funds to be used for salary. "I was successful in upgrading the salary to become more competitive in the local labor market," he said in an email. Floyd County Clerk Danita Burks also figured out a way to give her employees raises. When one of her employees recently quit, she decided to use some of that person's salary and spread it out to her employees and not fill the vacancy. The move accomplishes two goals — it gave employees a needed raise and saves the county money.

Teachers give Holcomb's commission ideas for increasing pay

KEYWORDS EDUCATION & WORKFORCE DEVELOPMENT / GOVERNMENT / PUBLIC SCHOOLS / STATE GOVERNMENT / TEACHERS

The commission created by Gov. Eric Holcomb to find ways to boost teacher pay in Indiana heard from about two dozen current and former educators Monday night in its first public hearing.

The Next Level Teacher Compensation Commission is tasked with conducting research, receiving feedback and providing a report to Holcomb and state lawmakers before the 2021 legislative session.

More than 200 people attended the listening session at Ivy Tech Culinary and Conference Center in the first of three public hearings the commission has planned. The other two later this month will be in Evansville and Elkhart.

Many of the speakers repeated frustrations that were heard during the legislative session—complaining about salaries that have not increased in years or have decreased, emphasizing the importance of increasing teacher pay and talking about an ongoing teacher shortage.

Keith Gambill, president of the Indiana State Teachers Association, said 642 jobs in K-12 education are currently open in the state.

“Indiana has pushed its teachers to the breaking point,” Gambill said. “More teachers are leaving the profession than ever before, and pay is the No. 1 reason.”

Some teachers had specific suggestions for how to increase teacher pay, including strengthening collective bargaining, finding a way to decrease health care costs, spending some of the state's surplus, removing property-tax caps, redirecting dollars spent on standardized testing and giving teachers a $20,000 tax credit.

“I don't think this is rocket science,” said Marydell Forbes, an English teacher from West Lafayette who mentioned cutting standardized testing costs and eliminating property-tax caps.

One of the most common suggestions was to reinstate salary schedules for teachers that would be based on years of experience and educational attainment. Legislation passed in 2011 eliminated traditional salary schedules and made compensation more dependent on student achievement.

Teresa Meredith, a former president of ISTA who is now a fourth grade teacher, said a salary schedule could provide educators some guarantee and confidence that they'll know what they could earn in future years.

"I have colleagues who are afraid to start families," Meredith said.

Some teachers also expressed irritation that they have already repeatedly shared the same concerns and recommendations with state lawmakers for years without change.

"We have been saying the same thing over and over," Amber Seibert, an eighth grade English teacher, said. "I'm over it."

Teacher pay was one of the key issues that surrounded the legislative session that ended in April. Republicans said they made significant progress in increasing K-12 funding and stressed that it is up to the local school districts to make sure the extra dollars go to teachers paychecks. Democrats argue the 2.5% annual increases to K-12 funding don't go far enough.

Seibert also complained about the date and time of the hearing, pointing out that it could have been scheduled during the summer as opposed to after the new school year started.

"It's a school night," Seibert said. "I had all summer off."

Commission Chairman Michael Smith, who is the former chairman, president and CEO of Mayflower Group, called the ideas that were shared "cheerful" and "thoughtful" after the two-hour meeting.

"You will keep me awake thinking about the challenges that you face," Smith said.

The commission has previously been criticized for meeting privately and for lacking current teachers as members. Emily Holt, a math teacher at Westfield High School, is the only current teacher involved with the commission, but she is only an advisory member.

Holt was at the meeting Monday night, along with six other commission and advisory council members—Smith; Katie Jenner, senior education adviser to Holcomb; Tom Easterday, former senior executive vice president, secretary and chief legal officer for Subaru of Indiana Automotive; Melissa Ambre, director of the Office of School Finance for the Indiana Department of Education; Lee Ann Kwiatkowski, director of public education and CEO of Muncie Community Schools; and Dan Holub, executive director of the Indiana State Teachers Association.

Smith said they have already received more than 2,000 suggestions from nearly 800 teachers and concerned community members through an online submission form.

"I think it's safe to say our governor is determined to lead us to a competitive position," Smith said.

RANSOMWARE ATTACKS HITTING CITIES ACROSS U.S.: This has been the summer of crippling ransomware attacks. Wilmer — a town of almost 5,000 people just south of Dallas — is one of 22 cities across Texas that are simultaneously being held hostage for millions of dollars after a sophisticated hacker, perhaps a group of them, infiltrated their computer systems and encrypted their data (New York Times). The attack instigated a statewide disaster-style response that includes the National Guard and a widening F.B.I. inquiry. More than 40 municipalities have been the victims of cyberattacks this year, from major cities such as Baltimore, Albany and Laredo, Tex., to smaller towns including Lake City, Fla. Lake City is one of the few cities to have paid a ransom demand — about $460,000 in Bitcoin, a cryptocurrency — because it thought reconstructing its systems would be even more costly. The majority have targeted small-town America, figuring that sleepy, cash-strapped local governments are the least likely to have updated their cyberdefenses or backed up their data.

TRUMP DISAPPROVAL AT 62% IN AP POLL: About 6 in 10 Americans disapprove of President Donald Trump's overall job performance, according to a new poll released Thursday by The Associated Press-NORC Center for Public Affairs Research, which finds some support for the president's handling of the U.S. economy but gives him weak marks on other major issues. Just 36% of Americans approve of the way Trump is handling his job as president; 62% disapprove. The numbers may be ugly for a first-term president facing reelection in 14 months, but they are remarkably consistent. Trump's approval rating has never dipped below 32% or risen above 42% in AP-NORC polls since he took office. No other president has stayed within so narrow a band. Since Gallup began measuring presidential approval, Trump is the only president whose rating has never been above 50%. Still, several — Harry Truman, Richard Nixon, Jimmy Carter, George H.W. Bush and George W. Bush — logged ratings worse than Trump's lowest rating so far at some point during their time in office.

TRADE DEAL WITH CHINA SEEN AS 'IMPROBABLE': Sources close to President Trump tell Axios Jonathan Swan that the White House is in a China bind: We're told a trade deal with China is "tough to improbable" in this deteriorating environment, with escalating security tensions between Washington and Beijing. The biggest tool Trump has to pump the economy and the markets is a trade deal with China. But if anything, senior administration officials have turned harder against China in recent weeks. This has less to do with trade than it does with national security, according to senior administration officials and sources briefed on the president's thinking. U.S. intelligence officials are worried about Hong Kong further deteriorating, and about the risk of the Chinese military overreaching in Hong Kong — and perhaps even in Taiwan. When Secretary of State Mike Pompeo and Defense Secretary Mark Esper visited Australia earlier this month, they delivered an unequivocal message to senior Australian officials: The U.S. plans to forcefully push back against China's destabilizing behavior in the Asia-Pacific.

U.S. MANUFACTURING GROWTH AT LOWEST LEVEL IN DECADE: U.S. manufacturer growth slowed to the lowest level in almost 10 years in August, the latest sign that the trade war may be exacerbating the economic slowdown (CNBC). The U.S. manufacturing PMI (purchasing managers' index) was 49.9 in August, down from 50.4 in July and below the neutral 50.0 threshold for the first time since September 2009, according to IHS Markit. Any reading below 50 signals a contraction. The survey is an initial reading for the month of August. The final figure will be released Sept. 3. "Manufacturing companies continued to feel the impact of slowing global economic conditions," Tim Moore, economics associate director at Markit, said in a statement Thursday. "August's survey data provides a clear signal that economic growth has continued to soften in the third quarter."

FBI, IMPD TO LEAD CHURCHES IN ACTIVE SHOOTER DRILLS: The FBI will join Indianapolis police Sunday to train local religious leaders how to keep their houses of worship safe (Berman, WIBC). The three-hour session at the Indianapolis Hebrew Congregation will cover how to spot potential gunmen before they open fire. There'll also be training on how to respond if a shooting does happen. Baptist minister Markel Hutchins chairs the Atlanta-based civil rights group Movement Forward and the group's "One Congregation, One Precinct" security initiative, which is coordinating the training session and others across the country. Hutchins says he never would have expected that active-shooter training would be a central part of leading a congregation -- but he says it is, and says pastors, rabbis and imams need to acknowledge and act on it. Churches aren't the only "soft targets" for mass shooters, but Hutchins says they're the most abundant one. He points out every house of worship brings a large group of people under one roof every week. And unlike bars, malls, and other recent targets of mass shooters, Hutchins notes nearly everyone in a church, synagogue or mosque has his back to the entrance. Grant Mendenhall, the special agent in charge of the FBI's Indianapolis office, says there's been a noticeable uptick in attacks on houses of worship. In the last 10 months, synagogue shootings in Pittsburgh and California killed a dozen people. And U.S. Attorney Josh Minkler notes a man convicted of vandalizing a Carmel synagogue had originally been plotting to blow it up.

5 GUNS FOUND ON MARION COUNTY STUDENTS THIS MONTH: A 16-year-old is facing charges as an adult after police said he brought a loaded gun to Lawrence Central High School (CBS4). The student was arrested at the school. Court documents say he smelled of marijuana, and a school official found a handgun in a backpack. The school said the student did not enter the main building. An officer cleared the gun and found it was loaded with one round in the chamber and 10 rounds in the magazine, according to the affidavit. The incident happened at Lawrence Central High School on August 15th. A 15-year-old boy was also formally charged after police said he was carrying a loaded gun across the street from Muncie Central High School. The other three gun incidents happened at Arsenal Tech High School, Ben Davis High School, and North Central High School. In Evansville, police say a teenage suffered a gunshot wound late Thursday outside Lodge School (WFIE-TV). According to Evansville Police, the 15-year-old victim suffered a non-life threatening gunshot wound. Police at the scene tell our crew the teen was shot in the arm. EPD says they have no suspects at this time and this is an ongoing investigation.

NOBLESVILLE PARENTS CALL FOR GUN REFORMS: A group of Noblesville parents say a law is needed to help prevent guns from getting into the hands of kids. Noblesville Stands Together, a group of parents formed after a shooting incident at Noblesville West Middle School, is calling for a gun protection law to help prevent kids from having access to guns after several guns were found on students in schools recently (WRTV). Since August 1, at least five guns have been found in Indiana schools. The law would require gun owners to take steps to prevent children from getting a gun, according to a press release from the group. "People have a right to own firearms to defend themselves, but that right carries a responsibility," Hyde Heckman said. "There are common sense things that can be done to make sure that unsupervised children with guns do not endanger themselves or others. We can't keep putting this burden on teachers, administrators, school resource officers and students. Our state government needs to step up and take care of its responsibility to keep young people safe." About 25 Noblesville Stands Together members meet every month and about 500-600 parents are apart of the Facebook group.

REVISED JOBS NUMBERS CUT BY 500K: Turns out hiring wasn't nearly as strong in 2018 and early 2019 as the government initially reported — by about a half-million jobs (Market Watch). The economy had about 501,000 fewer jobs as of March 2019 than the Bureau of Labor Statistics initially calculated in its survey of business establishments. That's the largest revision since the waning stages of the Great Recession in 2009. The newly revised figures indicate the economy didn't get a huge boost last year from President Trump's tax cuts and higher federal spending. They also signal the economy is a bit weaker than previously believed and could give the Federal Reserve even greater reason to cut interest rates in September. "This makes some sense, as the 223,000 average monthly increase in 2018 seemed too good to be true in light of how tight the labor market has become and how much trouble firms are said to be having finding qualified workers," said chief economist Stephen Stanley of Amherst Pierpont Securities. The average 223,000 monthly increase in employment in 2018 — the strongest in three years — could be trimmed to 180,000 to 185,000, economists estimate.

JUDGE RULES SOUTH BEND ABORTION CLINIC CAN STAY OPEN: A federal court of appeals ruled Thursday the Whole Woman's Health Alliance abortion clinic in South Bend can continue operating while a broader appeal challenging Indiana abortion laws moves forward (Bauer, South Bend Tribune). The ruling stops an attempt by Indiana Attorney General Curtis Hill to reverse the opening of the clinic, which began offering medication-induced abortions in June, while also affirming the state's right to have a licensing process for abortion clinics a previous judge had called into question. But it also modified a district court judge's earlier ruling that called into question Indiana's abortion licensing requirements. Amy Hagstrom Miller, the president and CEO of Whole Woman's Health Alliance, called the ruling a "win for the people of northern Indiana needing abortion care." "We hold that the district court's broad condemnation of Indiana's licensing scheme runs contrary to Supreme Court precedent," wrote appeals court Chief Judge Diane Wood. "Nonetheless, we have concerns about the state's handling of the (Whole Woman's Health Alliance) license application."

FOUGHTY UPGRADES HIS WEB DATABASE: Wells County native Trevor Foughty has retooled his Indiana political data and history website Capitol & Washington (Francisco, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). The database at capitolandwashington.com contains a dozen categories, including election results, politicians, officeholders, state legislative and congressional maps, legislative caucus elections and lists of women and minorities who have held state or federal office. Foughty, 36, is associate vice president of state relations for Indiana University. He formerly was deputy chief of staff and Senate campaign manager for U.S. Sen. Todd Young, R-Ind., when Young was a member of the U.S. House. Before that, he worked in communications for the Indiana Republican Party and the political action committee of then-governor Mitch Daniels. "I first became politically active in sixth grade when I spent the night at my best friend's house, and his dad made us walk in a parade for Mark Souder the next morning," he said in an email. The parade was in Zanesville in 1994, the year Republican Souder would be elected to the first of eight terms in the U.S. House. "My friend's dad and I still keep in touch, because he's now serving in the State Senate: Travis Holdman," Foughty said. Foughty is an Howey Politics Indiana contributor.

BUTTIGIEG RELEASES MENTAL HEALTH, OPIOID PLAN: Mayor Pete Buttigieg laid out his vision to improve mental health care and battle the opioid and addiction crisis across the country. Buttigieg's comprehensive plan makes a true commitment to treating the mental health care crisis with the urgency it deserves, and offers a new approach to meeting our national challenge with community-based solutions (Howey Politics Indiana). "For years, politicians in Washington have claimed to prioritize mental health care while slashing funding for treatment and ignoring America's growing addiction and mental health crisis," said Buttigieg. "That neglect must end. Our plan breaks down the barriers around mental health and builds up a sense of belonging that will help millions of suffering Americans heal." Pete's plan will result in: Preventing 1 million deaths of despair (to drugs, alcohol, and suicide) by 2028. Ensuring least 75% of people who need mental health or addiction services receive the care that they need, an increase of more than 10 million in Pete's first term. Decreasing the number of people incarcerated due to mental illness or substance use by 75% by the end of his first term.

TRUMP POLL NUMBERS SAG ON ECONOMY: President Donald Trump has promised a booming economy as a key part of his 2020 pitch. Voters would overwhelmingly pin an economic recession on Trump, according to a Morning Consult/Politico poll. Sixty-nine percent of all voters would at least partially blame Trump for a recession, according to the poll, while 19 percent said he wouldn't be responsible at all. Notably, Trump faces pressure from his own supporters, as well. Just shy of half (49 percent) of those who voted for Trump in 2016 would hold him at least partially responsible for a major economic downturn, while 40 percent wouldn't. The survey polled 1,998 registered voters from Aug. 16-18 and carries a margin of error of 2 percentage points.

MONMOUTH POLL SHOWS LITTLE APPETITE FOR IMPEACHMENT: President Donald Trump's approval rating may remain underwater, but a majority of the public continues to oppose removal by impeachment even as the House Judiciary Committee has started proceedings. The latest Monmouth University Poll finds that about one-fifth of those who disapprove of Trump's job performance join nearly all of those who approve of the president to say that moving ahead with an impeachment inquiry is a bad idea. Only 1-in-5 Americans think that an impeachment trial would actually lead to Trump's removal from office. Opinion is mixed in terms of how this could impact the 2020 elections, but there are some indications in the poll that surviving an impeachment trial could provide a small net boost for Trump's reelection effort. However, many Democrats want to plow ahead with impeachment regardless of the political consequences. Trump's overall job rating stands at 40% approve and 53% disapprove, which is similar to his 41% to 50% rating in June.

NEW BIDEN WEB AD LEANS ON OBAMA: The Biden campaign is rolling out a new web ad that leans heavily on his ties to former President Barack Obama -- to mark the 11th anniversary of Obama choosing Biden as his running mate (Politico Playbook). "It was a relationship forged in fire. ... Now we're facing a different crisis. No one is more ready to lead America than Joe Biden.

TRUMP CAMPAIGN SEEKS TO RALLY WOMEN: President Donald Trump's campaign is rallying and training a corps of female defenders, mindful that Trump's shaky standing with women could sink his hopes of reelection next year (AP). Female surrogates and supporters fanned out across important battlegrounds Thursday in a high-profile push to make the president's case on the economy and to train campaign volunteers. Organizers said they believe female backers are often uncomfortable acknowledging they support Trump. "We want to empower women with other women to be able to share the message of success of this president, to share their success under this president," said Trump campaign spokeswoman Erin Perrine, who will be leading one of the events in Raleigh, North Carolina.

YOUNG IN BARTHOLOMEW COUNTY TODAY: On Friday, August 23, U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R-Ind.), will be joining a roundtable to discuss issues facing Hoosier farmers hosted by Curt Burbrink and the Bartholomew County REMC.

HOUSE DEMS UNLIKELY TO GET TRUMP TAX RETURNS BEFORE 2020: House Democrats appear increasingly unlikely to secure President Trump's tax returns before the 2020 presidential election, according to interviews with legal experts and several lawmakers, as resistance from the Trump administration has stymied the party's efforts to obtain his personal financial records (Washington Post). Several Democrats involved in oversight see a long path to getting a final court decision, even if they expect to win in the end. Trevor N. McFadden, a Trump-appointed judge who was assigned the case in July, will hear the case first, and any decision is likely to be appealed to higher courts, up to the Supreme Court.

ENERGY HEARINGS BEGIN MONDAY: On Monday morning a new legislative task force holds the first of 5 public meetings of the newly created 21st Century Energy Policy Development legislative task force Aug. 26 (meets on Monday, Aug. 26 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. at the Statehouse) (Howey Politics Indiana). The task force launches a two-year process to envision Indiana's energy future and prepare legislative proposals to achieve that vision. This will impact all electricity customers, consumer and corporate/industrial. The task force is made up of 8 legislators, co-chaired by State Sen. Eric Koch (R-Bedford) and State Rep. Ed Soliday (R-Valparaiso), plus 7 experts appointed by the Gov. (although we heard one passed away yesterday). Also IURC (Indiana's utility commission) is developing a report to support this effort due next summer. We summarize what's in play here. Our policy expert Dylan Reed is testifying at the task force meeting on Monday.

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB APPOINTS BROWN TO OFFICE OF ADMIN LAW - Gov. Eric Holcomb has named Matthew Brown director of the Office of Administrative Law Proceedings. Brown recently served as the deputy director of operations at the State Personnel Department. Holcomb signed a bill into law this year that established the Office of Administrative Law Proceedings within the State Personnel Department to support Administrative Law Judges independence (Inside Indiana Business). The legislation states that the director of the office is accountable for administering the office, hiring Administrative Law Judges and assigning the judges to proceedings. Brown earned a Bachelor's degree in public affairs from Indiana University and a law degree from the Indiana University McKinney School of Law. He will start his new role in September.

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB SCHEDULE - Below find Gov. Eric J. Holcomb's public schedule for today: 103rd Annual Bedford Chamber Dinner, Gov. Holcomb and Bedford Mayor Shawna Girgis. The governor will participate in a Q&A, 6:30 p.m., Lawrence County 4-H Fairgrounds Expo Hall, 11261 US Hwy 50 W Bedford.

NATIONAL GUARD: SOLDIER'S REMAINS RETURNED HOME - The body of Staff Sgt. Andrew Michael St. John returned home Thursday night. St. John, 29, of Greenwood, served as an infantryman with Company B, 1st Battalion, 151st Infantry Regiment, Indiana Army National Guard. He was on orders as an embedded observer controller/trainer with Army National Guard Operations Group Wolf. He died on Aug. 15 in a tactical vehicle accident Thursday night in Fort Hood, Texas, according to the National Guard (CBS4). A public visitation is planned for 3 - 8 p.m. on Friday, August 23, at Hoosier Harvest Church in Martinsville.

STATEHOUSE: STATE FINANCES ON TARGET - Indiana began its new fiscal year with tax collections that were roughly on target with where the state wants them to be (Brown, Indiana Public Media). The state didn't take in as much money in taxes in July as budget writers planned. But it was close – just $2 million less than anticipated. That's only 0.2 percent off the mark. And most major tax categories outperformed expectations – individual and corporate income taxes came in above target. That's especially positive for corporate tax collections, which have exceeded projections for six consecutive months. But sales tax revenues struggled slightly last month. And while it wasn't a huge dip – just 0.1 percent off the mark – it marks the eighth time in the last 13 months when sales taxes failed to meet expectations.

STATEHOUSE: MITCHELL TOUTS INVESTMENT PROGRAM - Just over two years since the launch of InvestABLE Indiana, the program has seen substantial investment and utilization by Hoosiers living with disabilities. As of August 13th, the plan saw assets under management almost quadruple from $643,403 to now over $2,249,000 in the last year (Howey Politics Indiana). "ABLE plans are proving to be revolutionary for Hoosiers living with disabilities", commented Indiana Treasurer of State Kelly Mitchell. "I am so glad more and more people are taking advantage of this life-changing tool." Not only has assets under management grown significantly, but so has the number of accounts opened. Last year there were 215 open accounts. Currently the plan has over 460 active accounts being used. This impressive growth is attributed to the work of the Indiana ABLE Authority and Indiana Treasurer of State Kelly Mitchell as they travel the state promoting the program to Hoosiers living with disabilities.

STATEHOUSE: 5G HUB COMING TO DOWNTOWN INDY - The state of Indiana has announced plans for what it says is a first-of-its-kind 5G hub. Launching in October, the Indiana 5G Zone aims to "attract business, foster innovation and propel research and development in 5G-enabled advanced technologies." The hub will be located inside the new downtown Indianapolis headquarters of the nonprofit Eleven Fifty Academy (Brown, Inside Indiana Business). The hub will be operated by the Indiana 5G Forum, which includes stakeholders such as AT&T (NYSE: T), Verizon (NYSE: VZ), Purdue University, the Indiana IoT Lab, and the Energy Systems Network, among others. In an interview with Inside Indiana Business, 5G Zone Director Sean Hendricks said the 5G space is currently a "white space of opportunity." "There's a lot of news and a lot of buzz about 5G, but the definition of what 5G is and will be across the nation is still very much open," said Hendricks. "So it gets us an opportunity to get in on the ground floor of this technology."

STATEHOUSE: HILL TO LEAD MULTI-STATE ROBO CALL INITIATIVE - Attorney General Curtis Hill today announced he is leading a bipartisan and public/private coalition of 51 attorneys general and 12 telecommunications companies that have agreed to adopt eight principles to fight illegal robocalls. This agreement will help protect phone users from illegal robocalls and make it easier for attorneys general to investigate and prosecute violators (Howey Politics Indiana). "These companies are stepping up to the plate and committing themselves to be part of the solution," Attorney General Hill said. "Collaboration will be a key component of our success going forward in stopping illegal robocalls. I am eager to continue working with our state, federal, and private-sector partners to improve the lives of all our citizens."

ENVIRONMENT: LAKE MONROE WATERSHED RECEIVES FUNDING - Friends of Lake Monroe will receive $196,525 from public and private organizations to hire a watershed coordinator and develop a management plan for the Lake Monroe watershed (Bloomington Herald-Times). "The watershed management plan is the first step toward improving water quality in Lake Monroe," said Sherry Mitchell-Bruker, president of Friends of Lake Monroe.

ENERGY: ETHANOL PLANT CLOSURE BLAMED ON TRUMP'S EPA - The owner of a western Indiana ethanol plant is blaming its shut down on the Trump administration allowing some refineries to not blend ethanol with gasoline as required under federal law (AP). South Dakota-based ethanol producer Poet says it will cease production by mid-October at its Cloverdale plant, one of four it operates in Indiana. A company notification says 50 workers will lose jobs from the closure. The company says production is being cut at half of its 28 plants where corn is processed into ethanol. Poet says it's consolidating jobs at plants in Iowa, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Minnesota, South Dakota and Missouri. The Environmental Protection Agency has issued gasoline refinery exemptions removing 2.6 billion gallons (9.8 billion liters) of ethanol from production. Poet calls those exemptions "bailouts to oil companies."

AGRICULTURE: BAILOUT FUNDS FOR FARMERS BEING MAILED - Farmers are seeing payments from the first round of the latest trade aid in the mailbox (Hoosier Ag Today). Farm Service Agency director Richard Fordyce says the first payments are being mailed out now, and farmers are reporting receiving the checks. Round one of the three potential payments is 50 percent of the overall amount farmers may receive. USDA expects up to $14.5 billion of payments will be sent to farmers, pending on the trade negotiation progress. Another 25 percent of the total would go out later this fall, if the Department of Agriculture deems the payments necessary. The final round, if needed, is planned for some time around January.

WHITE HOUSE: G7 LEADERS NERVOUSLY AWAIT TRUMP - Like an annual holiday gathering where the main goal is to get through the day without a family explosion, one of France's main objectives as host of this weekend's Group of Seven summit is to minimize the chances that President Trump will blow it up (Washington Post). Subjects on which to tread lightly include some of the biggest problems the world's major economies are facing — including trade, the system of international rules that has ordered the democratic world for decades and climate change, according to U.S. and other G-7 officials. Already, Trump has shaken up the schedule, calling at the last minute for a special meeting Sunday morning to discuss the global economy. Senior administration officials said he will contrast U.S. growth with Europe's economic doldrums and press his pro-jobs and "fair" trade messages.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SCRAPS PLAN TO RECOVER FOREIGN AID - President Donald Trump has scrapped a plan to freeze more than $4 billion in foreign aid in a move that would have been another end run around Congress' power of the purse (Politico). The president's decision Thursday to forgo a "rescission" comes after another internal tug of war between his budget advisers and Cabinet officials. But the fiscal hawks in Trump's corner, failing again to sell him on spending restraint, blamed Congress for souring him on the idea. "The president has been clear that there is fat in our foreign assistance and we need to be wise about where U.S. money is going," said a senior administration official. "Which is why he asked the administration to look into options to doing just that. It's clear that there are those on the Hill who aren't willing to join in curbing wasteful spending."

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP MULLS MENTAL ILLNESS PROJECT - The White House has been briefed on a proposal to develop a way to identify early signs of changes in people with mental illness that could lead to violent behavior (Washington Post). Supporters see the plan as a way President Trump could move the ball forward on gun control following recent mass shootings as efforts seem to be flagging to impose harsher restrictions such as background checks on gun purchases. The proposal is part of a larger initiative to establish a new agency called the Health Advanced Research Projects Agency or HARPA, which would sit inside the Health and Human Services Department. Its director would be appointed by the president, and the agency would have a separate budget, according to three people with knowledge of conversations around the plan.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP PLAYING POLITICS WITH JEWISH VOTERS - President Trump decided long ago that it would be smart politics for him to yoke his administration to Israel and to try to brand the Democratic Party as anti-Semitic. He set about executing a pro-Israel checklist: moving the U.S. Embassy to Jerusalem, recognizing the Golan Heights as part of sovereign Israel, and taking a hard line against Iran. And he promoted himself as the greatest president — a deity even — for Jewish people (Washington Post). Yet Trump has become flummoxed that Jewish Americans are not in turn lining up to support his reelection, according to people familiar with his thinking, and he has lashed out in predictable fashion. "If you vote for a Democrat, you're very, very disloyal to Israel and to the Jewish people," Trump said Wednesday on the South Lawn of the White House. He was amplifying a statement he made in the Oval Office a day earlier: "I think any Jewish people that vote for a Democrat, I think it shows either a total lack of knowledge or great disloyalty." Trump's use of the word "disloyalty" drew immediate criticism from Jewish groups, whose leaders said it echoed anti-Semitic tropes about where American Jews' loyalty lies. The president insisted his comments were not anti-Semitic. Regardless, this turn in the president's rhetoric about Jews magnifies his transactional approach to politics and his miscalculation that his hawkish interpretation of support for Israel should automatically translate into electoral support from Jewish Americans.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP HONORS BOB COUSY - President Trump presented six-time NBA champion and Boston's Celtic legend Bob Cousy with the Presidential Medal of Freedom on Thursday, the nation's highest civilian honor (CBS News). "He's a great champion and we love champions," the president said to Cousy in the Oval Office. "You have achieved so much ... even beyond basketball." Thanking the president for the medal, Cousy quipped, "If I had known I was going to be eulogized, I'd have probably done the only decent thing and died for you."

WHITE HOUSE: GRISHAM'S TURBULENT ASCENT - For Stephanie Grisham, a public relations specialist who once churned out news releases on traffic safety, the White House is the loftiest stop in a turbulent career trajectory that has mixed toughness and loyalty to her bosses with professional scrapes, ethical blunders and years spent alternately wooing and pounding the press on behalf of scandal-prone Arizona Republicans (New York Times). Her career history contains red flags that most administrations might deem troubling. They include losing a private-sector job after being accused of cheating on expense reports, a later job loss over plagiarism charges and two arrests for driving under the influence, the second while working on Mr. Trump's campaign.

WHITE HOUSE: OBAMAS BUYING $15M MARTHA'S VINEYARD HOME - Barack and Michelle Obama are close to buying a massive Martha's Vineyard estate (New York Post). TMZ reports that the former president and first lady are in escrow — aka in contract to purchase — a 29-acre beachfront plot with a 6,892-square-foot main house. The Obamas were initially just renting the seven-bedroom, 8½-bathroom spread for summer 2019, but apparently loved it so much that they made an offer. It was most recently on the market asking $14.85 million, but the Obamas are apparently paying less. The property at 79 Turkeyland Cove Road in Edgartown, Mass. — owned by Boston Celtics chief Wyc Grousbeck — has a living room with vaulted ceilings and a stone fireplace, a chef's kitchen and a formal dining room with giant windows, according to the property's Realtor.com listing.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SCHEDULE - President Trump will have lunch with Secretary of State Mike Pompeo at 12:30 p.m. He and first lady Melania Trump will leave the White House for Joint Base Andrews at 10:40 p.m., and they will take off for Bordeaux, France, at 11 p.m. They're headed to the G-7 summit.

FED: POWELL TO SPEAK ON ECONOMY AT 10 TODAY - Federal Reserve officials will be joined by academic economists and central bankers from around the world at a mountain resort near Jackson Hole, Wyo., on Friday and Saturday for the Kansas City Fed's annual economic symposium (Wall Street Journal). The theme of this year's conference, "Challenges for Monetary Policy," highlights how central banks have diverged in the post-financial-crisis era. Policy makers withdrew ultra-easy stimulus measures at varying paces and now are easing to different degrees. These differences have had important implications for exchange rates, trade and economic activity, and central banks have had to navigate new headwinds or tailwinds from commodity and financial markets. For the main event, Fed Chairman Jerome Powell is set to speak Friday at 10 a.m. EDT. Bank of England Gov. Mark Carney speaks later in the day. Philip Lowe, the governor of the Reserve Bank of Australia, is set to participate in a panel discussion on Saturday afternoon with Amir Yaron, governor of the Bank of Israel, and Gita Gopinath, chief economist at the International Monetary Fund.

TSA: AMERICANS URGED TO GET 'REAL ID' - The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) is rolling out a new public awareness campaign for REAL ID as the deadline to swap draws near. Travelers will not be able to board a flight without a REAL ID or alternative identification starting October 1, 2020. "We want the public to make sure they're aware. It's just another layer of security," Tomas Cuellar, TSA transportation safety manager, told CBS News. Congress passed the REAL ID Act into law in 2005 following a recommendation from the 9/11 Commission, setting national security standards for state drivers licenses and IDs. Enforcement of those requirements, however, has repeatedly been delayed. REAL IDs require state applicants to submit paperwork to prove who they are and their established residence in the U.S. TSA Administrator David Pekoske said the move to REAL ID will "dramatically improve commercial aviation security."

MEDIA: SANDERS TO JOIN FOX NEWS - Former White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders will join Fox News as a contributor, the network announced Thursday, with her first official appearance set to come on "Fox & Friends" during its next live audience show Sept. 6 (Politico). The announcement was not a surprise. Sanders, like President Donald Trump, heavily favored the network during her time in the White House, frequently making appearances on Fox even after she mostly stopped holding news briefings.

MEDIA: AL-RIGHT BOOK MANIFESTO - The most important political book of the past year just might be a grammatically challenged manifesto in favor of nude sunbathing written under the pen name Bronze Age Pervert (Politico). Where Ayn Rand's "Atlas Shrugged" inspired generations of libertarians to enter politics, and Aaron Sorkin's "The West Wing" did the same for idealistic liberals, a cohort of young, right-wing men are today gravitating toward "Bronze Age Mindset." The self-published book urges them to join the armed forces in preparation for the onset of military rule. Since its publication in June 2018, the book has gained a following online, and its author, known to his fans as BAP for short, has come to the attention of notable figures on the Trumpist right. Earlier this month, the book was the subject of a 5,000-word review by Michael Anton, a conservative intellectual who served as a spokesman for Donald Trump's National Security Council. Anton concludes by warning, "In the spiritual war for the hearts and minds of the disaffected youth on the right, conservatism is losing. BAP-ism is winning."

ILLINOIS: GOV. PRITZKER SIGNS TEACHER PAY RAISE - Illinois Gov. J.B. Pritzker has signed legislation raising teachers' minimum salary to $40,000 over four years to address a statewide shortage of classroom leaders (AP). The current minimum teacher salary ranges from only $9,000 to $11,000. The new law signed by Pritzker Thursday raises the minimum to $32,076 for the 2020-2021 school year, $34,576 in 2021-2022, $37,076 in 2022-2023 and $40,000 in 2023-2024. Afterward, the minimum salary will rise based on the Consumer Price Index, subject to review by the General Assembly. Illinois State Board of Education data from the 2018-2019 school year showed 1,848 unfilled teaching positions in school districts across the state.

CITIES: NEW SOUTH BEND CLERK HAS HAD FINANCIAL PROBLEMS - Newly elected South Bend city clerk Dawn Jones, who will oversee an office with a half-million-dollar annual budget that's tasked partly with collecting ordinance violation fines, has had a checkered history managing her own finances and paying fines she owes, court records from multiple cases show (Parrott, South Bend Tribune). Jones acknowledged some of her financial woes have stemmed from her ignorance of rules. She owes the state of Indiana more than $54,000 for "knowingly failing to disclose or falsifying material facts" in order to obtain unemployment benefits from 2009 to 2012 after being laid off from her job with the YMCA, the Indiana Department of Workforce Development has alleged and two administrative law judges have affirmed. While she was receiving pay from the school corporation, The Salvation Army and St. Joseph County from 2009 to 2012, Jones collected more than $34,000 in unemployment benefits without disclosing that income. As a result, the state fined her another nearly $19,500.

CITIES: MAN THREATENS TO SHOOT AT INDY HOUSING AUTHORITY - Tense moments Thursday inside the offices of the Indianapolis Housing Agency (WRTV). Employees at the North Meridian Street building were forced to shelter in place after a man threatened to shoot people. The suspect was found and detained, according to authorities. The housing agency closed for the day following the incident. Extra police are expected to be on hand when the building reopens on Friday.

CITIES: FORT WAYNE SEX BUSINESS RULE ADVANCES - Allen County's proposed zoning ordinance amendment on where sexually oriented businesses can locate sailed through the county plan commission Thursday (Rodriguez, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). Members voted unanimously and without discussion to recommend the Allen County commissioners also pass the measure. The commissioners have the final say on all zoning ordinance amendments. The proposed ordinance restricts sexually oriented businesses in unincorporated Allen County to areas zoned general industrial. Even in those districts, sexually oriented businesses can't locate within 1,000 feet of a school, residential district or religious institution.

CITIES: COLUMBUS COUNCIL PASSES VAPE BAN - Columbus City councilmen have approved an amending smoking ordinance that prohibits the use of electronic smoking devices, or e-cigarettes and vape pens, in places where smoking is banned in the city. But there is a catch (Columbus Republic). The council approved the ordinance change Tuesday, but the ban won't take effect for two months after local vape shop owners asked council members to exempt vape shops from falling under the ban. The two-month hold began Wednesday and will officially conclude on Oct. 19. As currently written, the ordinance adds the definition of an electronic smoking device and amends the existing definition of "smoking" to include electronic smoking devices. It does not, however, exempt vape shops from the ban. Columbus has three vape shops within city limits, city officials said.

COUNTIES: LaPORTE GETTING NEW WEBSITE - A new La Porte County website is expected to go online by the end of November, and the designers want to know what users would like to see in the improved laportecounty.org (Michigan City News-Dispatch). "We originally said it would be ready by the end of the year, but the timetable is now looking like the end of November," according to Seth Spencer of Michigan City-based SERA Solutions, the firm which is working on the upgrade.

COUNTIES: NEW SITE FOR CARROLL JAIL - We now know the location and early design plans for the Carroll County Jail (WLFI-TV). As we've previously reported, overcrowding has been a problem at the jail for years. That's because the 36-year-old jail only has 34 beds available. The new $14 million facility will have 112. It will be built on county owned land on County Road 100 North. That's just outside of Delphi between Indiana Packers and Carroll Manor. Sheriff Tobe Leazenby said putting it on county land will save money, and the county may be able to save more once the new jail is up and running. "Possibly being able to hold other inmates from other counties, which could potentially bring money into our county," said Leazenby.

State surplus to help teacher salaries

By Tim Thone Paoli News-Republican Aug 21, 2019

There will be an extra $63,291.92 available for collective bargaining at Paoli Schools, and the money is to be used for the wages, salaries and/or benefits of certified employees. The fund is made possible due to House Enrolled Act 1001, which used some of the state's budget surplus to cover a portion of schools' obligation towards teacher retirement.

Paoli Schools Superintendent Greg Walker explained that school corporations pay 10.5 percent into teacher retirement, but in the last session, Governor Eric Holcomb asked school corporations to pay 8.5 percent instead. Paoli School Board member Joe Kimmel made it clear that the $63,291.92 is only an estimate of what the school will save and that value could go up or down.

The Paoli School Board unanimously approved a resolution pursuant to House Enrolled Act 1001.

Walker shared staff performance evaluations with the school board: 45 teachers were rated highly effective, 46 effective and two rated improvement necessary. Walker pointed out the ratings are preliminary as the schools are still waiting on assessment data and school letter grades.

There will be no changes to the staff performance evaluation plan for 2019-2020, but he and the teachers association will form a committee and review the current plan and other potential plans to determine if there should be adjustments or if a different plan is needed for the 2020-2021 school year.

Walker requested a $50 stipend for teacher leaders receiving Harmony training with the money to be paid out of Title IIA, which was unanimously approved.

Walker informed the board that he sold a mini bus on the auction site govdeals.com for $2,426. The vehicle received 26 bids and went for $926 higher than was quoted for a trade in.

Walker also updated the board on the community fitness center at the high school that is also used by the public. There has been little upkeep since it opened in 2009. Repairs to the equipment will cost $7,635. Walker said he is looking at current funds to be allocated to the project.

Throop Elementary Principal Amanda Crews shared that there are currently 698 students in Grades K-6 and 20 in pre-kindergarten. Crews said it feels like the kids never left and that they were rolling right along into the new year. They have already completed their safety drill and are getting ready to start i-Ready diagnostics testing. Grandparents' Week will be Sept. 3-6 and they will be doing breakfast again. Speaking of food, Crews said the students are enjoying the free cafeteria meals they receive due to a U.S. Department of Agriculture and Indiana Department of Education grant.

Paoli High School Assistant Principal Ed Wagner reported that 644 students were enrolled at Paoli Junior-Senior High School and that so far they have a 96 percent attendance rate. Wagner added they have also done their safety meetings and drills and everyone was doing great.

Walker also commended all of the staff for a great start at the school and Darek Newkirk's work with transportation.

INDIANAPOLIS — Five owner companies within the Intelligent Fiber Network (IFN), a leader among Indiana's commercial fiber broadband providers, have been awarded funding grants from Indiana's Next Level Connections Broadband Grant Program.

The owners' projects — which affect Clark and Floyd counties — represent 10 of the 11 projects receiving support and total $21.7 million of the total $22.1 million in funding.

The Next Level Connections Broadband Grant Program is designed to promote access to broadband service across Indiana. As one part of the broader Next Level Connections infrastructure program, the Broadband Grant Program is a $100 million investment to deploy broadband in unserved areas. Officials note the support from this funding round will establish broadband infrastructure in more than 4,800 homes and commercial locations in 12 counties total.

The following Southern Indiana-based IFN owner and owner's member company project is a recipient of the Next Level Connections Broadband Grant Program awards:

- Washington County Rural Telephone Cooperative, Inc. (Telemedia), Clark and Floyd counties: The project will serve approximately 334 unserved households, four unserved businesses and one unserved community anchor institution in primarily rural portions of southwest Clark County and northern Floyd County. The requested grant amount is more than $2.8 million with a local match of more than $754,000, for a total project cost of more than $3.6 million.

"We are thrilled to see so many of our member/owners receiving these critical investment dollars to help build out their fiber broadband solutions,” IFN CEO Jim Turner stated in a news release. “We applaud Governor Holcomb and his team for their understanding of the importance of equal access to fiber broadband. Hoosiers in rural communities need to have equal access to economic opportunities in today’s information age. I look forward to seeing these counties thrive.”

Holcomb to lead trade delegations to China, India, Japan and South Korea

August 23, 2019 | Greg Andrews

KEYWORDS

Gov. Eric Holcomb is preparing to make his first trade trip to China, part of a sweep through Asia planned for this fall.

The visit to China comes at a time tensions have escalated between the two nations over tariffs and other fair-trade issues.

A delegation led by Holcomb will visit Japan and South Korea from Sept. 4 to Sept. 10 and China and India from Sept. 22 to Oct. 5.

Holcomb will conclude the second trip by joining the Indiana Pacers in Mumbai for the NBA's inaugural games in India on Oct. 4 and 5.

The Indiana Economic Development Corp. said the trips are aimed at supporting the state's increasingly global economy, strengthening partnerships and creating connections across business, culture, education, government and sports.

More than 1,000 foreign-owned companies operate in Indiana.

"Markets are more connected now than ever before, and we're proud to support a growing global dynamic economy in Indiana," Holcomb said in a statement.

Holcomb and Indiana Secretary of Commerce Jim Schellinger will be joined by a delegation of Hoosier business, government and economic development officials on both trips.

Those scheduled to attend at least part of the trip to Japan and South Korea include STAR Financial Bank Chief Operating Officer and IEDC board member Kristin Marcuccilli, Westfield Mayor Andy Cook, Gregory & Appel Executive Director Rick Pease.

The IEDC says it will provide details on the China delegation at a later date. It said the costs of the delegations will be funded through private donations to the Indiana Economic Development Foundation.

The visits to Japan and India will be Holcomb's second as governor. The visits to South Korea and China will be Holcomb's first.

Ed DeLaney: No will, no way—Eric Holcomb and teacher pay

August 23, 2019 | Ed DeLaney / Special to IBJ

Ed DeLaney

Maybe it is because this essay is being written in England that I am reminded of the old saying: “Penny wise and pound foolish.”

Our governor has chosen to save pennies on interest for new roads. He will pay cash for pavement rather than using our spare revenue on our growing teacher crisis. He has chosen to spend more than $40 million on a new swine barn over investing in our children. Meanwhile, it is ever more difficult to recruit or retain teachers.

Perhaps the governor misses the point: Roads last 30 years and are fit for financing; young minds need good teachers now or they are set back for life.

Let us be clear. The governor concedes that we are not competitive with our neighboring states when it comes to teacher pay. His response is to set up yet another commission to study the problem. Meanwhile, our teachers fall further behind those in other states and leave Indiana or the profession.

It is pretty clear what we need to do. Indiana needs to spend more state revenue on our schools to buttress our reliance on local property taxes used to fund buses and buildings. The public understood this logic when it supported property tax caps.

Let us wash a little dirty linen. Not all our teachers are as poorly paid as others. Thus, starting pay ranges from $30,000 to more than $40,000. Some districts pass supplemental property tax referendums to support teachers. Others don't or can't provide this revenue. And the stress on taxpayers is unequal.

Let's look at two districts that did pass referendums to increase educational support.

Carmel-Clay Schools in Hamilton County and Wayne Township Schools in Indianapolis both have a little more than 16,000 students. But that's where the similarities end.

Carmel has taxable property worth $7.17 billion, while Wayne Township has only $2.76 billion in assessed property value. Both districts passed a referendum to send more dollars to the classroom, an amount over the property tax caps. When all was said and done, Wayne Township voters taxed themselves an extra 35 cents per $100 of assessed value and generated $10.4 million per year. The Carmel figures were an extra 19 cents per $100, yielding $18.4 million.

When all the tax rates for schools are added up, Wayne Township homeowners pay $1.85 per $100, while those in Carmel pay $1.02 per $100. Carmel schools have a poverty rate of 2.36%, while the figure is 29.7% in Wayne Township. The state does make supplemental payments based on poverty, but it's not enough to overcome the burdens of poverty, let alone the disparity in property values.

The point is simple: Taxes based on property values cannot equitably and broadly fund improved teacher pay. Nor can gimmicks like the current reduction in pension contributions that will supposedly lead to higher teacher pay.

The governor wants to improve teacher pay somehow, someday, as long as the increases are "systematic" and "sustainable." Those are lovely words. The governor needs to start by committing to a substantial pay raise, based on state dollars. He also needs to act now.

There is no shortage of ideas to help teachers now, using state funds. These include incentives for increased starting pay, support for the cost of counseling, and help with student loans. They don't include paying cash for swine barns. •

INDIANA GAMING INSIGHT

Pitman reign takes IHRC reins

Indiana's three top state gaming regulators are female

Deena Pitman will take over as executive director of the Indiana Horse Racing Commission next month – providing welcome stability for Hoosier horsemen on edge about the pending buyout of the two tracks.

The selection of IHRC veteran Pitman represents a 180-degree turn from three years ago when the horsemen demanded change and the Commission responded by ousting the executive director of more than 20 years.

Pitman will replace Mike Smith, who has been executive director since 2016 but announced many months ago that he wished to retire.

Unlike most state agencies – and this has been a sore point with other governors – the Commission itself appoints the executive director, not the governor. The Commission received 17 applications for the position and interviewed four candidates, but as we recently told you would likely be the case, commissioners didn't have to look far for Smith's successor.

Pitman has been with the Commission almost since the beginning of the pari-mutuel horse racing industry in Indiana, joining IHRC in 1993, one year before the first racetrack opened in Anderson. After spending about five years as the first director of licensing, she has served as assistant executive director since 1999. Pitman's appointment was unanimously (and enthusiastically) approved by the Commission on Tuesday.

"Her hiring establishes continuity and certainty that the Commission will benefit from," said Bill McCarty, a commissioner since 2014, and who worked with Pitman when he was a Democratic senator from Anderson through 1997. IHRC Chair Phil Borst, a veterinarian, also pointed to her agency longevity and unique perspective, adding, "The knowledge and experience she brings with her is unmatched, making us confident that she will continue to move Indiana horse racing forward."

With Pitman's move to the top job, all three Hoosier gaming regulators are female, a first for the state. Pitman joins Sara Gonso Tait at the Indiana Gaming Commission and Sarah Taylor at the Hoosier Lottery in the state gaming regulatory triumvirate (perhaps a first nationally?).

Outgoing Executive Director Smith won't go away completely. He'll stick around in a part-time role to work on "special projects," said Borst, including reviewing the proposed sale of Caesars Entertainment Corporation to Eldorado Resorts, Inc.

The Commission will scrutinize Eldorado more closely than it did Caesars when Caesars bought the tracks from Centaur Gaming in July 2018. "It will be more thorough," promised Chair Borst. "I know a lot of people are antsy."

We had written earlier this month that Hoosier horsemen are more leery about Eldorado given its track record with its track portfolio than they were with Caesars when it sought regulatory approval for the Centaur acquisition.

After Eldorado purchased the Isle Casino Racing Pompano Park located in Pompano Beach, Florida, from Isle of Capri Casinos in May 2017, the company reportedly laid off some 80 union employees, equivalent to one-fifth of the property's union workforce.

Psst: Take the under on mobile! Don't fall for doom and gloom and 2020

Yes, it may seem September 1 is an optimistic start date for retail sports wagering in the Hoosier State, but the Indiana Gaming Commission seems to be on top of all of the tasks it must perform to certify those in charge and validate their processes. Those who think that there may be too many loose ends to get things in gear by Labor Day weekend must not have been around for some of the soft openings for the riverboat casinos (or the conversions to new platforms, although those typically ran much more smoothly).

Many – if not most – of those seemed chaotic at best (and, admittedly, Back in the Day slot machines involved coins and not tickets), and people walked away thinking that a scheduled grand opening the following day (or 48 hours later) was but a pipe dream. Underestimated, however, was the adrenalin that flows in such a situation where pride, reputations, jobs, and dollars (income or fines!) are at stake. Sports wagering may be relatively new to the industry and is certainly to Indiana, but these operators and vendors don't make promises they can't keep . . . and the regulators will keep up.

While most outside observers write off mobile gaming for 2019 – or at best until Winter – we'll take the under and suggest that the first mobile sports wagering in Indiana will go live this Fall . . . and we wouldn't be surprised to see it happen as early as late September.

Outgoing director Smith says IHRC will need to ensure that Eldorado understands that the Indiana tracks exist primarily to serve and grow the horse racing industry – a position which is fully supported by the Indiana Gaming Commission as well. They are casinos secondarily, adds Smith, a former state lawmaker who was the longest-serving director of the Casino Association of Indiana, spending 13 years representing the casinos before joining the racing commission.

With Pitman ascending to executive director, the racing commissioners hired Thomas Linkmeyer as the new assistant executive director. Linkmeyer is new to the Commission but has been around horse racing all his life and holds an IHRC license as a driver and trainer. He is a former professional baseball player, former police officer for the City of Carmel, and currently works in public education. Linkmeyer has been a teacher, athletic director, assistant principal, and principal, working in the Metropolitan School District of Lawrence Township in Indianapolis for more than 12 years, and he has coached baseball in high schools in Indianapolis and Hamilton County.

Readers of our sister Hannah newsletter, INDIANA LEGISLATIVE INSIGHT, may remember us writing about Linkmeyer when he was a Republican primary candidate in HD 39 in both 2016 and 2018, seeking to oust veteran Rep. Jerry Torr (R) of Carmel.

When commissioners moved on from Joe Gorajec three years ago, they were looking to shake things up. At the time, horsemen were frustrated that Gorajec didn't do more to promote the industry, recalled Nat U. Hill IV of Bloomington, one of the most prominent and respected voices within the harness racing establishment.

A scene at the Indiana State Fair earlier this month symbolizes the positive changes that Smith, Pitman and their team have made, said Hill. For many years, attendees at the Fair weren't allowed into the horse barns, he said. But at IHRC's request, the barn doors have been opened, posters were put up, and people were invited in. "It's been fabulous," said Hill.

Dr. Borst joked, "It's hard to replace someone who is a legend . . . in his own mind." But turning serious, he noted that no one works harder than the outgoing executive director, and that even though Smith has experienced assorted serious health issues, he hasn't missed a beat. "We just can't thank you enough, Mike."

The affable Smith demurred. "It's easy to do when you have a staff that's just incredible," he said, later adding, "There's so much talent here it even makes people like me look good."

IN General

- Union Gaming Analytics delivers its eagerly anticipated report on the Illinois gaming rubric as cobbled together in its new law, including its opinion on how to get the best bang for the buck from a Chicago casino. Much of what we have written about the viability of the Windy City sites as proposed by Mayor Lori Lightfoot (D-IL) and the problems with the overall Illini gaming framework were confirmed by the Union Gaming report (at a cost of about $90,000 more than a subscription to your favorite gaming newsletter!).

- Your favorite gaming newsletter told you that the Illinois fee structure was untenable. The Illinois model was driven by the state's desire to bring in a certain amount of upfront revenue to help resolve current budget problems – which we told you was the antithesis of the Indiana philosophy of looking to strengthen the gaming industry and ensuring its continued symbiotic relationship with state and local government . . . and effectively making things revenue-neutral, absent any gains from the addition of sports wagering to the Hoosier gaming menu.

- As the new law is currently written, any potential Chicago casino operator would have to pay a $250,000 application fee to be considered, and then fork over $30,000 for each gaming position, potentially as high as $120 million more for some 4,000 positions (although some could be deployed at Chicago's two major airports). There would also be a $10 million sportsbook fee. The casino also is responsible for paying a $15 million "reconciliation" fee after three years, an amount equal to 75% of AGR during the casino's highest 12-month revenue period, minus any fees per gaming position paid upfront. Illinois appears to be alone nationally in having proposed such a prospectively undeterminable tariff. "The reconciliation fee alone would wipe out any profits generated for many years, if not decades under the [Adjusted Gross Receipts] tax structure," Union Gaming Analytics observes. "The return on investment profile for all five sites is subpar, if not negative over the five years projected herein." The reconciliation fee – already much maligned by observers and some potential developers – "not only magnifies the lack of feasibility, it also shuts the door on the ability of the developer to obtain financing."

- Illinois' graduated wagering tax already runs as high as 50% for revenue topping $200 million, and a Chicago casino would certainly fall within this revenue and tax silo. Revenue at one of Chicago's five proposed sites could exceed $800 million annually within five years after opening, while a downtown casino is projected by Union Gaming to generate $1.15 billion per year – about $165 million more than all five Indiana northern tier casinos produced in 2018 (and about the same as all 13 Indiana properties accounted for from January-June of 2019). On top of the state tax, Chicago would take a big cut. The City would impose a 33.3% "privilege" tax on adjusted gross receipts.

- All told, a Chicago casino would be taxed at an effective rate of about 72% of gross, Union Gaming Analytics concludes (others with a stake in the competition peg the effective rate at closer to 75%), and after including operating expenses of some 30% or more (and exclusive of financing costs), the "onerous tax and fee structure" would likely leave about a three percent EBITDA margin for the operator in an industry accustomed to such rates between 20% and 25% among regional operators. "The amount of profit generated relative to total development costs, inclusive of licensing and reconciliation fees, represents at best a 1% or 2% return annually, which is not an acceptable rate of return for a casino developer," the consultants write. Union Gaming (quite diplomatically) labels this "an expense structure that could exceed casino revenue." "We believe a reasonable casino developer would not move forward with a greenfield casino project that has, at best, a low single digit profit margin," Union Gaming warns Illinois officials.

□ And did we mention that the report contemplates the “bare minimum all-in development cost” for a casino and attendant 500-room hotel in Chicago at $750 million, putting the development well out of the reach of all but a veritable handful of operators – and making it questionable whether there is sufficient capital to be found for this project (at reasonable rates) as well as five other Illinois casinos and more racetrack casino investments in a state potentially tripling its number of gaming positions (on top of other projects in the saturated Midwest, including the Spectacle Entertainment venture likely coming to the Borman Expressway in Gary, as well as what might transpire in Vigo County). As Crain’s Chicago Business veteran political and policy columnist Greg Hinz writes, the Union Gaming report “might as well have been subtitled, ‘The Cost of Greed.’”

□ The problem for Chicago casino advocates: The potential universe of operators likely shrinks given the Chicago tax tab on top of everything else (a problem a south suburban, Rockford, Danville, or Waukegan operator would not face, for example), and it will be tough to go back to the legislature and obtain a change in the tax structure.

□ While it may seem to make sense, the casino deal was forged as a major global compromise, with everyone with an interest effectively getting what they wanted (think of the law as the initial “kitchen sink” bill introduced this year in the Indiana Senate – but on steroids) . . . and there is no incentive for any of the entities that got what they wanted to go back and give Chicago a concession now – not the other communities just granted licenses or casino companies interesting in operating in that milieu; not the pari-mutuel horse racing operators allowed to add slot machines and table games or open a new track; not the existing casinos that have the new ability to expand gaming positions; not the video gaming terminal route operators or the entities which can now offer additional VGTs with larger wagers and payouts; nor the sports wagering operators, stadium owners, and professional sports teams who saw their interests served.

□ To put things in terms that those more familiar with gaming matters in the Hoosier State might better understand, it’s as if one of the legs of the proverbial three-legged stool (casinos, horse racing interests, and French Lick) wanted a new advantage after the other two legs were reinforced – and state and local governments had gotten what they had sought. The “ask” would simply go unanswered until the other legs got what they might want (and, in the case of Illinois, they already got it). Chicago pleading effective poverty to other communities traditionally overlooked at the big city’s expense is not a winning argument.

□ Then there is some concern from the African American community in Chicago about being shut out with a downtown casino . . . as well as from mayors representing some of the six largely African American south suburban townships that are in line for a casino in the area under the law, but in practice believe that they will be shut out. Their concern: A separate provision which grants a license to a new Chicago-area Standardbred racetrack (Illinois’ first new pari-mutuel facility in more than 70 years) that could offer full casino amenities – table games, slot machines, and a sportsbook. Largely overlooked as the law passed however, was a provision that the local officials claim would bar a south suburban casino cannot be sited within 35 miles of the new track without the track operator providing written consent waiving the geographical restriction – although others say they are not properly interpreting the law, and the exclusion zone is set forth in the in the Horse Racing Act, not the Gaming Act, and it refers an being subject to written approval of any nearby tracks. However, if the local officials are correct, that would almost certainly cut out the best sites in the eligible townships . . . because an application has been filed for a Tinley Park track, a partnership between the general manager of another local track and the owner of one of Illinois’ top VGT route operators (developers also say they can be operating as soon as next year in a “transitional facility”). In a letter released last week, Matteson Village President Sheila Chalmers-Curlin tells the governor, “While this proposed law appears to allow two casinos (one with a track), in fact, we all know that this will never happen, and the favored track owner will have the only gaming property in South Cook County. I speak for the many minorities that suspect this is all a ruse and special legislation to benefit the private racino operator to the disadvantage of the African American community and its leaders.”

□ Tinley Park is about 15 miles from Hammond, and the key communities that have been angling for a casino for many years fall well within the radius of the exclusion zone. The Chicago Sun-Times reports Thursday that “Matteson, which is a 10-mile drive from the proposed racino site at the shuttered Tinley Park Mental Health Center near 183rd Street and Harlem Avenue, is among at least six suburbs that have announced they’ll make their pitch for a casino to the Illinois Gaming Board by Oct. 26, the application deadline. Other candidates include Crestwood, Calumet City, Country Club Hills, Lynwood and Ford Heights, plus a joint effort by East Hazel Crest and Homewood. Those towns are all within the 35-mile range over which the likely racino owners have veto power. The law also subjects the casino to a revenue-sharing agreement sending 2 percent of its gross revenue to the suburb and another 3 percent spread among dozens of other neighboring Southland municipalities – an agreement that isn’t being imposed on the racino’s windfall.”

□ As Crain's columnist Hinz observes, "In Springfield, casino bills don't get far unless everyone is united. On this one, they're anything but."

□ Then there's the problem of novice Mayor Lightfoot – who has not yet built up any clout of her own in Springfield – herself. "We've got to get this tax structure right or we cannot get anything done," a frustrated mayor said after the report was released. But the Chicago Tribune reports that she told reporters earlier this month "that she knew the proposed tax structure wouldn't work when the legislature passed it in the spring – and said she insisted on the Union Gaming study to prove her point," and "After settling for a deal she said she knew was bad in the first round of casino negotiations, Lightfoot will be under a brighter spotlight and be working with less leverage as she tries to revamp the agreement to Chicago's advantage during the legislature's two-week veto session this fall." And she's not raised the proposition of trimming the one-third cut that the City of Big Shoulders would receive by law, despite the fact that shouldering that burden will make it difficult to attract the best investment.

□ Finally, the Trib adds, "Reducing or doing away with that one-time fee would also be a tough sell for lawmakers because that money, along with the other new revenue from gambling expansion, is earmarked for building projects at public schools, state universities and other facilities through [the governor's] infrastructure plan." As we told you, Illinois went about this with the revenue tail wagging the policy dog, unlike Indiana.

□ While the former Michael Reese Hospital site in the historic Bronzeville district is projected by Union Gaming to be the most profitable of the five sites advanced by Mayor Lightfoot, even that proposed site would likely not be sustainable under the current fee and tax structure. The consultant clearly favors a downtown site, finding that "only a centrally-located casino that is in close proximity to high-quality hotels and other notable tourist attractions" could "meaningfully penetrate the robust tourism trends" in Chicago. "Tourists generally will not patronize a casino in an area that is inconvenient relative to where they are staying or perceived as unsafe. Nor will tourists be eager to book a room at a casino's hotel if there are no other easily accessible attractions nearby," Union Gaming notes, but does not spend much time or attention to discussing what we've been telling you for several years: Locals are going to be far less interested in regularly patronizing a casino in the Loop area than the south suburbs. As for the financing concerns, Union Gaming suggests a model under which the City of Chicago could actually own the casino and retain a manager for the property, "financed by municipal bonds, for example, with the City of Chicago capturing cash flows less debt service, casino management fees, and any other receipts shared with, for example, the county or state."

□ The consultant's analysis contains some helpful potential timelines. Union Gaming projects a Chicago casino license would not be awarded until late 2020, "which would then be followed by a two-year construction cycle with the casino opening on or about January 1, 2023" – potentially two years after the expected opening of the new Hard Rock casino proposed by Spectacle Entertainment, LLC for Gary. Given the illustrative one-year ramp period, we would largely expect 2024 to represent stabilized revenue and cash flow."

● Gaming contributed $10.9 million in tax revenue to the Indiana's state General Fund during July, accounting for 3.5% of total General Fund collections for the month. Riverboat and racino wagering taxes in July 2019 outperformed July 2018 by about $900,000 (9.0%) (note that admission taxes are no longer collected separately).

□ Riverboat wagering taxes contributed approximately $900,000 to state coffers in July, about $100,000 (- 13.8%) below the monthly forecast from April – and down by about $500,000 (- 35.7%) from collections in July 2018.

□ Racino wagering taxes comprised the remaining $10 million inflow to the General Fund in July, about $800,000 (8.4%) above the estimate upon which the current budget is predicated. Racino wagering tax revenue is also up by $1.4 million (16.3%) from July 2018 levels.

● U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) tells Terry Meiners of WHAS 840-AM in Louisville August 12 that gaming revenues were "really hot out of the gate, and then when I was a [state] legislator, for those three years, '15, '16, and '17, it's finally troughed, and I think it's now on the way up. Gambling at the casino – that's a tough demographic. Millennials don't seem to do it much, and I don't know what they'll do. I think they're all going to have to fashion themselves kind of like French Lick has, as maybe a destination where you can do more than just gamble. Any business has that. My business, which has grown between 15 and 20 percent a year for now 37-38 years I always preach to my kids, 'Whatever's doing well today, don't count on it in four to five years. Be looking at other stuff.' You add to what you're doing. That's how you stay a healthy enterprise."

● Filling the vacancy created by the April retirement of Kevin Moore after 35 years of state service, Jay Chaudhary will step in as director of the Division of Mental Health and Addiction (DMHA) for the Family and Social Services Administration effective September 9. DMHA is the FSSA division that oversees problem gambling matters. Zionsville resident Chaudhary is currently the managing attorney for Indiana Legal Services, where he has served in several key positions including founding director of Midtown Medical Legal Partnership. In his current role, Chaudhary focuses on improving health outcomes by addressing the individual and systemic legal needs of Hoosiers with mental health and substance use issues, which attracted the attention of FSSA officials who are advocating integrated care as a means of achieving improved health outcomes.

□ Rachel Yates Halleck of Indianapolis will serve as DMHA's deputy director and the division's chief of staff. Halleck is a licensed mental health counselor and a licensed addiction counselor who most recently served as the senior director of behavioral health strategy and innovation for Volunteers of America Ohio and Indiana.

IN Illegal Gambling

- Edgar Jesus Hernandez Gonzalez, 31, is charged with seven Level 6 Felony counts of Professional Gambling (knowingly engaging in pool-selling) in Ripley County Superior Court. State v. Hernandez Gonzalez, No. 69D01-1908-F6-000145. A probable cause affidavit filed by an Indiana Gaming Commission Gaming Control Division officer outlines the details, and mentions potential predicate offenses for a Level 5 Felony Corrupt Business Influence count as well that was not initially filed by local prosecutors. An initial court hearing for Hernandez Gonzalez is currently slated for September 3.

□ In mid-July the Gaming Commission was contacted by Batesville's police chief and advised of an active investigation in his jurisdiction. The investigation into a voyeurism and child pornography case yielded "what investigators believed to be photographs of illegal gambling records and documents" on the defendant's cell phone, and the chief asked IGC to assist with respect to possible involvement in illegal gambling. Batesville Police Department detectives, accompanied by an IGC Officer, executed a search warrant at the suspect's home and found handwritten pool sheets that appeared to be for games in a Mexican soccer league.

□ A Spanish-speaking IGC officer who had conducted a previous investigation with similar sheets and betting patterns was called in and confirmed the suspicion. Another search warrant was requested specifically for the illegal gambling activity. Some of the items collected from the residence included 36 pool sheets, four suspected ledger sheets related to illegal gambling, and one spiral bound notebook with notations in regards to numerous soccer games and what appeared to be ledgers. "From my training and experience as an investigator for the Indiana Gaming Commission, I further recognize these sheets to be consistent with those commonly used by a bookie, or bookmaker engaged in "pool selling." The search also uncovered located pool sheets that had been "graded." A pool sheet is graded as the individual games conclude and the bookie marks the winning wagers accordingly, and some of the graded sheets contained tallies of the number of winning wagers noted on the right margin, "the action of a bookie or bookmaker determining which better has the most 'points.'" The pool sheets were "indicative of a bookmaker and not a better. Additionally, we found lists of names with amounts written next to them which is consistent with ledgers compiled by a bookie keeping track of the money owed to him/her or to be paid out. Some of the ledgers are makeshift in nature, literally written on the reverse of the graded pool sheet. The names in these quick ledgers match the names on the graded sheets which is indicative of a bookie and not simply a bettor. Some of the sheets appear older or were found in association with other paperwork that was dated 2015 and 2016. Contained within a spiral bound notebook we found notations regarding soccer games dated 2010, 2012, and 2014."

□ After the suspect was read his rights, he confirmed the sheets were used to bet on soccer games in the Mexican leagues, and detailed his record keeping system, and the "explanation of the construction and use of these pool sheets to be consistent with those used for illegal sports wagering."

- Oraine Gray a/k/a "James Cooper," a 23-year-old resident of Jamaica, was sentenced in the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana to 34 months in federal prison after his admission of guilt to devising a lottery scam that swindled elderly and vulnerable victims throughout the United States of their retirement accounts and savings, and to making death threats in furtherance of the scam. Gray will not serve any supervised release following his sentence because he will be deported back to Jamaica after completing his sentence. He was arrested in Jamaica in September 2018 and waived extradition to the United States.

□ The Jamaican lottery scammer operated his scheme from April 2014 through early September 2018. Under what the U.S. Department of Justice described as a "complex" cozenage, the defendant and others represented to the victims that they were lottery/contest winners who needed to pay certain taxes and fees to collect millions of dollars of their lottery winnings and/or prizes. In reality, according to the U.S. Attorney's Office in Indianapolis, the victims were not actual lottery or contest winners. None of the victims received the money promised to them during the course of the scam. The defendant and others masked their identities through the use of various telephone applications and other technologies. Through these applications, they directed the victims to send money to the defendant and others in Jamaica to obtain their purported lottery or contest winnings. The defendant and others also directed the victims to send such money to other victims and individuals throughout the United States in an attempt to conceal tracing of the proceeds of the scam. The victims sent this money by mail and wire transfers, such as Western Union, MoneyGram, U.S. Mail, and other means, most of which ended up in Jamaica. When victims attempted to stop contact with the defendant by changing telephone numbers, he searched for and used local businesses, such as pizza delivery and taxi services, to attempt to find out the new telephone numbers so that he could continue such contact. On one occasion, when a victim located in the Southern District of Indiana did not send the money as requested, the defendant threatened to kill the victim and her family, and sent individuals to her residence to try and collect the money. The defendant caused the victims to transfer more than $90,000 to Jamaica and elsewhere in furtherance of the scheme.

□ The international scam case was investigated by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

IN Sports Wagering

- As sports wagering takes hold not just in Indiana but across the nation, keep an eye on the Indianapolis-based National Collegiate Athletic Association. Earlier this month, NCAA officials opted against requiring (or recommending) member institutions provide periodic player injury reports akin to those circulated by the key professional leagues. While those seeking such reports argue that they would help alleviate concerns about leaking of (and trading upon) inside information, the NCAA and many of its members continue to be hinky about sports wagering in general, do not want to appear as though they are equating their brand to professional leagues, and have concerns about student-athlete rights to privacy under both the Buckley Act and HIPAA.

● We're hearing that at least some of the state higher education institutions impacted by the new sports wagering law are quietly nudging the Indiana Gaming Commission to including geofencing of their main campuses or at least athletic facilities (read: basketball arenas and football stadiums) in final mobile gaming regulations to better help protect the "integrity of the games" . . . while not having alumni blame the institutions themselves for barring them from betting from their smartphones at games.

□ This issue, however, is fraught with complications. Some of the immediate questions discussed at stakeholder meetings include who would pay for the additional geofencing required, what criteria would be used (for example, what constitutes a 'campus'), and assorted technical issues including the cost to maintain or revise a geofence once it has been established. At this point, there has apparently been no formal request to geofence a campus, and that's probably a good thing, because the proclivity of the Commission - literally throughout its existence, but perhaps even more so in the last decade or so - has been reluctant at best to extend its administrative reach beyond legislative directive, and we believe that commissioners would be hesitant at sticking their respective necks out here to impose parameters outside of those already set down by the legislature . . . which didn't seem to feel the need for campus-specific restrictions (if, indeed, any lawmaker even considered this at all, and we don't recall any debate on the point). But the bottom line here is that this is something that the Commission would likely consider to be a significant policy-setting exercise that would fall outside their lane.

□ Another big question on the theoretical side of the equation: What about the integrity of events that involve teams from those same institutions when they play at in-state venues not on a campus . . . such as the opening game of the Indiana University football season, in which Ball State University tackles IU at Lucas Oil Stadium in Indianapolis? There would be similar concerns for the annual Crossroads Classic, the four-team basketball showdown convened in Indianapolis at (what is currently still known as) Bankers Life Fieldhouse. This event has traditionally featured four Indiana schools each year: IU, Purdue University, the University of Notre Dame, and Butler University. Could the Commission mandate temporary geofencing - and if so, it possible for it to be technologically accomplished?

□ And if it could, is there a chance that the Harrah's Hoosier Park Winner's Circle Pub, Grille & OTB in downtown Indianapolis, set to become a sports wagering site, might end up being "fenced out" because of its immediate (about 1,000 feet) proximity to the grounds of the Fieldhouse? This has as much technology as policy wrapped up in it.

● When we checked late last week., there had been no additions yet to the initial (lengthy) list released in late July by the Indiana Gaming Commission detailing the sports leagues and types of sports on which wagering will be permitted . . . although we hear that the National Hot Rod Association - was seemingly interested in quickly being added to the original grouping, presumably because that sanctioning body will be hosting the always exciting 65th Annual Chevrolet U.S. Nationals at Lucas Oil Raceway in Indianapolis over Labor Day weekend.

● The Indiana Gaming Commission grants temporary vendor license approvals to Betfair Interactive US (dba FanDuel Sportsbook) to team with Boyd Gaming Corporation's Blue Chip Casino and Belterra Casino Resort . . . SugarHouse-affiliated Rush Street Interactive will partner with French Lick Resort • Casino . . . Caesars Interactive Entertainment will affiliate with Horseshoe Casino Hammond . . . Penn Sports Interactive will operate under the Hollywood Casino Lawrenceburg imprimatur . . . and William Hill US is the vendor for Tropicana Evansville.

● William Hill US will operate The Sports Book at Tropicana Evansville as part of its international partnership with Trop parent Eldorado Resorts, Inc. The Trop's 421 Lounge is being remodeled to accommodate the new offering, and will retain food offerings and feature a 16' x 9' video wall, 10 large (65") viewing monitors, and 12 odds boards.

● We told you that Horseshoe Casino Hammond was shooting for a September 4 kickoff date for sports wagering in the Chicago area at The Book (the same name that will be in use at the other Caesars Entertainment Corporation properties in Indiana), but Penn National Gaming, Inc. jumps in with the news last week that it expects to begin offering sports betting at the company's Ameristar Casino East Chicago and Hollywood Casino Lawrenceburg properties on September 1, subject to required regulatory approvals. Boyd Gaming Corporation plans for its two properties to join the fray on the heels of those operations.

□ Penn National promises a state-of-the-art sports betting experience at Ameristar Casino East Chicago, including betting kiosks and ticket-writer stations that will support what it describes as "thousands of sports betting options" for patrons. The new sports book will be located near the Stadium Sports Bar and Grill and main entrance to the property, replete with a new betting counter and large odds boards in close proximity to numerous televisions.

□ Celebrating the first wagers at ACEC will be Chicago Bears alumni Mike Ditka and Devin Hester, both of whom are ranked high among the 100 best Bears of all time, a current Chicago Tribune feature countdown in the century season. The Bears-Green Bay Packers game on Thursday, September 5 kicks off the National Football League season in prime time, and the lengthy heated rivalry will be a hot betting event in Chicagoland.

□ Hollywood Casino Lawrenceburg's new sports book will be located inside the Hops House 99 sports bar, which will include a wagering counter with ticket-writer stations as well as dozens of new television screens for customers to watch and wager on sporting events taking place across the country and around the world. Kiosks will also be available throughout the revamped Dearborn County facility to support what Penn National also says will be "thousands of sports betting options" for patrons.

□ Former Cincinnati Bengals star offensive lineman Anthony Munoz and former Cincinnati Reds Baseball Hall of Fame member Tony Perez will participate in a ceremonial ribbon cutting for the new offerings at the Lawrenceburg casino on September 7 . . . the day before the Bengals open their 2019 football season.

□ Boyd plans a September 5 launch for its FanDuel-branded sportsbook at Blue Chip Casino . . . and you should also plan for a major Chicago Bears figure to be present for the festivities. Look for the Boyd FanDuel sportsbook at Belterra Casino Resort to open a few days later, September 9, with former Cincinnati Bengals Super Bowl and MVP quarterback Ken Anderson as the guest celebrity.

- Sports wagering niches within the casinos and satellite wagering facilities have required assorted regulatory approvals, largely for changes in casino floor layout (by the Indiana Gaming Commission, which must sign off on such changes and attendant surveillance) and OTB layout (up to the Indiana Horse Racing Commission). Some of the changes for the casino vessels must come with marine vendor reviews, while the facility incorporated into the Caesars Southern Indiana land-based facility being constructed now simply required a quick adjustment in plans approved by the Commission.

- As of late last week, GeoComply, a Canadian geolocation compliance technology company (based in Vancouver, British Columbia), was the sole geofencing entity to obtain a temporary supplier's license from the Indiana Gaming Commission for mobile wagering purposes.

IN Native American Gaming

- The Pokagon Band of Potawatomi Indians tells ESPN earlier this month that its "Four Winds Casino is always looking for opportunities to enhance our guests' experience and will continue to do so with the passing of sports betting in the state of Indiana."

□ Doing so would be no small step: This would make their South Bend property closest to the University of Notre Dame (about seven miles from "Touchdown Jesus" and the venerable Notre Dame Stadium) to offer sports wagering, and its location on the U.S. 31 bypass would offer convenient access for Michigan residents who might want to bet on the University of Michigan (or against The Ohio State University!), Michigan State University, or Detroit professional baseball, basketball, hockey, and football franchises.

□ But Four Winds South Bend is only authorized to conduct Class II gambling. "There is not presently a Class III gaming compact between the Pokagon Band and the State of Indiana," Indiana Gaming Commission Executive Director Sara Gonso Tate told Casino.org for a Wednesday article. "Sports wagering meets the definition of Class III gaming." Sports wagering, like any other Class III gambling activity, would require a compact with the State of Indiana.

□ We had been picking up signals that the tribe wanted to engage in leader-to-leader discussions between the tribe and the State of Indiana – not talk at the staff level – about a compact that would allow the Pokagons to conduct sports wagering at the South Bend facility, and your favorite gaming newsletter exclusively learned that the Pokagons formally submitted a request to Governor Eric Holcomb (R) on August 13 to engage in compact negotiations . . . which means that a 180-day clock (calendar?) starts ticking.

□ An Indian tribe may ask the U.S. Secretary of the Interior to issue Class III gaming approval when the State and the Indian tribe failed to act in good faith to negotiate a compact 180 days after the State received the Indian tribe's request. Bear in mind that under IC 4-29-3-5, enacted in 2015, following completion of negotiations and the execution of a tribal-state compact, the governor is required by law to submit a copy of the executed tribal-state compact to the General Assembly for "ratification" by both chambers. To ratify the compact, the General Assembly "must enact a bill codifying the tribal-state compact in the manner required by the Constitution of the State of Indiana." That would seem to mean that any compact must be agreed to by the Governor and ratified by lawmakers by early-to-mid February (our calendar points to February 9, which should be close to the short session mid-point). But the federal statute doesn't make the absence of compact consummation actionable of itself, and we recall some recent examples where a state and tribe have gone past the ostensible "deadline" while continuing to negotiate in good faith, so don't view February 9 as a drop-dead date by which the feds will intervene.

□ Governor Holcomb, in an August 19 response to tribal chairman Matthew Wesaw, acknowledges having met with him earlier this month, and tells Chairman Wesaw that Gaming Commission Executive Director Tait will lead the compact negotiations on his behalf. The Governor intends to create a negotiating committee, which will be led by Tait, and we expect this to be a small, high-level working group that will not include lawmakers (although it may not necessarily be limited to executive branch officials), but you should look for legislative leaders to be kept closely apprised of the ongoing discussions. Tait simply tells us, "The State intends to comport with our mandated obligations."

□ We're also wondering whether, absent a formal compact, anyone could use the forthcoming mobile wagering option – a Class III gambling activity – on tribal land, which is effectively sovereign, non-federal territory on which state law does not apply. Casinos and their sports wagering vendors could potentially find themselves in legal hot water by allowing sports wagering to occur where it is not authorized by law, and might thus seek to have the tribal land (and Four Winds Casino) geofenced to prevent mobile wagering on or from that land. As best as we can tell, this has not been an issue addressed anywhere else, but could well arise in Indiana if a compact allowing that Class III activity is not authorized by compact.

□ If the State does enter into a compact, it will undoubtedly receive something tangible in return, and we'll be watching any negotiations to see just what the Governor and Indiana Gaming Commission will seek (a lump sum annual payment in lieu of taxes? a percentage of the sports wagering take?), and whether the Pokagons will seek additional Class III gaming options (such as traditional slot machines and table games).

□ And as we understand it, if a state offers a type of Class III Gaming – such as sports wagering – that would be the subject of negotiation if requested by the tribe, but simply agreeing upon one type of Class III gaming does not automatically unlock the door to all other forms for the tribe; those must also be negotiated.

- The Gary City Council on August 20 opted to postpone the necessary rezoning approval for the proposed inland off-footprint site for a relocated Spectacle Entertainment, LLC casino.

□ The delay in a final vote will allow more time for city and casino officials to iron out the details of a project agreement for the development proposed for 30 acres at 29th Avenue, adjacent to the Burr Street exit on the Borman Expressway. The city wants more assurances on local vendors and jobs, and is seeking an upfront $5 million payment. Expect an August 27 council vote on the rezone request, a condition precedent to Indiana Gaming Commission consideration of the Majestic Star Casino move proposed by Spectacle and Hard Rock International – at a meeting scheduled for Indianapolis on August 28. Spectacle seeks to fast-track the project so as to be ready to open its first phase by December 31, 2020.

- Overlooked in the Union Gaming Analytics report on the feasibility of a Chicago casino is that the consultants believe there remains a significant amount of untapped capacity in the Chicagoland market, at least in terms of digging deeper into patron pockets, if not expanding the market. Union Gaming researchers find that only 0.6% of income in the market is spent on gambling, while that figure generally ranges closer to one full percent in other markets. “This suggests there is significant upside potential in terms of total gaming revenue that can be supported by the Chicago metro area as supply is added throughout the market.”

Southern Market News . . .

- For several years we had been following the high-stakes Switzerland County property tax odyssey for you that involved Belterra Casino Resort. Switzerland Co. Assessor v. Belterra Resort Indiana, LLC, 49T10-1705-TA-9. We thought that the judicial aspect of the property tax dispute was over in July 2018, when the Indiana Tax Court issued its order affirming in part and reversing in part an Indiana Board of Tax Review final determination in the matter (or in October, when the Indiana Supreme Court denied transfer) . . . but after the Tax Court formally closed the case in April, Belterra came back to the Tax Court in June, telling Judge Martha Blood Wentworth that, despite her ruling more than one year earlier, Switzerland Cty. Assessor v. Belterra Resort Indiana, LLC, 101 N.E.3d 895 (Ind. Tax Ct.), review denied, neither the Switzerland County Assessor nor the Board of Tax Review had taken any action to comply with her May 2018 ruling, and asked her to intervene and enforce that mandate for action upon remand in recalculation of property taxes involving 2008, 2009, and 2014.

□ The Board claimed that it believed it was simply obligated to order the special assessment, but not to actually oversee the local process. Attorneys representing the assessor asked the judge to deny Belterra’s Motion for Enforcement because, as it argued, the motion was based on material outside the record, is not ripe, and the Tax Court lacked subject matter jurisdiction to hear it, contending that the proper venue was a court of competent jurisdiction in Switzerland County.

□ Judge Wentworth, however, was not impressed. On August 15, she issued an eight-page opinion finding that the Indiana Tax Court has subject matter jurisdiction, and ordering the Indiana Board of Tax Review to verify and provide written notice to the parties that the corrected assessments comply with the Tax Court’s instructions for correcting the assessments in its May 24, 2018, decision.

□ In case you’re unclear about how Judge Wentworth feels about the actions by the state and local governmental units here, ponder this passage: “[T]he Indiana Board must ensure that the Court’s instructions contained in its May 24, 2018, opinion have been specifically carried out. This oversight process guarantees that the Indiana Board – Indiana’s assessment and property tax expert – has determined the accuracy of a corrected assessment, reducing the possibility that additional judicial resources must be expended. Moreover, as a practical matter, the Indiana Board’s oversight insulates an assessor – typically a party in property assessment cases – from the appearance that she advanced her own self-interest.”

□ Judge Wentworth then included this scathing footnote directed at the Switzerland County assessor: “Here, the Assessor’s post-decision actions and claims appear to be intended to reduce the adverse effects of the Court’s decision. First, the Assessor conjured an ambiguity in the Court’s instructions for calculating the corrected assessments where there was none. Then, when corrected values were issued presumably based on that conjured ambiguity, the Assessor invented procedural infirmities to prevent the Court from enforcing its decision. Taxpayers deserve more than taxation by trickery, and the Court will not countenance such actions,” the clearly miffed Tax Court wrote.

- Full House Resorts, Inc. reports second quarter numbers for its Rising Star Casino • Resort. Net revenues during the April - June period decreased to $11.6 million from $12.5 million one year earlier due to lower business volumes, which the company attributes to a pair of “ongoing road construction projects.” The repaving of U.S. 50, which Full House describes as “the main highway leading to the property,” began during in the first quarter of 2019, “frequently causing traffic delays,” and it “continued to adversely affect operations during the second quarter of 2019 . . . while a second project affecting an alternate route to the property started in the second quarter.” Both Indiana Department of Transportation projects are slated to be completed by the end of 2019.

□ Casino revenue decreased by 5.6%, largely due to a 3.9% decrease in slot revenue and, to a lesser extent, a 13.0% decrease in table games revenue; the company says “both declines reflect lower volumes and relatively flat hold percentages.” Food and beverage revenues decreased with the closure of a restaurant for half of the quarter for remodeling and rebranding as well as a decline in guest volumes. A smaller factor in the decline was said to be the property’s replacement of the breakfast buffet (starting in February) with a continental breakfast, included as part of a new daily resort fee. Hotel revenues were virtually flat for the quarter, with Full House explaining that lower occupancy was offset by a higher average daily room rate, as well as implementation of the daily resort fee.

□ Similarly, net revenues for Rising Star for the during the six-month period from January through June decreased due to lower business volumes, again largely blamed on road construction. Casino revenue decreased by 4.1%, reflecting a 3.1% decrease in slot revenue due to lower volumes, as well as a relatively flat hold percentage. To a lesser extent, Full House say that casino revenue was affected by a 7.9% decrease in table games revenue and a 1.8 percentage point decrease in table games hold.

□ Due in part to traffic delays resulting from the ongoing construction projects, the Rising Sun property dropped charges for its ferry service beginning in May, and recently began to “aggressively” market the complimentary ferry service from Boone County, Kentucky, “as an easier travel alternative to our property,” which the company believes “will help offset the effects of construction traffic.” The ferry service showed what Full House considers as “meaningful increases in usage during the quarter,” as well as “a steady increase in the number of vehicles” and “record usage” in July. Weekday usage of the ferry service in July grew by 69% over the June count, and weekend traffic increased by 56% from June. “As a result of the increased ferry traffic, management has decided to continue to operate the ferry on a free basis, believing the increased traffic is more important to the casino than the ferry revenue.”

□ Adjusted Property EBITDA of approximately $600,000 in the second quarter of 2019 was down by 22.2% from the prior-year period, and was off by 20.6% for the six-month period due to the revenue declines, as well as what Full House says were “severance expenses related to recent management changes at the property.” Expenses this year also reflect additional costs to operate the ferry boat, which began operations in September 2018. “As a result, Adjusted Property EBITDA Margin declined to 5.2% from 6.2% in the prior-year quarter.”

□ Full House expects that the complement of recent legislative changes in Indiana, including the introduction of sports betting and a reduction in certain gaming tax rates (beginning in July 2021) – with some of the changes intended to help boost lower-grossing casinos, “are expected to benefit the property’s operating results over the long-term.” The company adds, however, that “These improvements may be somewhat offset by the acceleration in the law to January 2020 for the introduction of table games at racetrack casinos in the Indianapolis area.”

● Look for a new slot system to be installed at Rising Star Casino • Resort this Fall, replacing a 17-year-old system.

□ During the second quarter, RSCR management began the conversion of the existing Queen City Market, a quick-serve restaurant at Rising Star, into Ben’s Bistro. “The rebranded establishment features an updated dining selection and a newly constructed breakfast room. A free-standing specialty coffee kiosk and additional seating were also installed in the entry pavilion, which serves as the property’s functional gathering space that connects guests to the casino, hotel, entertainment venue, retail and dining areas.” The cost of this renovation was said to be less than $1 million, and Ben’s Bistro should be operational in the third quarter.

□ During the Fall, expect Rising Star to convert Big Vic’s Pub & Grub into a new sports book (with approximately 20 slot machines), and the property’s parent company, Full House Resorts, Inc., believes that its “sports betting partner will be responsible for the investment required for the sports book conversion.” Full House adds, “We expect to open an on-site sportsbook at Rising Star in the fall, in conjunction with a partner with unique expertise in sportsbook operations.”

IN Vigo County Casino News . . .

● Full House Resorts, Inc., the parent company of Rising Star Casino • Resort, devotes some attention to Vigo County in its second quarter earnings report. Full House notes that the Indiana gaming legislation effective July 1 “called for a competitive process for a new casino in Terre Haute, pending local voter approval. Such casino should have little or no impact on Rising Star and the Company is evaluating whether to pursue the potential expansion opportunity.”

● Even after Danville, Illinois extended its deadline for casino development applications over concern that other potential applicants needed more time to line up local deals, the final number of (undisclosed) applicants stands at two in the city just an hour or so up U.S. 41 from Vigo County.

● The Indiana Gaming Commission is wrapping up a Request for Qualifications process in which it is seeking a consultant to offer an analysis of and review proposals for the proposed Vigo County casino.

□ Much like the Center for Urban Policy and the Environment at the Indiana University School of Public and Environmental Affairs was engaged in the 1990s to provide some perspective on the market and help the Gaming Commission evaluate proposals, particularly with respect to their value to the host community, the Commission anticipates retaining an individual or entity to perform a similar review 20 years after the last competitive evaluation exercise (save the unique Orange County operating agent process – times two!).

IN Other Casino News . . .

● The Union Gaming Analytics report on the feasibility of a Chicago casino conducted for the Illinois Gaming Board as mandated under the new Illinois gaming law contains a section on “Cannibalization of Indiana casinos” from a proposed Chicago casino. “Based on the five sites selected for the study by the City of Chicago, we estimate that up to $260 million in AGR will be repatriated back to Illinois,” the consultants conclude. Union Gaming analysts The study also conclude that about one-third of the revenue to be derived from a Chicago casino would consist of funds diverted from amounts currently wagered at Northwest Indiana’s casinos. We infer from the numbers that virtually all of this would be derived from the four Lake County properties, and only a minimal amount from Blue Chip Casino (despite Blue Chip targeting an increasing amount of its marketing west into the Chicago area since the opening of the Four Winds Casino South Bend to its east).

□ The $259.7 million hit estimated by the Union Gaming team consists of $162.1 million in slot AGR and $97.5 million in table games AGR, and amounts to about 25% of AGR for the northern tier. “These estimates also assume a relocation of the Majestic Star Casino to Gary, IN near I-94, just a few miles from the Illinois border. This relocation modestly reduces the amount of projected cannibalization to Indiana’s gaming revenue. Ultimately, it should be expected that not only will the northern Indiana casinos respond to this cannibalization with various marketing tactics designed to recapture any lost AGR to Illinois, but that changes might be enacted to the regulatory construct in Indiana in order to make these casinos more competitive (e.g. adjust gaming tax rates lower, or make casino free play deductible).”

□ As we had told you in January, the five Lake Michigan casinos combined for 2018 win of $934.18 million, eroding from 2017 by 0.46% (- $4.32 million), even as Illinois’ Chicagoland casinos dipped by 1.3% over the year. Northern tier win has now declined for eight consecutive years. This is also the lowest annual win for the region since 2000. The Lake Michigan casinos produced 41.69% of statewide casino revenues in 2018.

● We told you in detail in 2015 about a proposal that Full House Resorts, Inc., the parent company of Rising Star Casino • Resort, had outlined for American Place, a boutique casino (with 700 slot machines and 30 table games), hotel, lifestyle center, and retail complex of as much as 1.2 million square feet at the site of the old Indianapolis International Airport terminal, a $650 million project submitted in response to a Request for Proposals for the site.

□ While the local process turned out to be flawed and all initial RFPs were rejected, in early August, Full House revived the concept, submitting a proposal to construct and operate American Place, a new casino and resort destination in Waukegan, Illinois, a lakefront community approximately 35 miles north of downtown Chicago. This proposal was in response to a Request for Qualifications and Proposals published by the City of Waukegan to select a preferred operator under the new legislation expanding gaming in Illinois. If selected (and there were several other proposals submitted, with some clout-heavy developers involved), Full House intends to build a casino with ~ 1,500 slot machines, 60 table games, and “a very high-end boutique hotel.”

● If you took a close look at the July Indiana Gaming Commission revenue report, you may have noticed a different format – and the absence of a breakdown of coin-in by each denomination of slot machine. As we understand it, the format changes were driven by the State of Indiana’s rollout of the new Electronic Tax System (ETS), a component of the State’s forthcoming move to a Windows 10-based system. As part of the change in the underlying system, the Commission decided to no longer gather the detailed denomination data because it was not needed for regulatory reasons (and while casinos may have used it for competitive intelligence, your favorite gaming newsletter did not include it in our monthly proprietary database because it can be a shade misleading; multi-denomination machines are listed as penny machines in the report, making the information a bit less useful than one might think).

July State Summary

Indiana's 13 gaming properties generated revenues of only $185.86 million during July, the lowest July take since 2002, the last month under the unlamented must-cruise law. Statewide revenues fell from July 2018 by 2.79% (- $5.33 million), the third consecutive July-to-July downturn, and the largest July slippage on a percentage basis over the past five years.

The 2019 calendar was not favorable (one fewer weekend day than in July 2018 – albeit a Sunday), and we'd blame adverse weather from the remnants of Hurricane Barry, but win has now dipped lower in five out of seven months of 2019.

Three casinos suffered their worst July on record: Blue Chip Casino, Rising Star Casino • Resort, and Majestic Star Casino II. Hollywood Casino Lawrenceburg had its second-worst July ever, both Ameristar Casino East Chicago and Belterra Casino Resort posted their third-worst July ever, and this was the fourth-worst July ever at Horseshoe Casino Southern Indiana.

Only three properties collected more revenue this July than they did during July 2018: Majestic Star Casino I, Indiana Grand Casino, and Harrah's Hoosier Park Racing & Casino. Harrah's Hoosier Park celebrated its best July in seven years, while Indiana Grand enjoyed its best July ever. This was the second-most lucrative July ever for Tropicana Evansville. Of the 10 casinos open at least 15 years, only Tropicana Evansville and Horseshoe Casino Hammond have seen their all-time July best performances occur this decade; for everyone else, the golden years seem to be long past. Hammond led the state with $32.5 million in July win (up for a second successive month), but this was the lowest sum for the first-place casino in any July since July 2000 when Hollywood (then Argosy Casino Lawrenceburg) paced the state with $31 million.

Oddly, perhaps, even as 10 of the 13 properties endured over-the-year declines, only two casinos attracted less revenue in July than they did in June (and both were along Lake Michigan). That's the best such over-the-month performance since March.

January-July revenue for Indiana's 13 commercial casinos has dwindled by 2.5% (- $34 million), compared to the same seven months in 2018. Year-to-date slot win is down by $21 million while table win at the seven-month mark has eroded by $13 million.

Indiana's five Lake Michigan boats generated $74.83 million in July, down from last year by 3.51% (- $2.72 million). That's the lowest July take for the northern tier since 1998 (the first full year of operation with five boats afloat) and the fourth consecutive July-to-July downturn. The collective northern revenues also took a dip from June. Majestic Star Casino I was the only Lake property that grew win versus last year, even though it posted its lowest July slot win since 1996, its first full month of operation (MSC I is the only casino in the state where slot win has declined year-over-year in every month of 2019); table win at MSC I, on the other hand, registered at a six-year July apex. The 14% decline that transpired at Ameristar stands as the largest July-to-July percentage decrease seen in the northern region over the past five years. Astonishingly, Majestic Star Casino II has now seen win erode on a July-to-July basis for nine years in a row.

The six properties that comprise the Southern Indiana market attracted in a combined $67.65 million, sinking from July 2018 by 6.53% (- $4.73 million) even as the numbers improved from June. This was the worst July performance for the southern region since 1999, when two fewer casinos were open. Southern tier win has now contracted on a year-over-year for seven consecutive months. None of the casinos south of U.S. 50 experienced annual growth for the second straight month, and for the third time in 2019. The 11%+ decline that occurred at Horseshoe Casino Southern Indiana stands as the largest July-to-July percentage decrease seen in the southern tier over the past five years . . . and you can chalk a chunk of this up to both construction disruptions and the first July of competition against the continued impressive performance of the Derby City Gaming historical horse racing machine facility in Louisville - Kentucky's equivalent of Illinois video gaming terminals, although more concentrated. Four of the six southern tier casinos have now watched their respective revenues decline in July in back-to-back years. For Tropicana, this was the property's first July decline since its days afloat in 2013. Four of the six casinos have seen win decline on a year-over-year basis in six out of the seven months of 2019.

The Caesars Entertainment Corporation Central Indiana racino duo boasted $43.38 million in July gaming revenues, up by 5.13% ($2.12 million), and marking their sixth consecutive month of collective year-over-year growth. Nonetheless, Hoosier Park and Indiana Grand join Hollywood and Majestic Star I as the only four properties at which year-over-year coin-in has declined in every month of 2019.

Indiana slot win was $157.92 million during July, down over the year by 2.89% (- $4.70 million). Slot win has now contracted on a July-over-July basis for three consecutive years. Players deposited $1.656 billion in slot machines, the weakest July coin-in since 1998 when there were five fewer properties. Three casinos saw their July slot win take a dive of more than $1 million over the year. A whopping seven casinos reported their lowest July slot play in history (Belterra, Blue Chip, Horseshoe Casino Southern Indiana, Rising Star, Ameristar, and both Majestic Star vessels). Even Indiana Grand, where year-over-year win has grown in every month of 2019, saw the handle come in at a four-year July low. Bucking the trend was Horseshoe Hammond, where coin-in rose from July 2018 by 1.3 percent. Statewide slot play has now deteriorated on a year-over-year basis for seven consecutive months. The slot payback rate landed down at 90.47%, an all-time July low. Tropicana was home to the tightest slots in the state for the first time since March. The loosest slots were found at Rising Star for the first time since February, and this 91.75% rate was the highest the state has seen since Orange County in March. Win per slot per day of $284.97 is remarkably similar to June's $284.24, even though the number of slot machines shrank by 134 to finish with a count below 18,000 for the first time since April 2008 - about a month before the racinos debuted. The over-the-year numbers are also consistent. Note that French Lick has reduced its slot inventory in successive months, and the 830 devices on the casino floor at the end of July represents the fewest slots ever in the Springs Valley. This is the first month in more than two decades - since January 1999 - in which no property has had at least 2,100 machines in operation.

Indiana table win fell to $27.94 million, slipping from last year by 2.19% (- $625,454). Table win has now tumbled on a year-over-year basis for nine consecutive months. At the individual property level, three casinos posted growth over prior-year levels, and the gains at all three were unusually pronounced: Belterra (up 96%), Majestic Star 1 (up 67%, by an uncharacteristic $919, 242, almost spot-on with the dollar decline at the tables for Ameristar next door), and French Lick (up 33%). Win per table per day registered at a five-month nadir of $1,359, while the 663 table games available across all properties marks the fewest open for business in any month since June 2008, when the two racinos entered the competition. Players anted up $131 million on table games, with table drop trailing levels posted in the previous year for the fifth month in a row, which is the longest such streak since 2014. The table hold rate of 21.30% represents the highest for any July over the past four years. Ameristar reported the lowest table hold rate in the state for the first time since January, taking a hit at roulette (with just a single-digit hold percentage) and baccarat. Three casinos boasted their highest July table hold rate in property history: Hollywood, Belterra, and Majestic Star I.

Caesars Entertainment Corporation collects $94 million from its quartet of Hoosier properties, a decline from a year ago of 0.75%, but still equivalent to 50.71% of the statewide market, the corporate parent's second-highest state share over the past 15 months. If the proposed corporate marriage of Caesars and Eldorado Resorts, Inc. had been in effect this year, that team would have controlled 57% of Indiana's July casino revenues. Penn National Gaming, Inc. reported $31 million from the pair of Indiana properties it operates, plummeting by a disappointing 10% (-$3.6 million), and landing a statewide market share of just under 17%, a 15-month nadir. Both Penn National properties, Hollywood and Ameristar, suffered their largest year-over-year percentage decline of 2019 in July. Boyd Gaming Corporation managed to earn revenue of $23.20 million from its Hoosier casino pair, a year-over-year erosion of one percent, but still affording the corporate parent a 12.5% state market share, an 11-month high. Spectacle Entertainment, LLC tallies $12.7 million from the Buffington Harbor sister ships during the month, soaring from July 2018 by five percent ($609,824), and allowing the Gary corporate parent to claim a 6.8% state market share in its first July of Majestic Star Casino ownership.

The 10 Illini casinos brought in July receipts of $116 million, off by 2.99% from last year, while the 32,314 Video Gaming Terminals at 7,044 establishments generated income of $134.3 million, up by an impressive 11.1% over the previous year. All told, Illinois records just over $250 million in July gaming revenues, surpassing Indiana by approximately $64 million, effectively on par with the June margin that Illinois had enjoyed.

The four Ohio casinos racked up July revenues of $70.4 million, a gain of 1.0%, while the seven Ohio racinos collected $91.9 million, growing by 3.3 percent. The combined Buckeye State booty was $162.2 million (up by 2.3%), which trailed Indiana's haul by about $24 million, the largest margin favoring Indiana since the end of the first quarter. The Cincinnati market leader, the JACK Cincinnati Casino, counted July revenues of $17.47 million, a year-over-year gain of 1.9% (on stronger table game win; slot revenue was down over the year), even as all three Indiana properties in the same market saw their fortunes nose dive by a combined eight percent.

Hoosier Lottery

● The second largest jackpot in Hoosier Lotto history was hit on Saturday, August 10, with a single ticket winning the $43.8 million up for grabs, the most lucrative top prize up for grabs in the hometown draw game in close to 12 years. The single winning ticket was sold at a Jay C Plus supermarket in Corydon. During this run - which began February 10, 2018 - Hoosier Lotto actually featured a larger jackpot than Mega Millions during one draw (Friday, July 26).

□ The August 10 jackpot was the largest available since the game's matrix changed in May 2014 (the previous high under the revised format was the $25.5 million jackpot of October 14, 2017). The all-time record remains the $54.5 million won on November 7, 2007, and we were about 17 weeks or so away from potentially topping that amount.

□ Hoosier Lotto ranked as high as third among all domestic jackpots during this run, and completed the stretch at fourth nationally, trailing the two multistate draw games and the California SuperLotto Plus jackpot ($69.0 million at the time). When the Hoosier Lotto jackpot dipped back down to "only" $1 million for Wednesday, August 14, it plummeted to 27th place among domestic jackpots (and the California big-buck jackpot was hit Wednesday, dropping the starting jackpot down to $7 million for August 24). Sigh.

● Hoosier Lottery retail sales numbers for July find Silver Express in Indianapolis atop the sales ladder for an 11th consecutive month, as it continues its remarkable run of not having been lower than first or second statewide since a third-place finish way back in November 2015 (putting this in context, Adele was atop the Billboard charts with Hello, and businessman Donald Trump (R) had no clue who then-Gov. Mike Pence (R) was). Silver Express had held the top spot statewide during a strong run from December 2015 through October 2017 . . . and now again from September 2018 through July 2019. MCR Short Stop in Portage regains the second-place statewide sales rank in July after briefly falling into third place behind Southside Marathon of Fort Wayne in June. MCR Short Stop has ranked among the top 10 retailers without fail since June 2016, and first gained the second-place ranking in March of this year. Troy Foods Inc. in Indianapolis climbs back into third place after last month's fourth place finish. Troy Foods had ranked second from September 2018 through January 2019, but slipped down to third in February and maintained that rank for four consecutive months until slipping one place again in June. Troy Foods Inc. first appeared on the top 10 list in July 2018, popping up in 10th place after taking over ownership from Buck's Market in Indianapolis on July 13, 2018. Had the 13 days of Buck's ownership in July 2018 been folded into Troy Foods Inc. sales, it would have ranked second for July 2018.

Top 10 Hoosier Lottery Retailers - July 2019 Sales Rank

□ Grand Food Junction in Fort Wayne recovered slightly from its eighth place June showing to sit in fourth for July statewide retail sales. Southside Marathon LLC in Fort Wayne dropped from June's impressive second place finish and takes the fifth ranked spot for July - Southside Marathon has appeared in the top 10 list nine times out of the last 12 months, failing to make a showing in August and October of 2018 and January 2019. K & D Marathon, adjacent to the Illinois state line in Hammond, climbed a few rungs of the ladder to stand at sixth highest retail sales in July, perhaps due to the increase in the Illinois gas tax that drove many Illini drivers across the state line for their fill-ups and multi-state lottery game tickets.

□ The Hen in Crown Point maintained its seventh place showing from June while Lucky's Mart LLC in Speedway slipped to its lowest rank since October 2018 at eighth for July retail sales. Plainfield Dairyland showed up back on the chart for the first time since February to take the ninth highest sales slot, while a first-time entrant on the top 10 list arrived on the scene as Oxford One Stop in Fort Wayne rounded out the list in the number 10 position . . . erasing the Phillips 66 in Indianapolis from the leader board.

□ The number of counties represented among the top 10 increased by one from the last four months which had seen only four counties represented - the smallest number of counties represented in the top 10 that we could recall. Hendricks County rejoined the ranks with Plainfield Dairyland's ninth place re-entry for July. Marion County and Allen County tie for the most retailers on the leader ladder at three each (all three Allen County retailers are from Fort Wayne, giving the Summit City more retailers on the list than Indianapolis), leaving Marion County down from its all-time high showing of five stores in the top 10 honors last month - the first time a single county has had more than four stores in the top honors since we began recording the rankings in detail in 2013. Lake County and Porter County each end the month with two retailers among the state leaders.

IN Horse Racing & Racinos

● "Quarter Horse racing's appetite for drugs makes its Thoroughbred cousins look absolutely prudish," writes former Indiana Horse Racing Commission executive director Joe Gorajec in his InsideRacingRegs blog. He calls it "a problem that pervades the breed at all levels and shows no sign of abating." The founding IHRC Staffer recalls that his first job at a horse track was in the racing office at Ruidoso Downs at Santa Fe in New Mexico in 1979.

□ Drawing on his experience there and the latest annual report from the New Mexico Racing Commission, Gorajec notes that "Quarter Horses account of less than half the races but 80% of the positive tests" in the Land of Enchantment.

IU, Purdue to defend cyberspace

IEDC funding to help educate and train key cyber defense professionals

Something to keep an eye on: The Indiana Economic Development Corporation awards a $6.19 million grant from the 21st Century Research and Technology Fund to the Purdue Research Foundation to establish a 5G wireless R&D test lab in downtown Indianapolis, a 5G digital community in the Discovery Park District adjacent to Purdue's West Lafayette campus, and a 5G town and rural test bed within the 10-county Wabash Heartland Innovation Network. The new 5G hub launches this Fall.

Our sister Hannah newsletter, INDIANA EDUCATION INSIGHT, explained some of the details, but you should be interested in the implications for cybersecurity.

The IEDC money will help support the Indiana-Purdue Center on Trusted Microelectronics Ecosystem, an alliance committed to increasing microelectronics security protections for the U.S. and its allies. In addition, the funding will support a resource center at Indiana University that will support local stakeholders such as municipal governments and rural utilities in mitigating cybersecurity vulnerabilities by distilling critical infrastructure protection research and distributing it through Cybersecurity Policy Boot Camps. Finally, the 21 Fund grant will allow Purdue to provide free or subsidized cybersecurity training to all Indiana businesses via a suite of world-class online training videos.

Cybersecurity workforce education and training is also a focus of a new Purdue University partnership with Cyberbit, the world's leading provider of cyber ranges for simulated cybersecurity training.

Under this new relationship, Cyberbit's cyberattack simulation platform will be used to enhance the skills of students and career professionals. Purdue will launch a Cyberbit Range at the West Lafayette campus and offer Cyberbit Range simulated training to businesses in the United States. Cyberbit Range is a software platform that creates a virtual model of a company's IT network architecture, including servers, routers and applications. The platform can simulate attacks, such as denial-of-service or ransomware, and test abilities to respond. This allows security professionals to develop proactive defenses.

The IU component and Purdue practical platforms become increasingly important as local government units across the state (most recently in Huntington, LaPorte, Madison, and Vigo counties have found themselves the targets of sometimes crippling - and expensive - cyber and ransomware attacks, and Indiana utilities find themselves regularly probed for cyber weaknesses by unknown attackers. Hackers are now tweaking their malware to create more - and more sophisticated - cyberattacks against state and local governments, the Center for Internet Security tells StateScoop last week.

Through the unique collaborative partnership, Purdue and Cyberbit also will launch several initiatives:

- Purdue will enhance current cybersecurity offerings of its Cyber Technical Assistance Program via the Cyberbit Range.
- Purdue will expand research on the most effective lab-based, hands-on approaches to teach cybersecurity.
- Cyberbit will support the joint development of an Operational Technology Security Lab at Purdue for the study of protocols used in advanced manufacturing of defense and aerospace products.

IFD burns over Rep. Forestal

Facing felony, solon disciplined at day job

The hits just keep on coming for an embattled lawmaker, even as he seems to have at least temporarily dodged disciplinary action from the House Democratic Caucus.

The Indianapolis Fire Department suspends Rep. Dan Forestal (D) from his day job as a firefighter with IFD, following his recent arrest on Level A misdemeanor charges of operating a vehicle while intoxicated and resisting law enforcement, as well as one Level 6 Felony count of impersonating a public servant. The suspension is for 240 hours without pay, and Forestal has also been placed in an employee assistance program.

New reports indicate that Forestal had pleaded guilty to an OWI charge in 2007, five years before his election to the House, and had promised IFD brass that "nothing like this will ever happen again," according to his personnel file, which also indicates that this will be his third suspension in 12 years.

Forestal's initial hearing before Marion County Superior Court, Criminal Division 9 Judge Charnette Garner is August 27. Judge Garner was appointed to the bench by the Governor in January. She had been chief counsel to the Marion County Prosecutor's Office and an assistant U.S. Attorney. Marie Castetter, Hancock County's chief deputy prosecutor, will serve as special prosecutor.

IN Politics

Federal Office Races . . .

● We're not sure of the actual request from the Federal Election Commission (we told you about the lack of contributions from the committee during the second quarter), but the campaign committee for former U.S. Rep. Dan Burton (R) sent this missive to FEC officials last week: "To Whom It Concerns, This form is in response to the FEC's letter requesting information regarding use of campaign funds. The Dan Burton for Congress Committee uses its funds to make occasional contributions to other candidates and intends to remain active."

● Perhaps these numbers from a new NBC News poll may suggest why so many prominent Republicans have shied away from an open seat CD 05 race: presidential approval nationally is only 36% among suburban women, compared to a 61% disapproval – and a generic Democrat running against the incumbent President cruises with a 61% to 32% margin among suburban women . . . one big-name Repub who seems not to be discouraged by those numbers is State Treasurer Kelly Mitchell (R). While she is still looking for a CD 05 abode and has not publicly stated her intentions, she is being talked up publicly and privately by outgoing U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R), who had earlier simply told those who asked that she had talked with lots of potential candidates and offered them encouragement. Rep. Brooks is likely pleased that a female state officeholder who has won both of her statewide races as well as her earlier county races (just north of the district, which gave her some name ID in nearby Howard County and a network among area local officials) and has not been identified with controversial social issues is willing to take the plunge. Mitchell also has some street cred in the business community (helpful in southern Hamilton and Boone counties and the north side of Indianapolis) from her work as treasurer and in that office as Mourdock era division director (where she also worked closely with local officials, but the Mourdock ties may be dredged up by Ds as a negative . . . and a female Democratic nominee would eagerly paint an opponent in Hamilton County as a Trump-Pence-Mourdock disciple). Quietly helping her through the early phases of setting up the campaign – and likely to serve as general consultants going forward – is D.C.-based RightVoter, a national firm with local roots. The firm is led by partners Michael Biundo, Hoosier native Kory Wood, and two others, and its recent client list includes the 2016 Trump and Paul presidential campaigns, Protect Freedom PAC, and more than one-dozen U.S. Senate or congressional races around the country. Biundo served as senior advisor to the 2016 Trump and Paul campaigns, and national campaign manager for the Santorum 2012 presidential campaign, so Mitchell will have some help in messaging Trump and disaffected GOP voters. All of the partners have run or consulted on campaigns for president, U.S. Senate, or Congress . . . unsuccessful 2018 CD 04 primary candidate Steve Braun (R), a former state workforce development commissioner and lawmaker who made his mark running IT firms, opens a committee for a CD 05 run, and he'll have cash – and consulting aid from familiar local names.

State Office Races . . .

● Bad news for Democrats seeking the office of governor – particularly Dr. Woody Myers (D) and Sen. Eddie Melton (D). A poll of Marion County voters for Indy Politics by Mason Strategies (08/11-14; 400 LVs; 42% D, 27% R, 26% I; margin of error ± 4.9 percentage points) shows high marks for Governor Eric Holcomb (R) in a key Democratic stronghold, even among African American voters.

□ Those surveyed offer the Governor a hefty 60% approval rating (even as 55% support re-electing Circle City's Democratic mayor Joe Hogsett), while only 24% profess to disapprove of his job performance (16% offer no opinion). A majority of Indianapolis voters (53%) feel the state is headed in the right direction. Almost one-half of local Democrats (47%) also indicate approval of Gov. Holcomb's performance, as do almost two-thirds (65%) of independents, and more than three-fourths (78%) of Republicans. A majority (56%) of black voters surveyed approve of the Governor's job performance, vs. only 22% who disapprove – a smaller disapproval among African Americans than in the overall sample. Almost one-half (49%) believe that the state is headed in the right direction.

● Retired Muncie industrialist Van Smith makes a $10,000 contribution to the Governor's re-election campaign committee on August 19.

● Senate Democratic Caucus Chair Karen Tallian (D) makes official the 2020 bid for attorney general to which we had tipped you. The attorney from Ogden Dunes has served in the Senate for 14 years, and her seat is not up for election next year.

□ The Senate Democratic fiscal leader releases this statement outlining her reasons for running, contending that "a decade of Republican supermajority across three branches of government has made Indiana a state of extreme politics. I am running to restore checks and balances to the Statehouse and to be a voice for all who live here. It is time that Hoosiers have leadership that listens to their problems and fights for solutions. The Attorney General should be the Citizen's Advocate and work for all of us, not filing lawsuits trying to take away our legal rights. The Attorney General's office should not be trying to promote a right-wing agenda to overturn healthcare for pre-existing conditions and take away the ability for Hoosiers to have affordable insurance coverage. Curtis Hill has not been an advocate for Indiana citizens, and he has not brought integrity and reason to this office."

□ Sen. Tallian adds, "My Senate record speaks for itself: I wrote the law that makes it harder for banks to foreclose on homeowners. I have protected our pensions and I have defended our civil rights. As a member of the Criminal Law committee, I helped revise our outdated criminal code to make sure that the punishment fits the crime. As the Attorney General, I will continue to advocate for our citizens." In her work on behalf of her district, on Lake Michigan and home to steel mills, she has been a strong union and environmental advocate.

□ If the race is between Tallian and Hill, one other issue that you can certainly expect a spirited face-off over – as attendees experienced at the 2016 BGD Legislative Conference is marijuana reform. Sen. Tallian was the first Hoosier lawmaker to affirmatively call for reform of marijuana laws, seeking to decriminalize marijuana possession and legalize use of medical marijuana. General Hill has been a strong advocate of maintaining the status quo on marijuana laws. A race between these two candidates will certainly generate a statewide debate over marijuana deregulation issues in advance of the 2021 session, when any expect the issue to come to the fore.

IN Legislative Races . . .

● We told you to expect a Cass County candidate for the SD 18 vacancy selection caucus on September 9, and now former Sen. Randy Head (R), whose retirement caused the opening, throws his support behind second-term at-large Cass County Councilmember Stacey Donato (R).

□ In addition to her elective service, Donato, an accountant by training and vocation, has served on several local boards and commissions. A Eucharist minister, she is a member of the church choir in her Catholic church, and she and her husband have experience as foster parents. She tells the Logansport Pharos-Tribune the key issues for SD 18 are “substance abuse, educational funding along with other educational issues, economic development and decline of population in rural areas.” Donato also notes that “On the state level, I’ve heard conversations on gun control, abortion and legalized marijuana.”

□ Amy Anne Roe (R) also joins the fray. The president of Fulton County H.O.P.E. and former executive director of the Fulton County Chamber of Commerce is from Rochester and graduated from Grace College and earned a master’s degree from Western Governors University. She had a brief stint working for the logistics industry in South Carolina before returning home, and lost a May primary bid for one of two at-large seats on the Rochester City Council before the SD 18 opportunity arose, and she opted to seek the Senate seat to serve as a “voice for the voiceless.”

□ A Rochester City Council member, Brian Fitzwater (R) is running. The only attorney in the race to date has served as a chief deputy prosecutor, public defender, town judge pro tem, and town attorney. His private practice focuses on farm and small business law, estate planning, family law, and real estate matters. He has served on the boards of several community organizations.

□ There will be at least five candidates from four different counties in the race. The two women join two men in the race, Jake Adams (R) of Flora and Jeffery Staker (R) of Peru.

● Jason Fletcher (D), who works for the Marion County Prosecutor’s Office, opens an SD 36 campaign committee for a challenge to Sen. Jack Sandlin (R). Fletcher opened a campaign committee for an HD 97 run in 2016 (the seat was occupied by Rep. Justin Moed (D) and Demo dynamo Elise Shrock was his chair), but didn’t go to the gate.

● Ballotpedia, which bills itself as “The Encyclopedia of American Politics,” finds that thus far this year, legislative special elections have been held for 50 seats, and four “have flipped from Democratic control to Republican control. One seat has flipped from Republican control to Democratic control. One seat has flipped from Republican control to an independent officeholder.” In the three Indiana vacancies this year, all will remain in the hands of the same party, because Indiana law requires those vacancies to be filled by caucuses of the party of the departed lawmaker ... offering no opportunity for voters to have a say under potentially changed political circumstances.

IN Mayoral Races . . .

● Hammond’s Democratic Party chair files a challenge to the candidacy of the Republican mayoral candidate – selected in a post-primary caucus – contending that the failure of Edward Lipkovitch, Jr. (R) to personally sign his required statement of economic interest renders him ineligible to face off on the ballot against four-term Mayor Tom McDermott, Jr. (D).

IN the Presidential Race . . .

● South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D) is tied for fourth place with five percent in a new CNN poll by SSRS (08/15-18; 402 Democrats and D-leaning independent RVs; margin of error ± 6.1 percentage points), up from four percent in June CNN polling after the initial debate, but not benefiting as much as others from the crash (- 12 points) of U.S. Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA). He remains at five percent in the latest Morning Consult national polling, and drops one percentage point over the week to five percent in Morning Consult polling among Democratic primary voters in Iowa, New Hampshire, South Carolina, and Nevada ... the 2019 Cast Your Kernel presidential poll at the Iowa State Fair found almost as many fairgoers casting their kernels for a Democratic candidate for president as for a Republican – anomalous for the 15 years the poll has operated, and Mayor Pete’s 18% trails only former Vice President Joe Biden (D) and his 25% of the unofficial tassel-free tally ... Team Pete is on the Iowa air waves with a pair of radio spots highlighting rural and veterans issues. “When the President gets on Twitter to brag about the high-stakes game he’s playing with China, he’s not seeing the same rural America that I see,” Mayor Buttigieg says in one of the spots, suggesting the President is too focused on the stock market while his own “trade war is tearing apart the very fabric of rural America.” In the other spot, Mayor Pete explains, “As a veteran of the war in Afghanistan, I saw firsthand the sacrifice made by those in uniform ... and I noticed how many of them came from places that look a lot more like South Bend than the big coastal cities.” He then spotlights his plan to “expand opportunities for veterans – providing those who’ve served with two weeks of training on what it takes to start a small business ... followed by a $10,000 grant to help transform a good idea into a successful company.” Another pair of radio spots in both Iowa and New Hampshire targets an interesting demographic: Students heading back to college. Both spots focus on the current political environment, the incumbent, and need for not simply “recycling the same arguments and politicians that have dominated our politics for as long as I’ve been alive,” Buttigieg says, hitting on policy issues that will resonate with a generation raised in a post-9/11 era in which school- and mass shootings are common cultural touchstones. “We’ve got to do something completely different” is the coda for both of the latter spots.

● The more moderate the Democratic presidential nominee, the better the party's chances of retaking the White House, former U.S. Sen. Evan Bayh (D) tells Martha MacCallum of Fox News Wednesday.

IN Other Political News . . .

● A new Fox News poll conducted under the joint direction of Beacon Research (D) (formerly known as Anderson Robbins Research) and Shaw & Company Research (R) (08/11-13; 1,013 RVs; margin of error \pm 3.0 percentage points) finds Vice President Mike Pence (R) not only remaining underwater, but that his favorability drops to its lowest level since the 2016 election. His low point in this polling came after the then-governor was nominated, while he peaked just before the election, falling back below 50% favorability after the 2016 election, and progressively declining since then. His unfavorable numbers have grown by more than one-half since Fall 2016.

□ Of the 39% who view the Vice President favorably in the most recent round of polling, 21% are “strongly” favorable and 18% are “somewhat” favorable, while among the 48% who view the VP unfavorably, the numbers are more polarized, with one-third (33%) “strongly” unfavorable, while 14% are “somewhat” unfavorable (numbers may not add up due to rounding). We’ve divided the numbers by pre-election, post-election, and post-inauguration periods.

IN Brief

IN Federal Circles . . .

● U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) is now a target of Dudley Brown, president of the National Association for Gun Rights, the entity that has taken aim at Rep. Jim Lucas (R) – probably the top gun rights advocate in the House – for not being ardent enough in his pursuit of Second Amendment rights (and which earlier this month took shots at U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) for what it saw as him bailing on defending gun rights). “Sen. Young has made it clear he’s ready to compromise away your gun rights. Just last week, Sen. Todd Young said: ‘I think Indiana’s red flag law, the most robust red flag law in the country, is the sort of thing other states should be looking at, and perhaps we should be looking at that at the federal level.’ Why is Sen. Young playing right into their hand?” Brown asks rhetorically. He calls upon gun owners to call Young, a Naval Academy alum who served in the Marines, and “Urge him to reverse course and oppose all gun control, especially ANY ‘Red Flag’ gun confiscation law and any national gun registration scheme being ushered through by anti-gun Democrats with the help of spineless Republicans,” claiming that “‘Red Flag’ laws allow SWAT teams to bust down your door, raid your home at 5 in the morning, and seize your legal firearms – all based on an anonymous complaint. Not a single one of the states that have this law protect the right to due process.”

● U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) tells Terry Meiners of WHAS 840-AM in Louisville August 12 that “The economy has never been better.” He also tells Meiners that he is growing increasingly concerned about the concentration of larger companies, particularly in the health care and insurance sector. “The thing I worry most about, next to big government – because it’s lethargic, it doesn’t get things done, it’s the opposite of a Main Street entrepreneur – is big business. Many of our industries have become highly concentrated and that worries me. Health care is the epitome of it, where increasingly we have fewer and fewer large corporations that dictate health insurance – there’s actually many pharma companies – you’ve got fewer and fewer companies at home, the hospitals, and I’m worried about it most of them are MBAs, but they want to play by different rules. Most of us in the business world [want] no barriers to entry, full transparency, we live off of competition. It’s not like that in the health care industry. Where do you spend that much money and never ask ‘What does it cost?’ So I challenge the industry, now that 80 senators are trying to fix your industry – that’s how many senators have weighed in on the bills going through the Senate. That should tell the industry, “Wake up. Are you that thick-headed? You’re going to have a business partner in Bernie Sanders and Medicare for all if you don’t get with it.” Sen. Braun says ‘Medicare for all’ “would literally double the size of the federal government” . . . asked by WHAS’ Meiners about whether it was time to open the door and look at changes to the law to address gun violence, Sen. Braun replied, “It really is for those of us who have been purists in the past, I think it’s analogous to what’s happening in health care. If you do not do something when you’re at crises points, which we are in health care, and I think we are in gun violence now. The other side always has plans that are much more drastic, and if you drag your feet, and don't do things that have common sense as the foundation, that aren't going to comprehensively change the dynamic of gun ownership, I think we risk that. So red flag laws - yes. Leader McConnell said that, and some type of focused background checks that aren't universal, but at least keep guns through - background checks, they're going to have to be improved, just like you would in a business that's not functioning right - we've got to find common-sense ideas that make it work better, and I think he'll bring to the floor something like that. They've got the two House bills there, that's going the other way, it wouldn't make it through the Senate because it's trying to do too many things that are radical when it comes to impacting law-abiding citizens that shouldn't be impacted in any way with the right to bear arms."

● U.S. Rep. Trey Hollingsworth (R) tells constituents, "Last month, I joined the Indiana congressional delegation in sending a letter to U.S. Department of Agriculture Secretary Sonny Purdue (sic). This letter shared our strong support of a Secretarial disaster designation in 88 counties, including all counties that make up Indiana's Ninth Congressional District. This designation would help farmers who have experienced severe losses caused by excessive rain and flooding that occurred during the 2019 crop year." He then poses his "Question of the Week: Do you support providing extra assistance to farmers to enhance risk management and address loss due to flooding?" . . . Rep. Hollingsworth spoke to the Morgan County Republican Party's monthly breakfast, and the Martinsville Reporter-Times tells readers that "One of the first concerns brought to Hollingsworth's attention was on the topic of immigration. Hollingsworth said that believed immigration to be an important issue that affected the United States' sovereignty. He stated that the country needed to protect its borders and address the problem of illegal immigration. 'We need to make sure that we continue to be a country for Americans, by Americans,' said Hollingsworth. Hollingsworth said that those that waited their turn and went through the legal process were of course welcome, but as a nation of laws, the United States needed to 'stop the flow of drugs and illegal immigrants into this country.' When asked about sanctuary cities, Hollingsworth said that he believed that they should be defunded as America could not have different rules for illegal immigrants. 'We are a country of laws,' said Hollingsworth."

● U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R) questions whether a peace deal in Afghanistan will be successful. The veteran of the Afghan conflict calls it "Smoke and mirrors" in an interview with POLITICOPro. "We're going to be right back in a similar situation if we're not careful, if we draw down and pull out, leave a vacuum of power. We know it's not going to be filled by the Taliban. It's going to be filled by ISIS," Rep. Banks, a member of the House Committee on Armed Services, contends . . . Rep. Banks tweets, "The Dow has hit more than 100 record highs since November 2016. Why does it seem the media only covers if there's a drop?"

● U.S. Rep. Greg Pence (R) tells Brock Turner of Indiana Public Media after a closed-door meeting Wednesday with farmers in Shelbyville that "he trusts President Donald Trump to take care of farmers and mitigate their potential losses. 'It's really up to the administration to lead and tell us where they're going to go next,' he says. 'It's our oversight responsibility to kind of monitor that.'" Rep. Pence "would not elaborate on his plans to help farmers. The first-term congressman says he's 'just started' hearing the concerns of farmers and plans to champion those concerns."

IN State Circles . . .

● Our sister Hannah newsletter, INDIANA GAMING INSIGHT, has the big scoop: The State of Indiana and the Pokagon Band of Potawatomi Indians have entered into compact negotiations at the request of the tribe, and the State has 180 days to agree to a compact (and have it ratified by both chambers of the General Assembly under IC 4-29-3-5, enacted in 2015) before the tribe can approach the U.S. Department of Interior to ask it to grant approval for the activities it seeks. The Governor has tasked Indiana Gaming Commission Executive director Sara Gonso Tait to lead the compact negotiations on his behalf. The Governor intends to create a negotiating committee, which will be led by Tait (we don't expect any lawmakers to be part of what should be a small panel, but you can be assured that legislative leaders will be kept closely apprised about the discussions).

□ What you need to know: Four Winds Casino South Bend is a Class II gaming facility, and cannot offer Class III Gaming (including traditional slot machines, live table games, and sports wagering) absent compact approval. We're hearing that the sports wagering component is the reason the Pokagons have decided to approach the State. The Pokagon casino's location on the U.S. 31 bypass in South Bend is only some seven miles from "Touchdown Jesus" and Notre Dame Stadium, and it could be the closest facility to the University of Notre Dame to offer sports wagering. The location would also offer convenient access for Michigan residents who might want to bet on the University of Michigan (or against The Ohio State University!), Michigan State University, or Detroit professional baseball, basketball, hockey, and football franchises.

□ While it would seem that any competitive advantage for the Pokagons (at least for in-state sports wagering) would disappear when mobile sports wagering goes live in the Hoosier State, but our sister newsletter explains how - absent a compact - federal and state law might combine to require "geofencing" of tribal land to affirmatively prohibit and sports wagering over computers or personal electronic devices. That would mean that not only could the Pokagon casino not offer sports wagering, but that patrons (and others on tribal land) could be locked out of even placing a bet from a smartphone while watching the Fighting Irish play football on a television screen at Four Winds. This - and some other aspects of the process - get technical and complicated, and you need to follow our sister newsletter for the unfolding details.

- Count the Indiana Black Legislative Caucus among those not pleased with a photo posted online by Rep. Jim Lucas (R) of a gallows with nooses on a story about an African-American man who pleaded guilty to rape. He is unapologetic and says he posted the stock image simply to indicate his displeasure with the sentence the offender received, and to indicate his support for capital punishment. IBLC's chair, Rep. Robin Shackleford (D), said he was wrong to use the picture, and wants to meet and open a dialogue with him "so that we may, as colleagues, share with him how his actions are hurtful and intimidating to the African-American community." Rep. Shackleford says "The type of behavior exhibited by Rep. Lucas is abhorrent. The history behind an image of a noose is something that we all know too well as a powerful visual symbol connected to the history of lynching of African-Americans in this country." She adds, "We must work together to stop the normalization of racism and hate that has risen in the past couple of years in our country and state. As an elected official and lawmaker, we would have hoped Rep. Lucas would use his platform to work against these detriments to our society."

- Could Hoosier public attitudes about environmental laws, regulations, and enforcement be changing before our eyes? Consider these vignettes from the last two weeks or so:

- Reuters reports that "The Indiana Farmers Union has filed a friend of the court brief to petition the state's top court to reconsider a lawsuit by homeowners against a massive agribusiness operation with 8,000 hogs. The (Hendricks County) operation has been largely protected from any penalties because of controversial Indiana Right to Farm laws. The state's Right to Farm Act was initially approved to protect farmers from nuisance lawsuits from people buying homes near farms and then complaining about the farm operations. But now, the suit argues, that law and a companion statute are being used by a massive agribusiness operation to pollute and disrupt with impunity. 'Noxious gases' from the operation are not 'farm smells; they are factory pollution,' the suit claims." Himsel, et al., v. 4/9 Livestock, LLC, et al., No. 18A-PL-00645, transfer pending.

- The City of Muncie works out an agreement with Waelz Sustainable Products under which the company will abandon its controversial plans for a zinc production plant (largely described locally as a "steel-dust recycling facility") that was to be built by the end of 2020 on an 85-acre former BorgWarner brownfield site. The company called off work - after having invested more than $2 million in the project after long and loud local citizen objections which followed Indiana Department of Environmental Management construction permit paperwork that revealed large potential air emissions of pollutants including mercury and lead. Waelz pulled the plug after making "every effort to engage in meaningful dialogue with community leaders, address the concerns of residents and make this project a reality. Unfortunately, a campaign of misinformation tainted the process and ultimately made it impossible for the city council to continue supporting the project. In agreement with Muncie city and redevelopment officials, we have collectively decided to move on from Muncie. We met or exceeded all environmental regulations, were evaluating enhanced emissions control technologies to implement that would further address stakeholder concerns and believed in the merits of the investment, but the project was never judged fairly nor given the time and unclouded consideration it deserved. While not the outcome we wanted, we wish the City of Muncie and all the hard-working families residing there nothing but the best."

- WBBM-TV CBS 2 in Chicago reports that "Steel manufacturer ArcelorMittal has admitted that it knew about a chemical spill that contaminated the Little Calumet River in Northwest Indiana as far back as Sunday, Aug. 11, but did not notify Indiana state officials until four days later. ArcelorMittal told the Indiana Department of Environmental Management about the blast furnace failure that caused the spill on Thursday, Aug. 15." The spill resulted in what was described as a plume of cyanide and ammonia at toxic levels making its way into Lake Michigan, causing a broad-spectrum kill of at least 3,000 fish and eventually forcing the closure of three Lake Michigan beaches - including two at America's newest national park, the Indiana Dunes National Park (out to 300 feet). nearby Ogden Dunes closed its beach and restricted its Lake Michigan water intake before Indiana American Water ultimately shut it down. But the information was closely guarded for several days, with the mayor of Portage, whose city encompasses a chunk of the lakefront west of the steel plant, complaining that his city was not notified of the spill until three days later, and no local or federal officials purporting to know just how much of what toxic material had been released and for how long (he tells the Washington Post he blames IDEM for the reporting delay). A post on the City of Portage Facebook page observed that "The Mayor is calling for action to be taken. Further, the City of Portage will be taking aggressive action with the EPA to ensure the breakdown of communication, like this, does not occur again." ArcelorMittal also responded to an oil spill at the Port of Indiana Wednesday, August 16. CBS 2 reported that "It remained unclear Tuesday afternoon (August 20) how much ammonia and cyanide ArcelorMittal spilled in the most recent incident."

- The saga received national media attention (query whether it would have done so had the Dunes not recently become part of the National Park system), and left citizens and officials from Chicago through Porter County frustrated over the run of events and secrecy - which was reminiscent of a pair of mysterious 2017 breaches at U.S. Steel that dumped some 300 pounds of hexavalent chromium into Chicago's drinking water supply and left the mayor of Chicago, among others, livid (particularly over its request that IDEM keep the spill details secret) - and resulting in a lawsuit by the city against the company over federal Clean Water Act violations. That spill resulted in a $900,00 settlement with the federal government. The Chicago Tribune reported last week that "ArcelorMittal's plant has violated the Clean Water Act during five of the past 12 quarters, according to a U.S. Environmental Protection Agency website that tracks enforcement and compliance."

- Tim McNicholas of CBS 2 - a former WISH-TV reporter in Indianapolis - told viewers last week that "In May, [ArcelorMittal] was fined more than $5 million for Environmental Protection Agency violations dating back to 2006. The company had a 'high-priority violation' at least two East Chicago facilities, and violations of the Clean Water Act at three Northwest Indiana locations - including two this year. CBS 2 has learned that the Portage Port Authority, which is not part of city government, plans to sue ArcelorMittal."

- Robert Weinstock, a law professor at the University of Chicago's Abrams Environmental Law Clinic - which sued U.S. Steel over the 2017 release - tells TIME magazine last week that "the core issues of industrial compliance and shortcomings in state agency oversight are the same He says there is a need for a shift at the state and federal level towards informing the public, instead of being overly cautious."

□ According to TIME, “Weinstock says the IDEM ‘has a lot of discretion’ and perhaps ‘don’t want to incite panic.’ But, he adds: ‘When you view industry as your client instead of an entity you’re supposed to be regulating, that could lead you to tip the balance towards corporate interests when thinking about whether or not to notify the public.’”

□ As residents of The Region were starting to comprehend what had transpired over the previous week, word spread on Tuesday (August 20) that U.S. Steel was reporting a “discoloration” in the outfall of its Midwest Steel facility along the Burns Waterway – where the Hexavalent Chromium had leaked from two years ago – and had contacted the appropriate authorities and local officials. According to the Times of Northwest Indiana, “The Indiana Department of Environmental Management followed Tuesday with reports that it is investigating an oil release at the U.S. Steel plant, and a ‘sheen’ and two releases at the ArcelorMittal discharge in Burns Harbor. The Times editorialized that the incidents were shaking public confidence in safeguards for local waterways.

□ Finally, Goshen Mayor Jeremy Stutsman (D) told his City Council last week about his plan to create a city Department of Environmental Resilience to handle proactive environmental issues including implementation of the city’s carbon neutrality goal, and its push to achieve 45% tree canopy coverage in the coming decades.

● A September 11 hearing is set in Lake County Superior Court, Civil Division 1 on the City of Hammond’s request for a preliminary injunction in the Lake County Convention & Visitors Bureau board appointment case (which Hammond Mayor Tom McDermott (D) pledges will continue, despite some positive entreaties from Bureau chief Speros Batistatos and some board changes since the suit was filed earlier this month). With a constitutional question certified to the Office of the Attorney General, the State has until October 3 to decide whether to intervene. Ice Miller LLP has been added to the LCCVB defense team.

● The Office of Medicaid Policy and Planning (OMPP) issues a notice of proposed changes to methods and standards governing reimbursement policy for Medicaid-enrolled hospitals. OMPP proposes to revise the Disproportionate Share Hospital (DSH) payment methodology for the current fiscal year in the event that the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS) reduces the Indiana federal DSH allotment for that year. These changes would be effective October 1. OMPP says it is making these changes to implement changes to the DSH payment methodology to allow for an equitable distribution of the allotment among DSH hospitals, if the allotment is reduced. OMPP estimates that there will be no fiscal impact from the State Plan Amendment (SPA) changes, as they are only a revision of the methodology used to distribute the allotment, which is determined by CMS. The payment methodology changes introduced in the SPA will become effective only if CMS reduces the Indiana DSH allotment applicable to FY 2019 payments.

● Moser Consulting, Inc. of Indianapolis is selected to provide Application Services for the Family and Social Services Administration’s Division of Family Resources, a two-year contract with an estimated value of $32,353,638. Moser Consulting was selected over a field that included Bucher + Christian Consulting, Inc. (D/B/A BCforward); Deloitte Consulting LLP; Infosys Public Services, Inc.; IDC Innovations LLC; RCR Technology Corporation; and TEKNTIME LLC.

● Spending on Medicaid-covered prescriptions to treat opioid use disorder and overdose in Indiana (Buprenorphine, Naloxone, and Naltrexone) almost quadrupled from about $7 million in 2015 to more than $26 million in 2018 according to an Urban Institute analysis of Medicaid State Drug Utilization Data from the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services. The number of prescriptions soared from about 40,000 to more than 250,000 over the same period.

● Road construction causing detours at peak season for motor carrier oversize/overweight permitting requests seems to be causing delays for some operators, and the Department of Revenue is spreading the word in the industry that truckers should allow for extra time to allow their permit requests to be reviewed and permits issued with route details – particularly for permits that require complex routes, Indiana Department of Transportation district-level approval, or an Indiana State Police escort. Commercial Carrier Journal reports that a new state permitting system is expected to launch this Winter that should improve service and speed of issuance.

● Indianapolis Mayor Joe Hogsett (D) uses a Moms Demand Action for Gun Sense in America rally at the State House to formally sign up with Mayors Against Illegal Guns, a bipartisan group of more than 1,000 current and former mayors operating under the umbrella of Everytown for Gun Safety.

□ Mayors Hogsett, Karen Freeman-Wilson (D) of Gary, John Hamilton (D) of Bloomington, Pete Buttigieg (D) of South Bend, Tom Henry (D) of Fort Wayne, and Jim Brainard (R) are the only six Hoosier mayors among 262 mayors nationally to sign an August 8 letter under the auspices of the U.S. Conference of Mayors urging Congress to tighten gun laws.

□ The sole Hoosier Republican to sign, Mayor Brainard, tells Current in Carmel, “It makes sense to me that we would want to strongly encourage Congress to pass legislation to close the loopholes that make it possible for those with criminal backgrounds or a violent past to legally purchase weapons. There have been too many senseless killings of innocent people by those who have been able to easily purchase weapons, and it needs to stop.”

● Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) is not among 43 state and territorial attorneys general signing a letter under the auspices of the National Association of Attorneys General (NAAG) to leading U.S. streaming services, encouraging the industry to adopt business practices that protect young viewers from tobacco imagery in video content. Letters were sent to Amazon.com, Apple, AT&T, CBS Corporation, Comcast Corporation, Discovery, The Walt Disney Company, Google, Netflix, Sony, Lionsgate, Viacom, and Walmart. The letter notes that the Office of the U.S. Surgeon General (now a Hoosier, Dr. Jerome Adams) has found that tobacco imagery is linked to the “initiation of smoking among young people.” Recent reports by the Truth Initiative and U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) showed that on-demand content contained more tobacco imagery than traditional content or broadcast shows, and more than half of PG-13 films released between 2002 and 2017 showed tobacco use.

□ Given the recent significant rise in tobacco use by young people, particularly the use of cigarettes, preventing initiation and use of tobacco products is of critical importance to us and the public health community, and we sincerely hope it will be addressed by the streaming industry,” read the letters signed by the bipartisan NAAG coalition that did not include Indiana.

□ Five of the nine members of the executive committee of the Republican Attorneys General Association, including its chair from Texas and Vice Chair Hill, did not sign the letter.

□ The letters are the latest action taken by state attorneys general to curb the use of tobacco and its marketing to youth through popular media. The 1998 Tobacco Master Settlement Agreement, which settled litigation brought against tobacco manufacturers by 46 states and six other U.S. jurisdictions, prohibits those manufacturers from targeting youth through advertising and promotions.

● A Thursday ruling by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit upholds a preliminary injunction granted by Senior Judge Sarah Evans Barker of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana – but only insofar as it allows Texas-based Whole Woman’s Health Alliance to open a South Bend abortion clinic “as though it were provisionally licensed,” after it was denied the license it sought. Whole Woman’s Health Alliance, et al., v. Hill, et al., No. 19-2051. The panel led by Chief Judge Diane Wood and including judges Joel Flaum and Frank Easterbrook, finds that “For purposes of this preliminary injunction, we see no clear error in the district court’s conclusion that Indiana has not given the Alliance’s license application a fair shake,” but believes that the provisional licensing route was “the best way to accommodate the state’s legitimate interest in licensing during the pendency of this litigation.”

□ The panel has some harsh words for the Indiana licensing process, explaining that case law required them “to scrutinize the facts rigorously, in order to determine what the Department was doing with the Alliance’s license application over the past two years. The record before us paints a troubling picture. A seemingly endless cycle of demands for information, responses, and new demands does not suggest a bona fide process. At some point, enough is enough. As courts throughout the nation recognize every day in resolving litigation discovery disputes, there comes a point where record requests become so duplicative, or marginally (if at all) relevant, that they are nothing but harassment.” An example: One requirement was “the equivalent of asking if you have ever had a speeding ticket, and instead of accepting a sworn affidavit, asking you to go to all 50 states, the District of Columbia, and the 14 U.S. territories (or why not all 195 countries in the world?) and obtain certifications from each confirming that you have not. There is no need for such scorched-earth tactics. Indiana is entitled to protect patient safety and fetal life through its licensing scheme, but if it is doing little more than throwing up one hurdle after another in an effort to keep the Alliance’s doors closed, it has gone beyond constitutional boundaries.”

□ Perhaps the most important passage of the 27-page ruling, however, is this case proceeds to the Supreme Court of the United States, may be one observing that Judge Barker’s “broad condemnation of Indiana’s licensing scheme runs contrary to Supreme Court precedent.”

● Earlier this month we told you that assessed value in Hamilton County had grown by $1.4 billion (more than 6.3%), but while the rich get richer, others see significant declines, such as Pike County, where officials just learned that assessed value there took a 20% plunge, down by about $88 million in a county in which the total assessed value before that drop wasn’t even half as much as the increase in AV in Hamilton County.

□ The principal reason for the “life-changing” plunge: IPL’s decision to redistributing its assets on a statewide basis; IPL’s Petersburg Generating Station is the largest property tax payor in the county.

● A hearing on outstanding Office of the Inspector General discovery issues in the disciplinary case pending against Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) was presided over by Hearing Officer Myra Selby on Thursday afternoon. She issued an order Monday that closed the hearing to the public.

□ Attorneys for Hill also asked Selby to refuse the motion by Andrew U.D. Straw, the original complainant, seeking to allow him to introduce affidavits and exhibits into the record, arguing that “It is apparent from Straw’s tendered affidavit that his agenda is to exploit this case, which has nothing to do with him, as a platform for re-litigating his Indiana lawyer discipline case and to otherwise pursue a personal agenda having nothing to do with the merits of this case.” On Wednesday, Selby issued an order denying the Straw motion to intervene, and ordering it “stricken on the grounds that its allegations are wholly immaterial to this case”

● Our sister Hannah newsletter, INDIANA GAMING INSIGHT, had followed for several years a property tax assessment case involving one of the casinos, Switzerland Cty. Assessor v. Belterra Resort Indiana, LLC, 101 N.E.3d 895 (Ind. Tax Ct.), review denied, and thought the judicial aspect of the dispute was over in July 2018, when the Indiana Tax Court issued its order affirming in part and reversing in part an Indiana Board of Tax Review final determination in the matter (or in October, when the Indiana Supreme Court denied transfer). However, it turned out that neither IBTR nor the local assessor had taken the steps ordered by Tax Court Judge Martha Blood Wentworth, and more than one year later, attorneys for the casino asked her to enforce her ruling. The local assessor opposed the request, claiming the motion was based on material outside the record, is not ripe, and the Tax Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction to hear it.

□ Judge Wentworth was unimpressed by the government’s arguments, and in case you’re unclear about how Judge Wentworth felt about the actions by the state and local governmental units here, she explains, “[T]he Indiana Board must ensure that the Court’s instructions contained in its May 24, 2018, opinion have been specifically carried out. This oversight process guarantees that the Indiana Board – Indiana’s assessment and property tax expert – has determined the accuracy of a corrected assessment, reducing the possibility that additional judicial resources must be expended. Moreover, as a practical matter, the Indiana Board’s oversight insulates an assessor – typically a party in property assessment cases – from the appearance that she advanced her own self-interest.”

□ Judge Wentworth then included this scathing footnote directed at the Switzerland County assessor: “Here, the Assessor’s post-decision actions and claims appear to be intended to reduce the adverse effects of the Court’s decision. First, the Assessor conjured an ambiguity in the Court’s instructions for calculating the corrected assessments where there was none. Then, when corrected values were issued presumably based on that conjured ambiguity, the Assessor invented procedural infirmities to prevent the Court from enforcing its decision. Taxpayers deserve more than taxation by trickery, and the Court will not countenance such actions,” the clearly miffed judge writes.

● As more counties experience cyberattacks, more seek to prevent them or mitigate the damage. Just last week, the Pulaski County Board of Commissioners invested ≈ $4,100 in an annual EMC Insurance policy protecting it with $1 million of cyber coverage and $500,000 of data protection coverage . . . while Marshall County looks to harden its IT system with a potential $42,000 investment in upgrading email protection.

● Some key states are not sharing driver information with the Indiana - Kentucky RiverLink consortium that the contractor needs “to get billing details for hundreds of thousands of drivers from across North America last year, resulting in free rides on the Ohio River toll bridges and no chance to collect any of the money owed,” reports Marcus Green of WDRB-TV in Louisville – the only reporter who has systematically been following the twin bridges project since its inception. Illinois and Iowa have proven particularly problematic, he reports. “Collecting from out-of-state drivers has been among the challenges of RiverLink, the privately operated toll system overseen by Kentucky and Indiana state governments. Hoosiers and Kentuckians can’t re-register their cars if they have unpaid tolls, but there are no penalties for other drivers. Instead, officials must count on people to pay the tolls they owe. Of course, they have to be located first.”

□ Green reports that “Kentucky and Indiana hired HNTB in late 2017 as its top adviser on RiverLink, agreeing to pay $2.2 million for the first six months of work. Within that time, the states required HNTB to complete a ‘risk assessment report’ of the toll system. The Kentucky Transportation Cabinet initially declined to release the report, which was finished in April, under the state’s open records law,” but finally released it after WDRB appealed to the Kentucky attorney general’s office. The HNTB analysis reviewed RiverLink operator’s “success getting out-of-state vehicle owner information for just one month, January 2018. The 52 percent response rate was deemed a ‘medium risk to revenue, cost and/or public perception.’ The report doesn’t estimate how much revenue is being lost when drivers aren’t identified. If each attempt to look up a license plate’s owner represents one unique transaction, it’s likely RiverLink missed out on $2.8 million last year Overall, in 2018, about 89 percent of Kentucky and Indiana drivers who owed RiverLink bills were identified. The out-of-state rate was 68.5 percent. Out-of-state drivers were located at a 67 percent rate during the first four months of 2019”

● Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) joins the attorneys general of North Carolina and New Hampshire Attorney in leading a bipartisan and public/private coalition of 51 attorneys general and 12 telecommunications companies that have agreed to adopt eight prevention and enforcement principles to help protect phone users from illegal robocalls and make it easier for state authorities to investigate and prosecute violators.

□ Phone companies will work to prevent illegal robocalls by:

- Implementing call-blocking technology at the network level at no cost to customers.
- Making available to customers free, easy-to-use call blocking and labeling tools.
- Implementing SHAKEN/STIR caller ID authentication technology to differentiate between real and spoofed calls..
- Monitoring their networks for robocall traffic.

□ Telcos will assist AG anti-robocall enforcement by:

- Knowing who their customers are so bad actors can be identified and investigated.

● Investigating and taking action against suspicious callers, including notifying law enforcement and state attorneys general.

● Working with law enforcement, including state AGs, to trace the origins of illegal robocalls.

● Requiring telcos with which they contract to cooperate in traceback identification.

IN the Economy

● The July unemployment rate in Indiana dropped for a second month in a row by one-tenth of a percentage point, now sitting at 3.4% - the lowest monthly unemployment rate in Indiana since April 2018. July saw a marginally lower unemployment rate than the 3.5% unemployment rate one year earlier (down by 0.1 percentage point). We need only to look back to February 2018 to see the lowest rate we’ve enjoyed (3.3%) since the peak of the national financial crisis in July 2009 when the state sat at 10.6% unemployment. Indiana is tied for 22nd among all the 50 states and Washington, D.C. for the lowest unemployment rate, Indiana is down two places from our best ranking of 2019 when we were 20th for lowest unemployment in January.

□ Indiana’s unemployment rate continues to hold below the national unemployment rate, which did not see any change from June to July, remaining at 3.7 percent. The current national unemployment rate is only two-tenths of a percentage point lower than the 3.9% national unemployment rate seen in July 2018. With the exception of two months when it was equal (in October 2014 at 5.7% and April 2019 at 3.6%), Indiana has held below the U.S. rate for more than 5½ years (67 out of 69 prior months). Our unemployment rate is now one-half of a percentage point lower than in January 2017, when the new administration assumed office both nationally and at the state-level, although this decrease is at a lower rate by half than that seen nationally (the national unemployment rate has decreased by 1.1 percentage points since January 2017), and well below the rate of decrease our neighbors have seen over the same period (though Indiana’s unemployment rate in January 2017 was far lower than our surrounding states posted at the time).

Rate of Change in Unemployment Rate

	07/19	01/18	01/17	vs. 01/18	vs. 01/17
Indiana	3.4%	3.3%	3.9%	0.1%	(- 0.5%)

Ohio	4.0%	4.5%	5.2%	(- 0.5%)	(- 1.2%)
National	3.7%	4.1%	4.8%	(- 0.4%)	(- 1.1%)

□ Indiana maintained the lowest monthly unemployment rate compared to our immediate neighbors once again (for the 35th consecutive month), with only Illinois and Kentucky joining Indiana in enjoying a slight decrease from June to July, and only Michigan experiencing a marginal increase. On a year-over-year basis, Indiana, Kentucky, and Ohio recorded a decrease in unemployment rates as did the national average.

Monthly Unemployment Rates, Indiana vs. Neighbors

□ Indiana's total labor force – the number of people who have a job or are actively looking for one – decreased by 6,608 from June to July, constituting a third consecutive monthly decrease (April to May declined by 10,677, May to June fell by 10,126). The Indiana Department of Workforce Development attributes the drop in the labor force to a reduction of 1,274 unemployed and 5,334 employed residents in the state.

□ Indiana's total labor force now stands at 3.38 million, down from the seasonally adjusted record high of 3.42 million recently set in April – and now the third consecutive month of slippage we have seen after an impressive 27-month labor force expansion streak. An estimated 122,223 Hoosiers are unemployed and seeking employment, up by 9,087 from 113,136 in June (and an increase of only 568 from a benchmarked 121,655 one year earlier in July 2018).

□ The state's 64.6% labor force participation rate decreased by only two-tenths of a percentage point from June's 64.8%, and once again remains above the national rate of 63.0% (up by a 0.2 percentage point margin from June). Indiana's labor force participation rate has now outperformed the national average for 62 consecutive months (more than five full years).

□ Private sector employment decreased from June to July by 1,300 after having grown by more than five times that amount from May to June (an increased of 6,800). Before we endured the two successive months of decrease in April and May, private sector employment had grown over prior-month levels for nine consecutive months. The Department of Workforce Development attributes the July decrease to losses in the Leisure and Hospitality (- 1,500) and the Trade, Transportation and Utilities (- 700) sectors. On a year-over-year basis, however, we see growth on the order of 27,300 private sector jobs, with the increase attributed in part to gains in the Private Educational and Health Services (1,500) and the Financial Activities (300) sectors. Total private employment of 2,744,900 stands 12,800 jobs above the peak of 2,732,100 seen in December 2018.

□ Vermillion County again holds the unfortunate lead for the highest unemployment rate among Hoosier counties at 5.2%, up by one-half of a percentage point from its 4.7% June rate. Fayette County (which had tied with Vermillion County in June at 4.7%) takes second place for highest unemployment in July at 5.1%, only one-tenth of a percentage point lower than Vermillion County, with the two each hugging opposite latitudinal state borders. Lake County continues to post the third highest unemployment rate in the state, and joins Vermillion and Fayette as the only three counties at or above 5.0% unemployment in July. Fifteen counties register an unemployment rate at or above 4.0% for July, up by six counties from June – although as recently as January, more than 50 counties had reached 4.0% or higher. Only 16 counties enjoyed an unemployment rate below 3.0%, down by 13 counties from June. In May there were 55 counties that enjoyed unemployment below a rate of 3.0 percent. Bartholomew, Dubois, and Gibson counties share the honor of lowest county unemployment rate for a second consecutive month, with all three up by 0.1 percentage point from June numbers to sit at 2.6% for July.

● IHS Markit, the State Budget Committee's contract economic consulting firm, reports that the manufacturing sector in August contracts for the first time since September 2009 – the month in which most realized we were formally in a significant recession. Unemployment across manufacturing-heavy Northwest Indiana in July also rose for a second straight month.

□ We told you after IHS Markit's April forecast presentation that "Lawmakers asked lots of questions about a potential recession and assorted markers." When IHS economist Tom Jackson "was asked what constituted 'red flags' for a coming recession, he indicated a decline in manufacturing (hard goods and vehicle manufacturing in general) as well as 'rising gas prices,' " but largely "shook off specific questions about the decline in RV jobs and production (labeling it a 'leveling off ... that we've been expecting,' adding, 'We don't really see that as a red flag at this point'), current gas prices hikes, and a decline in Hoosier housing starts, seeming to leave some more dubious about the prospects of avoiding a recession than he might be."

● The Wall Street Journal finally catches on to what we've been telling you about for several months: Lagging RV production numbers are an ominous national sign. The Journal reported Monday that Elkhart "is flashing a warning sign that a recession could be just ahead. Capital of the country's recreational-vehicle industry, the northern Indiana city and the surrounding area are watched by economists and investors for early indications of waning consumer demand for luxury items, often the first sign of economic anxiety. Shipments of recreational vehicles to dealers have fallen about 20% so far this year, after a 4.1% drop last year, according to data from the RV Industry Association. Multiyear drops in shipments have preceded the last three recessions. 'The RV industry is better at calling recessions than economists are,' said Michael Hicks, an economist at Ball State University Hicks says softening consumer demand for RVs coupled with rising vehicle prices due to tariffs suggests the economy is either in a recession or soon headed for one."

□ The Journal also notes that tariffs have forced suppliers of parts to RV manufacturers into "raising their prices to account for the hit they are taking from imported goods such as aluminum and steel The industry estimates that as many as 523 items could be hit by the tariffs, everything from the toilet-seat covers that go into RV bathrooms and cow hides for leather furniture to the aluminum or steel used throughout the vehicles." Those price increases – some (such as steel) in the double-digit percentages – must also be accounted for in the prices RV manufacturers themselves charge, a difficult choice as dealers "sense cooling desire for a luxury item like an RV" that also quickly depreciates in value.

□ Data not available to WSJ for its article: Elkhart County's July unemployment rate rose by 20%, up 1.6 percentage points to 3.6%, from 3.0% in June . . . even as the state rate decreased by one-tenth of a percentage point. The July 2019 rate is up one full percentage point from 2.6% in July 2018. And new Bureau of Labor Statistics numbers show Elkhart County suffered the largest decline in average weekly wages from Q1 2018 to Q1 2019 among the 355 largest counties (- 7.6%)

● In his latest Washington Post column, Purdue University President Mitch Daniels, who as governor of Indiana in 2011 labeled the growing national debt as the "new red menace, this time consisting of ink," and said it was the responsibility of conservatives to unite the country in a battle against that menace, returns to the topic and seems to have given up hope that Republicans can tackle the deepening problem. "There is no need to restate all the ruin that unpayable debt does to nations that indulge in it. Debt such as what we are now piling up will end badly. With entitlements and interest payments devouring available funds, the result will be some combination of economic catastrophe, the collapse of basic services or a disastrous weakening of national defense. For anyone still in denial, the Flat Earth Society is accepting applications," the former Office of Management and Budget observes.

□ However, Daniels continues, “No Republican can even put a dent in this problem. The party’s Scrooge stereotype, however unfair in many cases, is too burned into the public and media consciousness to permit the necessary ideas to be advanced from that quarter,” and “under present management, the GOP shows zero interest in even raising the issue of the national debt. Hope must come from the other direction. Just as Nixon, one of his era’s most vigorous anti-communists, used the credibility of his personal record and party label to undertake his startling initiatives, a Democrat – and only a Democrat, protected by the party’s tribune-of-the-poor reputation – can lead the country fiscally where it desperately needs to go. Arguments fully consistent with the Democratic image and catechism are already available, and if they are politically premature today, they will become more apparent and viable with each passing year of procrastination. Modernizing the public safety net is not about trashing it, as our puerile public debate now asserts, but about saving it,” Daniels explains. “Absent significant change, Social Security, Medicare and Medicaid will go bust, and no one will be harmed more than those most dependent on the programs. Continued entitlement drift is choking the discretionary government most dear to Democrats – a squeeze that will grow inexorably tighter. Saving public housing, mass transit, federal education funding and (fill in your favorite social program here) will become ever-stronger rationales for what must be done. Attempting to enact even the tiniest portion of the latest Democratic policy fads will require creating some fiscal space on the spending side.”

□ Purdue President Daniels also reminds readers that “For the moment at least, the Democratic brand is strong among younger voters. These of course are the Americans about to be plundered and gouged by the wanton borrowing in which we, their elders, are engaging: borrowing not for appropriate investment in their future but for our current consumption. Today’s young may not know much about the nation’s history or civic institutions, but they will not remain forever oblivious to this giant, unconscionable threat to their economic futures. Here, too, a Democrat has a far greater entree to share the stark facts and make the case for change.”

● Municipal bond sales by Midwest issuers – $31.8 billion – led all other regions in the first half of 2019, a 34.2% local increase in year-over-year volume, even as no other region even climbed into the double-digits in percentage volume growth, according to Bond Buyer – and Indiana led the way. “Ten of the 11 Midwestern states recorded a hike for the first half with only Minnesota seeing a decline that landed at 12.3%. Indiana stood out as it saw a more than 200% gain, followed by Michigan at 72% and Missouri at 59%.”

● The adjustable Indiana gas tax for September is set at 14.9¢, meaning that for a third consecutive month, the tax has declined from the prior month – although the rate of decline, 0.2¢, is lower than the 0.5¢ over-the-month decline from June to July and then from July to August. The rate is also down by a significant 1.2¢ over the prior year, a greater disparity than in August. The three straight months of decline follow four consecutive months of over-the month increases.

□ The new September rate is still higher than any month during the first one-third of 2019. While we noted earlier in the year that the tax in each of the first four months of 2019 was lower than it was during any month in 2018, that took a turn in each of the next three months, but turned again with respect to August and September tax rates.

March	11.4¢	13.8¢	11.7¢	8.0¢	11.8¢

● According to Public News service, “International trade fights are having an unexpected upside for Indiana programs that focus on feeding the hungry. To make up in part for the lost overseas markets, the U.S. Department of Agriculture is buying much more food from producers, and that food ends up at food banks and pantries.”

● The Governor and Indiana Secretary of Commerce Jim Schellinger will lead business delegations to Japan and the Republic of Korea September 4 - 10 (including the mayors of Seymour and Westfield), and then to China and India September 22 - October 5 (joining the Indiana Pacers in Mumbai for the National Basketball Association’s first-ever game in India in addition to work on trade).

● Biofuels producer POET will idle production at its bio-processing facility in Cloverdale, blaming the latest round of small refinery exemptions (SREs) granted to oil companies by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) under the Renewable Fuel Standard (RFS). Look for the Putnam County plant to be ramped down over a period of several weeks, after which the facility will cease the processing of more than 30 million bushels of corn annually, with what POET says will be “hundreds of local jobs” affected, and 50 workers at the refinery itself will be laid off by mid-October. POET is cutting production at half of its biorefineries, with the largest reductions in Iowa and Ohio. Jobs will be consolidated across its 28 biorefineries, with corn processing dropping by an additional 100 million bushels across the Iowa, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Minnesota, South Dakota, and Missouri.

□ “The Renewable Fuel Standard was designed to increase the use of clean, renewable biofuels and generate grain demand for farmers,” said Jeff Broin, POET’s chairman and CEO. “Our industry invested billions of dollars based on the belief that oil could not restrict access to the market and EPA would stand behind the intent of the Renewable Fuel Standard. Unfortunately, the oil industry is manipulating the EPA and is now using the RFS to destroy demand for biofuels, reducing the price of commodities and gutting rural economies in the process.” EPA’s “mismanagement” of SREs has placed an artificial cap on domestic demand for ethanol, according to POET, cutting demand for biofuels by 4 billion gallons and reducing demand for corn by 1.4 billion bushels.

□ “POET made strategic decisions to support President Trump’s goal of boosting the farm economy,” laments Jeff Lautt, president and COO of POET. “However, these goals are contradicted by bailouts to oil companies. The result is pain for Midwest farmers and the reduction of hundreds of jobs and hundreds of millions of dollars of economic activity across Indiana.”

● Fruit and vegetable merchant wholesaler Caito Foods, LLC of Indianapolis will close its Caito Fresh Kitchen Operations by mid-October, eliminating almost 55 jobs . . . add Warsaw's Kmart to the victimization list arising from the Sears Holding bankruptcy. The Kosciusko County Kmart is one of five such discount stores added to the list of the latest communities which will no longer have Blue Light Special savings by Thanksgiving . . . Nestlé USA, Inc. is downsizing its Fort Wayne Edy's Grand ice cream frozen food inventory transfer and distribution center operations as it transitions from a direct store delivery network to a warehouse model, ending about 40 jobs by year's end (not 70 as it initially told the state) . . . in Richmond, food wholesaler McFarling Foods is planning to close its operations later this month, ending jobs for almost 15 workers . . .

● TriCore Logic, a Fort Wayne firm specializing in supporting small businesses by providing IT helpdesk and troubleshooting services, backup and disaster recovery, and cyber security, plans to invest more than $200,000 to expand its footprint in downtown Fort Wayne, adding up to eight new IT managed services specialists in the next four years. The Indiana Economic Development Corporation offers TriCore Logic up to $60,000 in performance-based tax credits. Northeast Indiana Works will provide the company with additional hiring and training assistance . . . Germany-based Messer Group Global, a producer of atmospheric gases for health care providers, food processors, and glass and metal fabricators, plans to invest $38.3 million in a new production facility on the south side of Indianapolis, and is seeking local incentives . . .

IN Transition

● The Governor names Matthew A. Brown to serve as director of the new Office of Administrative Law Proceedings, an entity created by HEA 1223-2019. The Office of Administrative Law Proceedings within the State Personnel Department (SPD) will house and assign a pool of administrative law judges. Brown has served in a variety of roles at SPD from 2006 to 2012 and, after a stint in private law practice, he returned to the department in 2014. Most recently, Brown has served as SPD's deputy director of operations.

● You can find more detail and deeper color on this in our sister Hannah newsletter, INDIANA LEGISLATIVE INSIGHT, but Deena Pitman will take over as executive director of the Indiana Horse Racing Commission next month, succeeding Mike Smith, the former lawmaker who has been executive director since 2016 but announced many months ago that he wished to retire. Unlike most state agencies - and this has been a sore point with other governors - the Commission itself appoints the executive director, not the governor. The Commission received 17 applications for the position and interviewed four candidates, ultimately choosing Pitman who has been with the Commission almost since the beginning of the pari-mutuel horse racing industry in Indiana, joining IHRC in 1993, one year before the first racetrack opened. After spending about five years as the first director of licensing, she has served as assistant executive director since 1999.

□ With Pitman ascending to executive director, the racing commissioners hired Thomas Linkmeyer as the new assistant executive director. Linkmeyer is new to the Commission but has been around horse racing all his life and holds an IHRC license as a driver and trainer. The former Carmel police officer currently works in public education. He has been a teacher, athletic director, coach, assistant principal, and principal. You may also recall that Linkmeyer was a Republican primary candidate in HD 39 in both 2016 and 2018, seeking to oust Rep. Jerry Torr (R).

● Two former congressional staffers join the Office of the Lieutenant Governor.

□ Sara Broadwater comes aboard as OLG communications director. The Hoosier native worked in Washington, D.C., as the communications director for U.S. Rep. Roger Williams (R-TX) and served as the deputy press secretary for U.S. Secretary of Education Betsy DeVos. She started her career working for Procter & Gamble after graduating from the Indiana University Kelley School of Business.

□ Thomas Barclay becomes director of intergovernmental affairs, where the Hoosier native will act as the liaison between the LG and state and local legislators and government. He leaves his post as CD 04 and CD 08 district director for U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R), handling community affairs and federal relations for constituents. Prior to that role, the Penn State University alum also served as field director for the Young U.S. Senate campaign.

● Liz Hill, press secretary for the U.S. Department of Education, and a former press secretary for then-U.S. Rep. Luke Messer (R), is promoted to serve full time as communications director for U.S. DOE.

● Former Sen. Mike Delph (R) earns a promotion to the rank of lieutenant colonel in the U.S. Army Reserve.

● Janet McCabe becomes director of the Prepared for Environmental Change Grand Challenge initiative for Indiana University. McCabe, currently the assistant director of policy and implementation at the Environmental Resilience Institute and a professor of practice at the IU McKinney School of Law, is a former U.S. Environmental Protection Agency official (acting assistant administrator for the Office of Air and Radiation), and assistant commissioner for the Indiana Department of Environmental Management.

IN Court

● The Judicial Nominating Commission voted to reappoint Loretta Rush as Indiana's Chief Justice. The unanimous vote came after all current justices appeared before the panel to discuss the attributes important in a CJ and told the Commission members that Chief Justice Rush should be retained in the post for a new five-year term.

RUCKELSHAUS PASSES ON 5TH CD RUN; TO SEEK REELECTION: The open 5th CD race continued to take shape on Thursday with State Sen. John Ruckelshaus announcing he will seek reelection rather than mount a congressional race, while Indiana Treasurer Kelly Mitchell is in, filing FEC paperwork earlier this week (Howey Politics Indiana). It brings the Republican field looking to replace the retiring U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks to three. Mitchell is joining Noblesville pastor Micah Beckwith and former legislator Steve Braun in the race. Ruckelshaus said in a statement, "I've had occasion this summer to reflect on my relationship to Indiana and how I can best serve the community I love so dearly. I was humbled to receive encouragement to run for Congress from across the district, and indeed, across the aisle, as many Democrats and Republicans alike thought I should give it a shot. It was gratifying to hear that the brand of politics that is my DNA – committing to bipartisan solutions and giving everyone a seat at the table – is endorsed by so many of my constituents." But Ruckelshaus said, "It soon became clear that a run for Congress would be more about politics rather than focusing on the substance of the issues that I believe we need to address. Therefore, we have ultimately decided that the best way to continue serving my community is to stay in the State Senate." Mitchell and Braun did not release statements after filing FEC documents. The field is likely to grow, as former state senator Mike Delph told HPI on Monday that he continues to travel the district, but a decision won't come until after the November municipal elections. Delph said he did not want to detract from mayoral campaigns. Hamilton County businessman Terry Henderson is also look at a bid.

BUCHSHON CITES ELECTION YEAR SECURITY RISKS: U.S. Rep. Larry Bucshon told the TriState Homepage that he holds town halls in non-election years on the advice of Capitol Police due to security risks. "I do these town halls in off election years because in election years it turns into more of a security risk and the Capitol police have said because of the intensity in the last couple of years, during an election year – last year – they recommended we don't do these large events," Bucshon said. "I like to do these, I thought we had a good discussion. I expect people to agree and disagree and I heard a lot from my constituents, which is the intent for me to hear what they have to say." Bucshon is the only delegation member who has conducted a series of town halls during the August recess this year. Several members have participated in agriculture roundtables and U.S. Rep. Greg Pence has also had several public appearances in the 6th CD though they have not been billed as town halls.

LANDSKE GUILTY OF MURDER: A Lake Criminal Court jury convicted William "Bill" Landske of murder Wednesday for shooting his wife's longtime friend and family tax attorney over tax filing delays (Reese, NWI Times). T. Edward Page, 64, of Hobart, died Aug. 15, 2018, from a close-range gunshot wound to his chest and three gunshots to his back, which pierced a number of his organs as he collapsed from the first shot. Page was a prominent local attorney who had submitted his retirement as a senior judge days before his death. Because of his many friends among local court officials, the Indiana Supreme Court appointed Special Judge Rex Kepner to hear the murder case against Landske. The families of both Page and Landske, 84, along with a number of local court officials, filled the courtroom Wednesday morning to listen to closing statements by Lake County Supervisory Deputy Prosecutor Michael Toth and defense attorney Scott King. Toth said two of Landske's daughters; Page's husband and partner of 37 years, Kevin Swanson; and Landske himself, in a videotaped statement to police, all said Landske shot Page. Hours after the homicide, Toth said, Landske "quipped" to police, "You know, when you shoot someone, you don't shoot them to walk away living."

INDIANA STUDIES CLIMATE CHANGE IMPACT ON SEWERS: Anticipated increases in annual rainfall should signal a need for Indiana to consider whether existing storm water systems can handle flooding, experts told a legislature-appointed panel (Miley, CNHI). "We are seeing an increasing number of days per year that are having these extreme rainfall events," Indiana State Climatologist Beth Hall said. "These maximize the capacity of the storm water systems, the drainage systems in the area." Indiana's annual rainfall has increased by about 5 inches during the past century; southern Indiana has seen the largest jump, about 7 inches. In late August, Hall and other experts discussed climate and water trends with the 14-member Storm Water Management Task Force, which will issue by December recommendations for storm water needs in Indiana. The panel is to discuss rural issues Sept. 18 and Oct. 1. In 2014, the Indiana Chamber of Commerce issued a report on Indiana's water utilities noting it would take $100 million annually to improve Indiana's storm water infrastructure. That figure doesn't take into account an initial investment of more than $2 billion to improve drinking water infrastructure.

QUINNIPIAC HAS BIDEN LEADING TRUMP 54-38%; TRUMP CEILING AT 40%: If the 2020 presidential election were held today, 54 percent of registered voters say that they would vote for former Vice President Joe Biden, while only 38 percent would vote for President Trump according to a Quinnipiac Poll released Wednesday. Matchups against other top Democrats show: Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders topping Trump 53 - 39 percent; Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren ahead of Trump 52 - 40 percent; California Sen. Kamala Harris beating Trump 51 - 40 percent; South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg leading with 49 percent to Trump's 40 percent. Looking at all of the matchups, President Trump is stuck between 38 and 40 percent of the vote. These low numbers may partly be explained by a lack of support among white women, a key voting bloc that voted for Trump in the 2016 election. Today, white women go for the Democratic candidate by double digits in every scenario. Though it is a long 14 months until Election Day, Trump's vulnerability among this important voting group does not bode well for him. "In hypothetical matchups between President Trump and the top five Democratic presidential candidates, one key number is 40," said Quinnipiac University Polling Analyst Mary Snow. "It's the ceiling of support for Trump, no matter the candidate. It hovers close to his job approval rating, which has stayed in a tight range since being elected." Voters say 56 - 38 percent that they disapprove of the way Donald Trump is handling his job as president, compared to the 54 - 40 percent disapproval he received a month ago.

TRUMP REPORTEDLY WILLING TO BREAK LAW TO BUILD WALL: President Trump's signature campaign promise to build a wall along the southwestern border is far behind schedule. So he has told his aides to get the job done by whatever means necessary, including by seizing land on the Mexican frontier (New York Times). The president has repeatedly suggested during meetings on immigration policy that aides "take the land" and "get it done," according to a person who has heard him say it. The Washington Post first reported that Mr. Trump had brought up the land seizures, and had floated the idea of offering pardons to aides willing to break the law, a suggestion he has made before when exploring ways to fulfill his campaign promises. On Wednesday, a senior administration official did not deny that Mr. Trump had made the comments but said that the president had been joking — "he winks when he does it," that person said — and added that Mr. Trump had never seriously suggested the idea of pardons.

TRUMP URGES SUPPORTERS TO SPURN FOX NEWS: President Trump on Wednesday lashed out at Fox News, accusing the conservative network of "heavily promoting the Democrats" and urging his nearly 64 million Twitter followers to "start looking for a new News Outlet" (Washington Post). "The New @FoxNews is letting millions of GREAT people down!" Trump wrote in a series of tweets. "We have to start looking for a new News Outlet. Fox isn't working for us anymore!" His tweets followed an interview of Xochitl Hinojosa, the communications director for the Democratic National Committee, in which she discussed next month's Democratic presidential debate, among other things. In his tweets, Trump said Hinojosa had been "spewing out whatever she wanted with zero pushback" from anchor Sandra Smith.

TRUMP TO DENY AUTOMATIC CITIZENSHIP FOR MILITARY KIDS BORN OVERSEAS: The Trump administration said Wednesday that children born to U.S. military members and government employees working overseas will no longer automatically be considered United States citizens (The Hill). U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) issued a policy on Wednesday rescinding previous guidance stating that kids born to U.S. service members and other government officials abroad are considered "residing in the United States" and automatically given citizenship under a section of the Immigration and Nationality Act (INA). The new policy guidance states that USCIS "no longer considers children of U.S. government employees and U.S. armed forces members residing outside the United States as 'residing in the United States' for purposes of acquiring citizenship under INA 320."

MATTIS SAYS 'I SERVED AS LONG AS I COULD': Former defense secretary Jim Mattis, who resigned last year after clashing with President Trump, says in a book excerpt that "I did as well as I could for as long as I could" and warns of the dangers of a leader who is not committed to working with allies (Washington Post). Mattis, who announced his resignation in December after Trump shocked U.S. allies and overruled his advisers by announcing a troop withdrawal from Syria, writes in his book that he decided to depart "when my concrete solutions and strategic advice, especially keeping faith with our allies, no longer resonated." "Nations with allies thrive, and those without them wither," Mattis writes. "Alone, America cannot protect our people and our economy. At this time, we can see storm clouds gathering. A polemicist's role is not sufficient for a leader. A leader must display strategic acumen that incorporates respect for those nations that have stood with us when trouble loomed." Mattis told The Atlantic's Jeffrey Goldberg: "The duty of silence. If you leave an administration, you owe some silence. When you leave an administration over clear policy differences, you need to give the people who are still there as much opportunity as possible to defend the country. They still have the responsibility of protecting this great big experiment of ours. I know the malevolence some people feel for this country, and we have to give the people who are protecting us some time to carry out their duties without me adding my criticism to the cacophony that is right now so poisonous. There is a period in which I owe my silence. It's not eternal. It's not going to be forever."

CAPT. LUCK RETIRES FROM TWITTER: Say goodbye to Capt. Andrew Luck and his squirrel oil. The viral twitter account embracing the Colts former quarterback's image as a soldier is shutting down (WTHR-TV). "Dearest friends — A heartfelt thank you. And a fond farewell." Just days after the real Andrew Luck announced he is retiring from the NFL, so did the Captain. In a post to his 540,000+ followers, Capt. Andrew Luck said: "A heartfelt thank you. And a fond farewell." We'll miss you Captain. It's time for you to go home to "Dearest Mother."

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: Rep. Bucshon's revelation that Capitol Police have urged members of Congress not to hold town halls during election years is another disturbing benchmark in how violent our nation has become. If the people's representatives fear appearing before the people in a civic context in a public setting, then we've crossed another unfortunate threshold. This, coming in the context of an emerging culture of mass shootings (and another one was thwarted at a North Carolina university this week), exposes the culture of violence that is overtaking the public space in a nation awash in weaponry. - *Brian A. PENCE SAYS 2020 ABOUT 'SOCIALISM': Vice President Pence is making his pitch for President Trump's reelection to American Legion members, in a speech in his home state (WIBC). Addressing the Legion's national convention in Indianapolis, Pence lamented "some in Washington" advocating socialism, and echoed other Republicans in framing next year's campaign as a choice between socialism, which he says has "impoverished millions," and freedom.

BUTTIGIEG TARGETS SEC. DeVOS IN ADS: Democratic primary contender Pete Buttigieg called out U.S. Education Sec. Betsy DeVos in national campaign ads for her policies as secretary of education. Buttigieg's campaign began running a series of Facebook ads this week to coincide with the first day of school (Howey Politics Indiana). Buttigieg's campaign criticized DeVos for saddling college students with debt. The ads call out DeVos for rolling back Obama-era policies protecting students from predatory loan practices and for-profit colleges. Federal judges have blocked DeVos' delays of Obama administration regulations, including those governing loan forgiveness for defrauded borrowers, and other legal challenges are ongoing. "The ads come at a make-or-break moment for our public education system," Buttigieg's campaign said in a statement. "The same old debates have left the country with underfunded schools, underpaid teachers, and growing inequality. Public education is key to meeting the challenges of today and the future, which is why Pete is offering a new approach and bold ideas that transform how we value our teachers, fund our schools, and educate our students."

GILLIBRAND DROPS OUT: Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand (D-N.Y.) announced Wednesday she is dropping out of the presidential race (The Hill). The announcement came hours before the deadline to qualify for the September primary debate, with Gillibrand not meeting the criteria. "I know this isn't the result we wanted. We wanted to win this race," Gillibrand said in a video posted to Twitter. "But it's important to know when it's not your time and to know how you can best serve your community and country. I believe I can best serve by helping to unite us to beat Donald Trump in 2020."

Jackie Walorski (R-Ind.) today will be joined by U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) Under Secretary for Trade and Foreign Agricultural Affairs Ted McKinney and Indiana Lt. Governor Suzanne Crouch for a roundtable discussion with local farmers and other Indiana agriculture leaders about the importance of passing the U.S.-Mexico-Canada Agreement (USMCA) and other trade-related issues affecting Hoosier farmers (Howey Politics Indiana). SEN. ISAKSON TO RESIGN DUE TO HEALTH PROBLEMS: Sen. Johnny Isakson is resigning at the end of 2019 in the face of mounting health problems, adding another competitive seat as Republicans look to defend their narrow majority in 2020 (Politico). "I am leaving a job I love because my health challenges are taking their toll on me, my family and my staff," Isakson said in a statement. "My Parkinson's has been progressing, and I am continuing physical therapy to recover from a fall in July. In addition, this week I had surgery to remove a growth on my kidney." The retirement of the Georgia giant will hurt Republicans' chances of keeping the Senate next year.

AYRES NOT INTERESTED IN GA SENATE SEAT: Veteran Republican operative Nick Ayers said in a statement Wednesday that he is not interested in being appointed to the Senate to fill a vacancy in his native Georgia next year (Politico). Ayers, who left his role as Vice President Mike Pence's chief of staff at the end of 2018, was the subject of early Senate speculation after GOP Sen. Johnny Isakson announced that he would resign later this year. Ayers attributed the decision to a desire to focus on his family. "My decision to leave the White House and Washington, D.C. earlier this year was for the sole purpose of stepping back from politics and enjoying this season of life with my wife and three young children. They are the priority now and for the many years to come," the 37-year-old Ayers said in statement lavishing praise on Isakson.

DEMOCRATS MIFFED OVER BILL SIGNING: A state lawmaker and veterans from several organizations are raising concerns about being left out of an August 5 bill signing despite their involvement in getting the legislation passed. On August 5, Governor Holcomb held a ceremonial signing at the Indiana State Fair for House Bill 1010, which helps military veterans and their spouses by exempting their retirement income and survivors benefits from the state income tax (Kenney, WRTV). Pictured with the Governor at the bill signing include Rep. Bob Cherry, R-Greenfield, and co-sponsor Sen. Mike Crider, R-Greenfield. Democrats Senator Lonnie Randolph, a co-sponsor of the bill, and co-author Karlee Macer, D-Indianapolis, were not included in the ceremony. "I wanted to attend the bill signing that took place, however, I did not receive notice of the event and apparently Representative Macer was also not invited," Randolph said. "It may have just been an oversight by the governor's office, but it is unfortunate that the Democrats on the Bill were left off the guest list. While I would have liked to have been notified, I am glad that other legislative colleagues of the General Assembly were present." Lisa Wilken, chairman of the National Women Veteran Committee, AMVETS, did not receive an invitation and said no one from AMVETS was requested despite their efforts to get the law passed.

STATEHOUSE: McCORMICK SAYS DON'T 'FREAK OUT' OVER ILEARN - With ILEARN results disappointing parents and schools across the state, Superintendent of Public Instruction Jennifer McCormick on Wednesday said she wants the General Assembly to take action so that the scores do not penalize schools or put them a step closer to a potential state takeover (Loughlin, Terre Haute Tribune-Star). McCormick said she'll also ask lawmakers to give the State Board of Education emergency rule-making power to address these types of issues going forward. "We know there is frustration with the ILEARN for this year," the first year that the new ILEARN test has been administered, McCormick said. "Although those implementation results were expected they can be very, very difficult," she said. "We are hopeful that our General Assembly will take a hard look at our state accountability system and address some of those concerns so a year from now we're not having the same conversation." Indiana currently grades schools on an A to F scale, with too many Fs putting a school at risk of a state takeover. If schools' letter grades went up after the ILEARN exam, McCormick said, "we feel we should honor that" by counting that higher grade. But if they went down, "they should be held harmless," she said, adding that they also should not be facing a state takeover.

STATEHOUSE: HILL BACKS AUTISM CARES ACT - Attorney General Curtis Hill today announced that he and Mississippi Attorney General Jim Hood are leading a bipartisan coalition of 47 attorneys general calling upon Congress to authorize the Autism CARES Act of 2019. This legislation provides federal support for research into autism spectrum disorders ("ASD") and services to those affected by these conditions (Howey Politics Indiana). "The United States is a caring and compassionate nation," Attorney General Hill said. "As Americans, we must stand together to help alleviate the challenges imposed by ASD upon families across the country." A previous version of this legislation is set to expire on Sept. 30, 2019. The Autism CARES Act of 2019 currently exists as H.R. 1058 in the U.S. House of Representatives and S. 427 in the U.S. Senate."

GAMING: COMMISSION APPROVES HARD ROCK, ACCEPTING TERRE HAUTE PROPOSALS - The proposed $400 million Hard Rock Casino in Gary has cleared a key hurdle. Our partners at The Times of Northwest Indiana report the Indiana Gaming Commission has approved the relocation and consolidation of the two Majestic Star Casinos into one land-based location in the Lake County city (Inside Indiana Business). Indianapolis-based Spectacle Entertainment is developing the new casino, which is expected to employ some 1,800 workers when complete. Hard Rock will assume management of the casino. The second phase will include a hotel and parking garage with construction expected to commence in 2022 or 2023. The facility will be the state's first new land-based casino since the Tropicana Evansville moved inland in October 2017. The commission also announced it has begun accepting proposals for a new casino in Vigo County. Our partners at WFYI report casino operators will have until December 1 to submit their proposals. However, before that deadline, voters in the county must approve a referendum on the November ballot authorizing the new casino. Spectacle Entertainment acquired the two Majestic Star casino licenses earlier this year. One of the licenses will be used for the new Hard Rock casino, while the other will be used for the casino in Vigo County. However, per legislation passed this year by the Indiana General Assembly and signed into law by Governor Eric Holcomb, Spectacle will still have to compete with other casino operators for the Vigo County license.

GAMING: SPORTS BETTING BEGINS SEPT. 1 - You'll be able to place bets on sports at three of Indiana's casinos, beginning Sept. 1, the first day sports betting becomes legal in the state. Two more casinos will start taking bets Sept. 4, said Sara Tait, executive director of the Indiana Gaming Commission, following a Wednesday meeting (Davis, WIBC). "Indiana Grand, Ameristar and Hollywood are all authorized to go live Sept. 1," said Tait. "And then Horseshoe Hammond is authorized on the fourth of September and French Lick is authorized Sept. 6."

After the checkpoint, troopers will conduct roving saturation patrols aggressively seeking impaired drivers throughout the Indiana State Police Peru District, which covers Cass, Fulton, Grant, Miami, Howard, Tipton and Wabash Counties. The purpose of enforcement checkpoints is to remove impaired drivers from Indiana roadways before they cause pain, suffering or death to innocent victims.

MILITARY: GRISSOM TOWER TO BE RAZED - The first air traffic control tower built in 1942 at Grissom Air Reserve Base is set to be demolished after officials say falling debris from the dilapidated structure is causing hazards at the base's air strip (Gerber, Kokomo Tribune). Jim Tidd, executive director of the Miami County Economic Development Authority, said the tower was built when the base was first constructed during World War II as a U.S. Navy installation and served as the main air traffic control tower for decades. Over the years, the structure also housed base operations, a weather detachment and administrative offices.

WHITE HOUSE: PENCE ADDRESSES AMERICAN LEGION - Vice President Mike Pence was back home in Indiana to deliver a speech at the 101st American Legion National Convention Wednesday (WTHR-TV). The Vice President is a father to a Marine, and soon to be father-in-law to a Navy Pilot. He was also a member of the American Legion and said he owes his success to that. "I feel I own a debt of gratitude to the American Legion because it was in that American Legion Oratorical Contest that my love affair for the Constitution of The United States began and you have my thanks," Vice President Pence said. He praised the President for all the work he has done to support American Veterans since his time in office. "Since the first day of this administration our President has worked to make this the strongest military in the history of the world," Vice President Pence said. "President Trump has actually signed into law the largest increase in our national defense since the days of Ronald Reagan and this month we signed a budget deal that secured $738 billion for our military. And gave our soldiers, sailors, airman, marine, and coast guard the biggest pay raise they have had in the last 10 years."

WHITE HOUSE: PENCE FOCUSES ON VA ISSUES - Vice President Pence also talked about how the President has focused on many issues in the VA that are close to home (WTHR-TV). "Under this President's leadership and with our partners in congress we passed the VA mission act," Vice President Pence said. "The most sweeping reform, VA reform law in half a century and today more than 3 million veterans have been able to see the doctor of their choice and get the medicine they need." The President also signed the VA Accountability and Whistleblower Protection Act, which makes it easier for the VA to fire employees for misconduct and protect staff that brought the issues to light. Since the bill was signed, Vice President Pence said they have seen great success in the care of our veterans. "Today I am pleased to report that we have fired more than 7,000 VA employees for negligent behavior," he said. "The error of abuse at the VA is over. We are not going to put up with it anymore."

WHITE HOUSE: PENCE PROMOTES RED FLAG LAWS - Vice President Mike Pence believes Indiana's red flag law could be used as a potential blueprint for similar laws across the country (CBS4). The VP held a roundtable discussion over red flag laws Wednesday with various Indiana law enforcement officials. The discussion was part of a conversation Pence says the Trump administration is engaging in to help prevent tragedies like the mass shootings in El Paso, Texas and Dayton, Ohio. "I'm here to listen and to carry back Indiana's experience into our discussions at the White House," Pence said. The Vice President touted Indiana's red flag laws as a tool that's helped to prevent incidents of gun violence, specifically when it comes to those with mental health issues and instances of suicide. "While we will always defend the rights of Americans to keep and bear arms, we don't want people who are a danger to themselves or others to have access to firearms," Pence said. Pence said President Donald Trump is looking closely at red flag laws as a method of dealing with gun violence and mass shootings, but stopped short of saying the administration would pursue a nationwide policy. "As we look at these proposals in congress, they're designed to encourage states to adopt these laws, because the ability to process these warrants, to give individuals the due process that's essential to protect the constitutional rights of every American, best happen in state and local jurisdictions," said the Vice President.

WHITE HOUSE: MONDALE ISSUES SCATHING ASSESSMENT OF TRUMP, PENCE - In a scathing assessment of the current White House, former Vice President Walter Mondale has branded President Donald Trump a liar who does not understand U.S. law or the constitution, while Vice President Mike Pence merely stands behind his boss and does nothing (Newsweek). "He lies all the time, it doesn't seem to bother him. He lies several times a day," Mondale said about the president. "He has this thing about dividing people, splitting the country up, getting people fighting. That seems to be what he wants to do every day, and he's getting it done. And we're all paying the price for it." Pence, too, is failing to reach the standard expected by Mondale, a veteran political figure who also served Minnesota as an attorney general and senator as well as President Bill Clinton as the U.S. ambassador to Japan. Regardless, Mondale suggested the vice president is near anonymous within the administration. "Pence is in the White House, what he is doing I don't know," Mondale said. "I keep telling them not to just stand behind the president. Go out and do your own thing and help the president, but don't think you only have the chore of standing to attention when the president talks." "Look at this guy, [at] all he does," he added. "What's he thinking? What is he doing?"

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SCHEDULE - President Trump will participate in the establishment of the U.S. Space Command at 4 p.m. in the Oval Office.

FBI: UAW CHIEF'S HOME SEARCHED - Federal agents searched the homes of the United Auto Workers' current and former presidents and a Northern Michigan conference center used by union leaders, widening a multiyear criminal investigation into alleged corruption in the UAW's top ranks (Wall Street Journal). Neither man has been charged with any crime.

SAFETY: RED LIGHT DEATHS AT A 10-YEAR HIGH - The number of people killed by drivers running red lights has hit a 10-year high, and AAA is urging drivers and pedestrians to use caution at traffic signals (AP). In 2017, the latest figures available, 939 people were killed by vehicles blowing through red lights, according to a AAA study of government crash data. It's the highest death toll since 2008 and 28% higher than in 2012. AAA says two people are killed every day in the U.S. by drivers who don't stop for the signals. "Drivers who decide to run a red light when they could have stopped safely are making a reckless choice that puts other road users in danger," David Yang, executive director of AAA's Foundation for Traffic Safety, said Thursday.

MEDIA: MSNBC'S O'DONNELL RETRACTS REPORT ON TRUMP, RUSSIANS - MSNBC host Lawrence O'Donnell on Wednesday retracted his reporting that claimed Russian oligarchs had co-signed for Deutsche Bank loans to President Donald Trump, and he apologized for not adhering to professional standards (Politico). "Last night on this show I discussed information that wasn't ready for reporting," O'Donnell said at the top of his show Wednesday night. "I did not go through the rigorous verification and standards process here at MSNBC before repeating what I heard from my source. Had it gone through that process I would not have been permitted to report it. I should not have said it on air or posted it on Twitter. I was wrong to do so." "Tonight we are retracting the story," he added. "We don't know whether the information is inaccurate. But the fact is, we do know it wasn't ready for broadcast, and for that I apologize."

NORTH CAROLINA: POLICE THWART CAMPUS MASS SHOOTING - Police in North Carolina thwarted a campus shooting at High Point University Tuesday, arresting a freshman who had two guns and ammunition in his dorm room with plans to "shoot up the school" (New York Daily News). Paul Steber, 19, was being held without bail, charged with three felonies after he stashed guns in his dorm and admitted to police that he planned to use them. University security contacted police on Tuesday reporting that a student had two firearms and ammunition. Arriving officers seized a 9mm semi-automatic pistol and a black powder/percussion double-barrel 12-gauge shotgun, and arrested Paul Steber, 19, of Boston, police said in a statement. After his arrest, Steber admitted to plotting a massacre, police said.

CITIES: HAMMOND TOURISM BOARD NOMINEE REJECTED OVER PLEDGE - The City Council appears to be backing down from their initial pick to represent them on the tourism board, with one council member saying Raymundo Garcia has become too much of a political distraction (Cross, NWI Times). Garcia argues he believes he's being "vilified" for his personal choice not to recite the Pledge of Allegiance during CVA public meetings. "To be a good patriot and to be a good American means you vote, you pay your taxes, you don't break the laws. You pick up garbage in the streets," said Garcia, the operator of a popular Hammond taco restaurant. "I grew up in a time when we were taught to question authority, not to just go along with whatever our leaders say." He said he stands for the pledge at South Shore Convention and Visitors Authority meetings, but folds his arms and doesn't recite it during meetings in a quiet act of "civil disobedience." "The First Amendment guarantees my right to not say the pledge," he said.

CITIES: SOUTH BEND BLINKS ON HIGH RISE STANDOFF - The city has blinked in a standoff with developer Dave Matthews that had stalled his apartment high-rise project on the East Bank (Parrott, South Bend Tribune). The Board of Public Works has awarded a $4.3-million contract to Ohio-based High Concrete Group to supply concrete wall panels for the project. Matthews is planning a 10-story, $42 million building adjacent to his Commerce Center at 401 E. Colfax Ave. He says work on the site should resume next month now that the standoff with the city is over. Matthews' general contractor, FA Wilhelm Construction, had dug a massive hole at the site but stopped work three months ago as the city and Matthews became entangled in a dispute over a grocery store and pharmacy envisioned for the ground floor.

CITIES: PERU RALLIES AT CLOSING SCHNEIDER PLANT - A large group of workers at Schneider Electric held a rally across from the factory Wednesday to decry the upcoming closure of the more than 100-year-old plant that will layoff more than 300 people (Gerber, Kokomo Tribune). The rally was organized by the Indiana branch of the activist group Our Revolution, which advocates for progressive political values, according to its website. The crowd was made up of current workers, as well as employees who have already been laid off as part of the ongoing cuts that will ultimately end with a total closure of the facility.

CITIES: COLUMBUS PREPARES FOR RIVER FRONT PROJECT - The city of Columbus is preparing an application for the proposed riverfront redevelopment, planning to submit it to the Indiana Department of Natural Resources by the end of October (Thomas, Columbus Republic). Redevelopment director Heather Pope said the city is awaiting a response to its jurisdictional determination from the Army Corp of Engineers. The Army Corp of Engineers is studying the area between the Robert N. Stewart Bridge and the Third Street bridge where the city has proposed an $8.6 million riverfront project. Pope said the response from the Army Corp of Engineers is expected in October and must be included in the city's application to DNR.

COUNTIES: KNOX COMMISSIONERS REMOVE CONFEDERATE FLAG - Knox county official says a replica of an early Confederate flag that was displayed near a Civil War monument in southwestern Indiana has been removed (AP). Knox County Commissioners President Kellie Streeter says the commissioners "weren't fully aware" that the flag near the monument outside the county courthouse in Vincennes represented the Confederacy. It was replaced with an Indiana state flag this week. She says "misunderstandings" about its origins kept it flying among seven different flags the Marine Corps League owns and maintains near the war monument.

COUNTIES: ST. JOE PROBATION EMPLOYEE ARRESTED FOR BRIBERY - An employee with the St. Joseph County Adult Probation Department has been charged with selling clean drug screens to people on probation. Raymontow Davis, 34, was charged Wednesday with bribery and official misconduct (Wright, South Bend Tribune). He was arrested Tuesday in the County-City Building and booked into the St. Joseph County Jail. He is being held without bond until his Thursday arraignment. On Aug. 21, a "cooperating source" who is not named in charging documents, asked to speak with Chief Probation Officer Jesse Carlton. The source is on probation and required to submit to random urine drop tests, which are administered by the Court's Substance Abuse Program (CSAP).

UPDATE: Indiana just days away from legalized sports betting

August 28, 2019 | Associated Press and IBJ Staff

KEYWORDS GAMBLING / PRO SPORTS / SPORTS BETTING / TAXES

Sports betting is days away from becoming legal in Indiana and the state's casinos are lining up to start collecting wagers just in time for the NFL regular season, which starts Sept. 5.

Indiana will become the 12th state—and the first in the midst of major Midwest markets—with sports betting when a new state law takes effect Sunday, Sept. 1. For now, sports betting will only be allowed on an in-person basis at casinos.

Three casinos—Indiana Grand Racing & Casino in Shelbyville, Ameristar in East Chicago and Hollywood Casino and Hotel in Lawrenceburg—plan to open on-site sports wagering areas Sunday.

Horseshoe Hammond will follow on Sept. 4 and French Lick Casino will launch on Sept. 6.

The Indiana Gaming Commission approved emergency wagering regulations Wednesday. Eleven of the state's 13 casinos and all three of its off-track betting parlors have received temporary sports betting licenses. The casinos are still working to launch mobile betting apps in the state.

Indiana Gaming Commission Executive Director Sara Gonso Tait said casino operators are working quickly to add mobile options for sports betting, but their immediate focus was on preparing for the retail launch.

WHEN WILL SPORTS BETTING START?

A flurry of sports books are set to open in early September once they gain approval from state regulators.

Caesars Entertainment is Indiana's biggest casino operator and will be one of the first operators to launch sports betting when Indiana Grand goes live Sunday. Caesars plans to offer it at its OTB in downtown Indianapolis on Tuesday and at its Horseshoe Hammond casino just across the state line from Chicago the following day.

Rival Penn National is also jumping in quickly with Sunday starts planned for its casinos that also tap big nearby metro areas: Ameristar and Hollywood, which are a short drive from Cincinnati and its northern Kentucky suburbs.

Plenty of hoopla will accompany the openings. Boyd Gaming says former Chicago Bears star Brian Urlacher will place the first bet at its Blue Chip casino in Michigan City on Sept. 5, while the Lawrenceburg casino plans a ceremony Sept. 7 with retired Cincinnati sports stars Anthony Munoz of the Bengals and Tony Perez of the Reds.

Several casinos plan to start mobile wagering this fall but haven't set dates. How quickly mobile betting becomes available will depend largely on the casinos, Tait said.

A WINDFALL FOR INDIANA?

Iowa became the first Midwestern state with legalized sports betting on Aug. 15. But Indiana's proximity to several large cities makes sports wagering available to more potential gamblers.

Sports wagering generally provides only slim profit margins for casinos, though operators say it is a way to help draw in gamblers. Indiana's jump on neighboring states comes amid a $482 million—or nearly 18%—drop in gambling revenues at its casinos since 2012 amid competition from new casinos in Cincinnati and southern Michigan.

An Indiana legislative report projects that the state will collect only about $13 million a year in revenue from its 9.5% tax on the casinos' sports bets winnings.

Sports wagering revenue has fallen short of expectations in many states that quickly legalized it after the U.S. Supreme Court cleared the way with a ruling last year. The tax rates range widely among states: Pennsylvania set its rate at 36%—four times that of neighboring New Jersey—and Iowa's is near the bottom, at 6.75%.

Regulators are working on sports wagering rules in Illinois, which legalized it in June but hasn't set a date for it to begin.

WHAT ARE INDIANA'S RULES?

The commission is expected to draft permanent sports wagering rules over the next year, but Tait said she doesn't expect it to change much from the emergency rules.

Gamblers must be 21 or older in order to place a bet. Indiana will allow the casinos to take wagers on dozens of professional, collegiate and international events, including football, basketball, baseball, auto racing, hockey, soccer, boxing, golf and Olympic competitions. No betting is allowed on high school or youth sporting events, or e-sports.

Gamblers will have to register and prove their age with a casino before being able to use a mobile wagering app. Those online apps, however, must use geofencing technology so that the bets are placed within the state borders, meaning any Chicago residents would have to cross into Indiana each time they wanted to place a bet using their cellphone.

Brynna Sentel/TheStatehouseFile.comSpeaking: Indiana Superintendent of Public Instruction Jennifer McCormick says she will ask the General Assembly to not penalize schools for lower scores on the new ILEARN standardized exam.

With ILEARN results disappointing parents and schools across the state, Superintendent of Public Instruction Jennifer McCormick on Wednesday said she wants the General Assembly to take action so that the scores do not penalize schools or put them a step closer to a potential state takeover.

McCormick said she'll also ask lawmakers to give the State Board of Education emergency rule-making power to address these types of issues going forward.

"We know there is frustration with the ILEARN for this year," the first year that the new ILEARN test has been administered, McCormick said.

"Although those implementation results were expected they can be very, very difficult," she said.

"We are hopeful that our General Assembly will take a hard look at our state accountability system and address some of those concerns so a year from now we're not having the same conversation."

Indiana currently grades schools on an A to F scale, with too many Fs putting a school at risk of a state takeover. If schools' letter grades went up after the ILEARN exam, McCormick said, "we feel we should honor that" by counting that higher grade.

But if they went down, "they should be held harmless," she said, adding that they also should not be facing a state takeover.

Indiana school districts went into panic mode after receiving the ILEARN results, the new statewide standardized test which replaced ISTEP+ in the 2018-19 school year.

While schools and parents have the results, the Department of Education has embargoed the exact numbers from the public until after the State Board of Education officially gets them at its meeting next Wednesday.

However, in a statement issued Monday, McCormick said that, compared to past ISTEP+ scores, Indiana students showed lower achievement levels across the state in both mathematics and English/language arts.

Asked whether the millions of dollars Indiana has spent on assessment exams has been worth it, McCormick said: "I think that's the question we need to have a lot of conversation about. There's a lot of money on the line. There's a lot of time on the line, a lot of stress on the line."

There were a lot of changes from the past test, she said, including making it computer adaptive so that questions got harder or easier depending on a student's answers. But, she added, "at a time when (Indiana) educators are 50 out of 50 (states) on seeing pay raises since 2002" the state needs to discuss whether this is the best use of state dollars.

"It's past time to decouple" teacher pay from the standardized testing results, she said.

Indiana has seen multiple changes since the 1980s in student and school assessments, including changing the tests, which grades take the test, when it is given, how it is given and what skills are assessed. The frequent churn has frustrated many educators and parents – including teachers who see their pay tied to the test and parents who see their children's future defined by it.

Asked what it would take "for Indiana to stop basing everything on the test," McCormick – who is not seeking re-election and will be replaced in 2020 by an appointed, rather than elected, superintendent of public instruction – pointed to government.

"It comes down to a philosophy of leadership," she said. "It takes leadership in the state who has that power to make those policies to look at where we are, look at that trend data and make some of those difficult decisions."

She said there's a movement across the nation "to be better stewards of that money and look at assessment a little differently, but Indiana is very much to where we were even still five years ago in the mindset of that punitive piece of assessment."

Gov. Eric Holcomb also issued a statement Monday calling on the lawmakers to pass "hold harmless" legislation so that the first year of ILEARN data would not be reflected in schools' overall grades. Legislative leaders have signaled their willingness to hit the pause button at least for a year.

Keith Gambill, president of the Indiana State Teachers Association, said that "we heard it at the Teacher Compensation Commission meetings this month – the ILEARN test scores do not reflect the hard work of our educators and students and don't provide a timely measure of student progress."

ISTA, he said, concurs with McCormick's call to hold schools harmless and wants the state "to take immediate steps to ensure that schools and teachers are held harmless until educators feel confident in the new system."

McCormick said that "the good news for Indiana is we are seeing an uptick in trends nationally with our performance and we cannot lose sight of this. ILEARN was a snapshot in time. It was a one-day assessment. It gave us information on where students are performing, but there are a lot of pieces to student performance beyond one assessment."

McCormick offered some explanations for the lower scores, saying this test, given to third through eighth grades, was “much more rigorous” than in the past and the skills assessed were different than in the past.

“Our goal is to make sure that students in that 3-8 space are prepared for high school and beyond, and this is one indication of that performance,” she said. “Our goal is just to make sure that parents, educators and students have a lens and something to work from in order to continue to improve.”

Casino supporters schedule forums for Sept. 3 and 4

Tribune-Star staff report Aug 27, 2019 Updated Aug 27, 2019

Supporters of a casino for Vigo County have scheduled two public forums next week.

The Advance West Central Indiana Political Action Committee will host the first forum at 6 p.m. Tuesday (Sept. 3) at Indiana Union of Operating Engineers Local 841, 6801 S. U.S. 41, Terre Haute.

The second will be at 6 p.m. Sept. 4 at The Landing at Fort Harrison, 3350 N. Fourth St., Terre Haute.

The casino question will be the first referendum question listed on the Nov. 5 general election ballot. It will read, "Shall inland casino gambling be permitted in Vigo County?"

In a second and separate ballot question, the Vigo County School Corp. will seek additional property taxes in the amount of $7 million for eight years to bolster its operating funds.

Advance West Central Indiana PAC was formed in July and supports a local casino. Officers include Chairman John Collett, Co-chair Brian Kooistra and Treasurer Sara Smith. The PAC hosts the website www.CasinoTerreHaute.com.

Efforts for a Terre Haute-area casino took a major step forward in early May, when Gov. Eric Holcomb signed House Bill 1015.

That legislation put in place mechanisms for such a casino, including the Vigo County referendum.

The Indiana Gaming Commission has begun accepting applications from potential operators of a Vigo casino and will continue to do so until Dec. 1.

At least two casino operators have publicly expressed interest in opening a Terre Haute casino -- Spectacle Entertainment and Full House Resorts.

Terre Haute businessman Greg Gibson is vice chairman of Spectacle, which has rights to the the Majestic Star casinos in Gary. Spectacle it intends to relocate its Gary operations into a single, larger casino near Interstate 80/94.

Amazon donates $20,000 to Greater Clark for robotics program

RIVER RIDGE — Many local schools will now be able to expand their STEM programs after receiving thousands of dollars from Amazon.

On Wednesday, representatives from the Amazon Fulfillment Center in River Ridge announced a donation of $20,000 to Greater Clark County Schools to fund the district's VEX K-12 Robotics Program for the 2019-2020 school year. Robotics club members from Jeffersonville High School and Charlestown Middle School attended the announcement and participated in tours of the facility.

Sunender Mann, director of operations from the Amazon Fulfillment Center, said Greater Clark has "done a great job in developing the leaders of tomorrow," and the award is a way to give back to the community.

The donation means that students will have the latest technology to develop real-world skills, he said.

"We certainly hope that this opportunity is going to ignite the students' curiosity regarding how they can take advantage of the STEM education in the classroom, as well as getting access to the technology to help them learn and make learning more fun," Mann said.

Wednesday's event provided opportunities to show students how Amazon uses science, technology, engineering and math in its day-to-day operations, Mann said. In addition to the tour, students worked together to build "clawbots," or robots that can pick up objects, from a robotics kit.

Greater Clark Superintendent Mark Laughner said the $20,000 donation will go a long way in the growth of the district's robotics program, which is supported by VEX Robotics. VEX trains robotics coaches and provides schools with building materials, instructions and access to software.

"We know that STEM jobs are the jobs of the future, and we know that as a district, it's our responsibility to prepare our students for those jobs," he said. "We want to do our part."

Laughner said through the donation, the district can make sure every school in the district has a robotics team, along with the supplies and equipment they need to compete at the state level and to learn about STEM career opportunities, including robotics, advanced technologies and automation.

"We've been doing this for two to three years at the schools, and we're always looking for funding, so this really helps us in that regard to get kids involved and keep them involved," he said.

The robotics programs allow Greater Clark students to build critical thinking skills, and it allows them to compete throughout the district or state. The district is working to establish programs at each high school, middle school and elementary school, Laughner said

He said Greater Clark wants to partner with businesses inside and outside of the district, and he was happy the students could learn about career opportunities in the area.

"With Amazon being in our backyard, it's great they are willing to partner with us," he said. "Our job is to try to build the workforce for companies like Amazon and the other companies in River Ridge and throughout the district. Any time we can partner with a partner like Amazon we're very pleased and want to be involved with them."

Mann said STEM programs in schools help teach students real-world applications and critical thinking skills that apply to jobs at companies such as Amazon. He said while the River Ridge site is not a robotics facility, Amazon has robotics facilities throughout the country.

Brian Hester, teacher and robotics coach at Charlestown Middle School, said the school has many kids who want to participate in robotics, but they cannot afford to provide enough equipment for all who are interested in joining. He hopes Amazon's donation will allow the program to grow.

"They make robots that will pick up balls, that throw figures, that will move figures, that will stack cones," he said.

Zach Anderson, teacher and robotics coach at Jeffersonville High School, said as the school's program continues to grow, the donation will not only help the robotics club receive additional equipment, but it will also provide more updated equipment to the students.

"When we go to these competitions, other schools have the newest and latest editions of this VEX stuff," he said. "It's nice to be on that same level with them."

Adela King, a senior at Jeffersonville High School, is a member of the school's robotics club who attended Wednesday's event at Amazon. She said she enjoyed learning about the process behind the Amazon Fulfillment Center at the tour, and she hopes the grant allows more people to become involved in the robotics club and STEM programs at the school.

"It's very cool to be able to interact with other people who have different ideas, come together and build something with one common goal," she said. "It's very neat and cool to be able to do this. I want to be a mechanical engineer, so building stuff is kind of what I want to do — this is good practice for that."

Indiana deputy: Fentanyl is killing our kids and neighbors, and we're missing the source

Toby Deaton, Opinion contributor Published 6:54 a.m. ET Aug. 29, 2019

In March, the Clark County Health Department was forced to issue an alert \(https://www.facebook.com/permalink.php?story_fbid=2242559055822575&id=165340420211126\) regarding the increased drug overdoses \(/story/news/2019/03/10/fentanyl-possibly-blame-clark-county-indiana-overdose-rise/3123077002/\) that had recently occurred there. Aligned with the unfortunate trend of the rest of the country, fentanyl-laced drugs were the main culprit in our communities in Southern Indiana.

Law enforcement officers have been trained to protect themselves from accidental contact with drugs. We are careful by using gloves and assessing the scene for possible dangers that may contain fentanyl or other illegal substances.

Fentanyl is unlike any drug my colleagues and I have seen before. This terribly deadly opioid is killing thousands across America every year, from addicts here in Southern Indiana to party-going college kids thinking their recreational cocaine is safe. In both cases, fentanyl-laced drugs are killing our people \(/story/news/crime/2019/02/28/dea-lab-solved-louisville-mass-drug-overdose-mystery/2850176002/\).

Even trace amounts of fentanyl can kill. At the quantities of which fentanyl is transported across our borders and into our towns, there is enough for it to be considered a weapon of mass destruction. Innocent people and brave law enforcement officers are often victims of this drug without ever using it.

Read this: Kentucky drug trafficking bust yields more than 20 indictments \(/story/news/crime/2019/06/23/drug-trafficking-bust-dayton-kentucky-arrests-guns-fentanyl-meth/1541969001/\)

While our lawmakers have focused recent efforts on limiting access to prescription opioids, the crisis has evolved. The primary way addicts are getting their fix begins with illegal fentanyl being smuggled across our southern border or through the U.S. Postal Service.

The problem is, our leaders have failed to evolve with it.

When we turn on the news, we read about another federal, state or local lawsuit against drug manufacturers, doctors and pharmacists. Certainly, at one point in the arc of this epidemic, those players were a large part of the crisis, but the threat has morphed. Research predicts 80% of opioid overdose deaths between now and 2025 will be from heroin and fentanyl. That number shakes me to my core.

Only $1 for 3 months. Save 97%.

We are prescribing fewer prescription opioids, yet more people are dying at the hands of illicit drugs. Americans have turned to the dark web to source illicit opioids from drug manufacturers in China and Mexican cartels.

Report: Overdose deaths fall in Kentucky for the first time since 2013 \(/story/news/local/2019/07/18/kentucky-overdose-deaths-decline-first-time-since-2013/1768838001/\)

Unfortunately, with polarizing political fights in Washington concerning both Mexico and China, we can't even agree to come up with a plan of attack on dealing with fentanyl and other illicit drugs that are trafficked over our borders and killing our people. There are technologies available that would more easily detect drugs at points of entry that are coming through our own postal service, yet bureaucrats and politicians aren't moving with the urgency we need when it comes to integrating these tools.

When we miss these drugs at our ports and borders, they end up all the way here in small towns and big cities across Indiana and the Ohio Valley. They kill our neighbors, our kids and put our safety officials at risk. While the borders may seem far away, the results of its lack of security are felt in our own backyards.

This has gone on long enough without real solutions. We must come together as a nation now and approve funding at all levels of governments that allow us to evolve along with the drug climate in real time. If we do not evolve and properly educate, the death rate will continue to rise.

Our leaders must never become complacent with our tragic reality. There is time to stop the epidemic in its tracks and prevent future citizens from falling victim to the dangers of illicit fentanyl. We need a real commitment to interdiction to save our people.

Opinion: Stop debating drug addiction treatment in Kentucky and consider all options \(/story/opinion/2019/07/03/opioid-epidemic-kentucky-drug-addiction-treatment-system-broken/1623821001/\)

OFFICIAL RESIGNED AFTER 'CREEPY' EMAILS: 13 Investigates has learned a former prosecutor hand-picked to help reform the Department of Child Services resigned amid an internal investigation for sending inappropriate messages to an intern (Chapman, WTHR-TV). Todd Meyer left his job as the Associate Director of DCS on July 16. Now Gov. Eric Holcomb is confirming Meyer left under disturbing circumstances. In fact, the Governor said the man he chose to help Indiana's abused and neglected children is "not welcomed in state government. Meyer is the former Boone County Prosecutor. His abrupt resignation from DCS came just a year after taking the high profile job with the state. Holcomb confirmed Meyer was under scrutiny for inappropriate messages to an intern. 13 Investigates does not know the content of those messages, but published news reports characterized them as "creepy" but not sexual in nature. Holcomb said, "Disgusted by what I read, beyond disappointed. It was in fact handled appropriately. This was brought to the attention of the agency on one day and was followed up all the way up the chain and he resigned the very next day as the investigation was starting. When it went to the state personnel it was deemed that the communication was inappropriate, and therefore he would be ineligible to work as a state employee."

MEYER STATEMENT: Former DCS associate director Todd Meyer made this statement to WTHR-TV: "I should not have communicated in the manner I did. I am sorry for doing so and I apologize. I have learned from this mistake such that it will never happen again. These messages were intended to be received in a positive and friendly manner, but I now recognize they were not, and I understand. As soon as this matter was brought to my attention I spoke with my wife and children, we discussed the situation in its entirety, and we are learning and moving on from it."

ZODY CITES TROUBLING TREND IN ADMINISTRATION: A week after Indiana National Guard Adj. Gen. Courtney Carr was forced to resign over retaliation for an extramarital affair, Gov. Holcomb has acknowledged DCS Associated Director Todd Meyer resigned over inappropriate emails with an intern. Indiana Democratic Party Chairman John Zody said Thursday that a trend is developing (Howey Politics Indiana). "Another week, another disgraced Holcomb administration official accused of inappropriate conduct and betraying the public trust. Holcomb's hand-picked hire to turn around the agency resigned in disgrace just one year later," Zody said. "Did the administration fail to vet Meyer or was his hiring just a political favor? Either way, the governor looks like a lightweight after staking DCS's turnaround on Meyer's hire. It's just the latest example of a culture of cronyism fueled by little to no accountability and where the governor allows perpetrators to quietly slink away without facing consequences for their actions. All while the number of child deaths is on the rise in Indiana."

PAGE FAMILY FILING 'RED FLAG' SUIT AGAINST LANDSKE FAMILY: Just one day after a jury found William "Bill" Landske guilty of murdering Senior Judge T. Edward Page, an attorney representing Page's husband announced Thursday he filed a civil lawsuit against Landske family members that will seek to curb further gun violence (Reese & Kasarda, NWI Times). The suit will seek to evoke Indiana's "red flag" law, which "allows law enforcement to seize the guns of someone deemed dangerous to himself or others — even if that person is licensed to carry a weapon," attorney Kenneth J. Allen said. "We intend to give the red flag law teeth through this litigation," said Allen, who represents Page's husband, Kevin Swanson. "If we hold those with knowledge who fail to act accountable, then we will encourage others to act responsibly in the future." "Landske's adult children, Jacqueline Basilotta, Cheryl Boisson and Eric Landske, were aware Landske always carried a handgun and that his behavior had become increasingly bizarre," Allen said. "The morning of the shooting, Landske had been conversing with his late wife's ashes, something he apparently did regularly," Allen said. "Landske had become more and more irrational, enraged and profane, particularly when discussing Page, who had been preparing Landske's taxes, but hadn't yet finished the task. The morning of the shooting he told his adult children that today 'it would be over.'" Landske, the widower of former state Sen. Sue Landske, shot and killed Page, 64, after arriving with Basilotta and Boisson to pick up tax documents Aug. 15, 2018, at the Hobart home Page shared with Swanson.

HPI DAILY WIRE TO RETURN NEXT TUESDAY: Due to the Labor Day holiday, the next HPI Daily Wire will be published Tuesday Sept. 3, unless events warrant. We'll be updating the HPI website at www.howeypolitics.com throughout the holiday weekend. Thanks for reading, folks, and have a safe final holiday of the summer. We're heading to the Indiana Dunes!

YOUNG REPUBLICANS CONCERNED ABOUT CLIMATE: A growing majority of U.S. Republicans, especially younger voters, are worried that human behavior is damaging the planet, according to a survey of global attitudes to the environment conducted by an Amsterdam-based polling agency (Reuters). President Donald Trump, a Republican, has said he will pull the United States out of the 2015 Paris climate accord involving nearly 200 countries and has reversed environmental protections put in place by his Democratic predecessor Barack Obama. Trump skipped a meeting on climate change during last weekend's G7 summit in France and said he would not let "dreams" undermine U.S. dominance in fossil fuel production. The new report by Glocalities, which canvassed views worldwide, showed the number of U.S. Republicans who said they "agreed" or "strongly agreed" with the statement "I worry about the damage humans cause the planet" rose by 11 percentage points to 58% between 2014 and 2019. The number of Republican voters aged 18-34 who are worried about the issue rose by 18 percentage points to 67%, said the poll, which also showed a 10 percentage point increase among all U.S. Republicans who said they tried "to live eco-consciously".

TRUMP SEEKS TO ROLL BACK METHANE REGS: The Trump administration will seek to roll back rules limiting methane pollution from oil and gas production, gutting a regulation put in place under President Barack Obama that was designed to curb emissions of the powerful greenhouse gas (Politico). The move is the latest by the Trump administration to eliminate rules designed to fight climate change — even as rising temperatures made July the hottest month on record, accelerated Arctic ice melting and intensified forest fires around the globe. The new proposal released on Thursday by the Environmental Protection Agency is also notable in that it is opposed by many oil and gas producers that it is designed to help by easing requirements on leaks of methane, the main component of natural gas, from their oil and gas equipment.

MENACING HURRICANE DORIAN TAKING AIM AT FLA: Florida residents picked the shelves clean of bottled water and lined up at gas stations Thursday as an increasingly menacing-looking Hurricane Dorian threatened to broadside the state over Labor Day weekend (AP). Leaving lighter-than-expected damage in its wake in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, the second hurricane of the 2019 season swirled toward the U.S., with forecasters warning it will draw energy from the warm, open waters as it closes in. The National Hurricane Center said the Category 2 storm is expected to strengthen into a potentially catastrophic Category 4 with winds of 130 mph (209 kph) and slam into the U.S. on Monday somewhere between the Florida Keys and southern Georgia — a 500-mile (805-kilometer) stretch that reflected the high degree of uncertainty this far out. Models this morning are showing the hurricane taking aim at south Florida.

ADAMS, AZAR MAKE MARIJUANA WARNING: Federal health officials issued a national warning Thursday against marijuana use by adolescents and pregnant women, as more states legalize the increasingly potent drug for medicinal and recreational use (AP). Health and Human Services Secretary Alex Azar and Surgeon General Jerome Adams made the announcement, with Azar calling marijuana "a dangerous drug." Officials said President Donald Trump has donated $100,000 — one-quarter of his annual government salary — toward a digital campaign to raise awareness of the risks. Trump has forgone his official salary since taking office. The warning comes as legal marijuana has grown into a $10-billion industry in the U.S. with nearly two-thirds of states legalizing it, mainly for medical uses. Adams said science shows that marijuana is harmful to the developing brains of teenagers and to the human fetus. The drug has also gotten stronger, with a three-fold increase in the concentration of the active ingredient THC in cultivated plants over the last 20 years. "This ain't your mother's marijuana," Adams said.

HISTORICAL MARKER FOR RYAN WHITE TO BE PLACED TODAY: More than 30 years after he was diagnosed with AIDS, the Ryan White State Historical Marker will be placed, forever recognizing the impact he made that continues decades later in a ceremony today (CBS4). "Ryan needs to be remembered not only because of his life but because of what he taught us," said Dan Smith, who is on the committee to bring the marker and a former teacher of White's. "Not only to honor Ryan and Jeannie and the White family but to honor the communities that welcomed the White family." Others, like former classmate Jeff Beechler, who now teaches at Hamilton Heights, were also part of the group effort to honor the teen who so bravely touched so many. "When Ryan came he wasn't trying to teach a lesson, he was trying to be a kid," said Beechler. "I don't know if he realized the lesson he was teaching us at the time." Threats of violence forced his family from their life in Kokomo, and they moved to the Arcadia area. In 1987, Ryan was welcomed with open arms at Hamilton Heights High School. He died in April 1990, one month before he would have graduated. The ceremony takes place at 9 a.m. at the high school. The event is free but tickets are required.

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: The Todd Meyer saga becomes another example of botched crisis communications. His departure was abrupt and lacking the normal comments for someone simply moving into a better job opportunity. That's why HPI pressed the administration for an explanation several weeks ago and received a statement that failed to reveal the nature of Meyer's departure. It took the Holcomb administration six weeks to acknowledge the real reason of Meyer's departure. The problem with that is DCS has been the highest profile agency in this administration following the abrupt departure of former director Mary Beth Bonaventura in December 2017. Gov. Holcomb received high marks for ordering a study and acting on its conclusions with significant financial resources. Meyer was a key official in implementing the new policies. This case, along with problems at the Veterans Affairs office that resulted in the resignation of Jim Brown and the Indiana National Guard after the sudden resignation of Gen. Courtney Carr now represent a trend that will become a topic in the coming gubernatorial election. - Brian A. Howey

HOGSETT, MERRITT DEBATE: Candidates for Indianapolis mayor used their first debate of the race to lay out their plans for regionalism and tackling Indianapolis' road problems (Quinn, IBJ). The debate was the first of 2019 between Indianapolis Mayor Joe Hogsett, a Democrat, and longtime state Sen. Jim Merritt, a Republican. The candidates disagreed strongly on a topic of upmost importance to voters: how to pay for fixing and maintaining the city's 8,000 miles of roads. Hogsett earlier this year introduced a regional plan that pools future income tax revenue from a nine-county area to pay for infrastructure improvements throughout the region. Mayors in cities surrounding Indianapolis—particularly those in Hamilton County—have balked at the idea, saying the plan unfairly creates winners and losers. Thursday night, Hogsett defended his plan, saying he believes his idea is a compelling one and provides a solution without creating a new tax, such as a commuter tax, which also has been an unpopular proposal. He wants to see his plan "fully vetted" but said he's open to discussing other ideas. "The truth is every day nearly 200,000 people get up and drive into Indianapolis from outside of our county," Hogsett said. "They go to work, and when they drive home that night, they take their income tax home with them. That is fundamentally unfair to the residents of Marion County." Merritt has proposed adding optional toll lanes on commuter-heavy roads such Binford Boulevard and Fall Creek Parkway. The toll lanes would give drivers traveling downtown from the suburbs an express lane if they are willing to pay for it. Thursday night, he said the toll lanes could create new funding to help address the city's infrastructure problems. "I see that as a real possibility for the future of our infrastructure," he said.

HOGSETT, MERRITT DISCUSS POVERTY: Both candidates agreed poverty is an issue facing the city, where 20 percent of the population is affected by it. Sen. Merritt said it's important to discuss food deserts and food insecurity when talking about poverty (IBJ). He was critical of Mayor Hogsett's plan to combat food insecurity in Indianapolis, which involves using public funds to transport people to grocery stores via Lyft. Merritt called for a "robust" program in which food is delivered to people's homes, saying "Lyft is decaying neighborhoods." He also proposed the idea of creating a food tax increment financing district to help those who are struggling. Meanwhile, Hogsett said quality education is the ticket to pulling people from poverty. He touted his Indy Achieves Promise Scholarship, a new program sponsored by the city that provides financial aid to low-income students from Marion County who attend IUPUI or Ivy Tech.

MAYOR HENRY LANDS LABOR ENDORSEMENT: The Northeast Indiana AFL-CIO announced Thursday it has endorsed Fort Wayne Mayor Tom Henry for re-election (Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). The third-term Democratic mayor is challenged by Republican Tim Smith in the city's Nov. 5 municipal election. The organized labor organization endorsed nine other Democratic candidates in the Fort Wayne election: Katie Zuber for city clerk, Misti Meehan for 1st District City Council; John Henry Jr. for 3rd District City Council; Patti Hays for 4th District City Council; 5th District City Councilman Geoff Paddock; Sharon Tucker for 6th District City Council; and Michelle Chambers, Steve Corona and Glynn Hines for City Council at-large seats.

BUTTIGIEG WAS RISING; THEN CAME THE POLICE CONTROVERSY: On a Tuesday in March, just after Pete Buttigieg began to catch fire with Democrats nationally, he flew home for his final State of the City address. Mr. Buttigieg, the two-term mayor, drew more than 40 rounds of applause as he described the "comeback decade" in South Bend, pointing to new businesses and apartments downtown and the demolition of hundreds of blighted houses (New York Times). He had far less to say about his city's police department: He devoted nearly as much time to it as he did to South Bend's "smart sewers." But out of the spotlight, public safety was about to get worse. Reports of violent crime increased nearly 18 percent during the first seven months of 2019 compared to the same period in 2018. The number of people being shot has also risen markedly this year, after dropping last year. The city's violent crime rate is double the average for American cities its size. Policing problems in South Bend came to national attention on June 16, when a white sergeant fatally shot a 54-year-old black resident, Eric Logan. The officer's body camera was not turned on, which was widely seen as a sign of lax standards in the department. Mr. Buttigieg found himself flying home again, regularly, to face the fury of some black citizens and the frustrations of many others. It is the great paradox of Mr. Buttigieg's presidential candidacy: His record on public safety and policing, once largely a footnote in his political biography, has overshadowed his economic record in South Bend, which he had spent years developing as a calling card for higher office.

PENCE SAYS TRUMP WILL DEFEND AGAINST SOCIALISM: Defending the American dream and preserving our system of government for future generations is a top priority for Vice President Mike Pence heading into the 2020 election. While visiting Indianapolis this week to deliver an address at the American Legion Convention, the Vice President offered his thoughts to WIBC host Tony Katz on recent polling that revealed an increase in the number of young Americans who support Socialism (WIBC). "Ronald Reagan very famously said that freedom is never more than one generation away from extinction [and] it is the duty of every American generation to preserve freedom," said Pence. "And that's why I've said many times all across the country that it's not going to be enough for us to win the next the election, we have to win the next generation. Openly advocating Socialism in the United States is something I never thought I'd live to see. And it gives you an idea of how incredibly far left the modern Democratic Party has gone."

BIDEN BOTCHES MILITARY STORY: Joe Biden painted a vivid scene for the 400 people packed into a college meeting hall. A four-star general had asked the then-vice president to travel to Kunar province in Afghanistan, a dangerous foray into

"godforsaken country" to recognize the remarkable heroism of a Navy captain (Washington Post). The Navy captain, Biden recalled Friday night, had rappelled down a 60-foot ravine under fire and retrieved the body of an American comrade, carrying him on his back. Now the general wanted Biden to pin a Silver Star on the American hero who, despite his bravery, felt like a failure. "He said, 'Sir, I don't want the damn thing!'" Biden said, his jaw clenched and his voice rising to a shout. "Do not pin it on me, Sir! Please, Sir. Do not do that! He died. He died!" The room was silent. "This is the God's truth," Biden had said as he told the story. "My word as a Biden." Except almost every detail in the story appears to be incorrect. Based on interviews with more than a dozen U.S. troops, their commanders and Biden campaign officials, it appears as though the former vice president has jumbled elements of at least three actual events into one story of bravery, compassion and regret that never happened.

Congress

WALORSKI, AG OFFICIALS RENEW CALL FOR USMCA PASSAGE: There seems to be a strong consensus in the Indiana agricultural community about the need for a new trade deal with Mexico and Canada (Semmler, South Bend Tribune). At least those were the feelings dominating a meeting Thursday morning organized by U.S. Rep. Jackie Walorski at the Lichtenbarger farm at 25345 Brick Road on the northeast side of the city. One after another — those producing pork, poultry, eggs, feed, biofuels, dairy, corn, soybeans, and many other agricultural products — spoke of the need for the passage of the United States-Mexico-Canada Agreement or USMCA. The agreement, sometimes referred to as NAFTA 2.0, was worked out between the three countries last year but requires legislative approval. "I'm confident it's going to move with majorities on both sides," Walorski said in a brief news conference prior to a roundtable discussion in a cleared-out machine shed at the farm. "The only person who actually knows when USMCA is actually coming down is House Speaker Nancy Pelosi and we really want to send the signal to her — just bring the bill down." Ted McKinney, the USDA under secretary for trade and foreign agricultural affairs, said the USMCA agreement will provide a lot of relief for agriculture, which has been especially hard hit by tariff battles as well as bad weather.

State

GOVERNOR: TOBACCO ADVOCATES COMMENT ON STUDY - Gov. Eric Holcomb and State Health Commissioner Dr. Kristina Box released data from the state's annual youth tobacco survey that revealed tobacco use among young people continues to increase. Bryan Hannon, chair of Raise It for Health, released the following statement in response: "It's deeply troubling to hear that tobacco rates among Hoosier youth continue to increase. Unfortunately, this is yet another sign that tobacco companies continue to successfully target our kids and draw them into a lifetime of addiction. What's particularly striking is that one in five Hoosier high schoolers use tobacco, which mirrors our statewide adult smoking rate. This is little surprise considering Indiana's lawmakers have failed time and time again to pass policies that address the state's tobacco epidemic. The initiatives announced today are a step in the right direction, but more must be done if we are to protect the next generation from a lifetime of tobacco addiction."

STATEHOUSE: McCORMICK PRESSES FOR ILEARN PAUSE - With ILEARN results disappointing parents and schools across the state, Superintendent of Public Instruction Jennifer McCormick on Wednesday said she wants the General Assembly to take action so that the scores do not penalize schools or put them one step closer to a potential state takeover (Sentel, Statehouse File). McCormick said she'll also ask lawmakers to give the State Board of Education emergency rule-making power to address these types of issues going forward. "We know there is frustration with the ILEARN for this year," the first year that the new ILEARN test has been administered, McCormick said. "Although those implementation results were expected they can be very, very difficult," she said. "We are hopeful that our General Assembly will take a hard look at our state accountability system and address some of those concerns so a year from now we're not having the same conversation."

STATEHOUSE: HILL HOLDS CRIME FORUM IN TERRE HAUTE - Good things are happening in west Central Indiana to prevent crime and improve communities, Indiana Attorney General Curtis Hill said Thursday after getting input from area leaders during a forum in Terre Haute (Trigg, Terre Haute Tribune-Star). The event was Hill's latest stop on a 14-city tour across the state to talk about the challenges in communities and what is working, or not working, in crime prevention. "The good news is there's lots of things that we heard in here that this particular area of Indiana is doing correctly," Hill said following the morning forum. "Programming, engaging in youth and providing them with effective mentorship. So we are very encouraged by that. But we did hear that this like other areas of the state has a major substance abuse issue. Methamphetamine is alive and well in many of the areas that surround Vigo County."

HEALTH: STATE STARTS ANTI-VAPING AD CAMPAIGN - Indiana has launched an anti-vaping campaign. The State Department of Health has kicked off a two-million-dollar youth-focused ad blitz on both traditional and social media, warning of health dangers of e-cigarettes (WIBC). Health commissioner Kristina Box says e-cigarette manufacturers have targeted the youth market, both with their choice of vape flavorings and their ad campaigns on social media. She says the state needs to respond on the same turf. 200 severe respiratory illnesses among e-cigarette users, including 24 in Indiana, have raised worries about health risks from vaping. That's out of thousands of vapers, and Box concedes a link between vaping and those illnesses hasn't been firmly established.

DOC: 2 INMATES KILLED BY PRISONERS AT MIAMI - Two Miami Correctional Facility inmates are now facing Level 1 felony charges of murder after separate incidents inside the prison this summer (Gerber, Kokomo Tribune). According to an Indiana State Police press release, police on May 19 investigated the death of prison inmate Richard Carrell, 56, whose body was found in his C Unit cell by a correctional officer. An autopsy ruled the cause of death to be suffocation by strangulation, the release stated, and further investigation into the incident led police to arrest Michael Parrish, 42, who was Carrell's cellmate, and who is currently serving several years in prison for a violent 2014 home invasion, according to the Indiana Department of Correction. Then on June 10, ISP detectives also investigated the death of prison inmate Lannie Morgan, 70, who was found not breathing in his I Unit cell. Morgan was taken to Dukes Memorial Hospital in Peru, where he later died from what an autopsy ruled was suffocation due to smothering, the release noted. Police later arrested fellow inmate Phillip Sadler, 53, in connection to Morgan's death. Sadler was not a cellmate of Morgan's but did reside in the same unit.

DNR: PUBLIC HELP SOUGHT IN SEARCH FOR BOY SWEEP AWAY - Indiana conservation officers are seeking the public's help in their ongoing search for a 4-year-old boy swept away by high waters in May. Owen Jones is presumed dead after getting caught in Deer Creek's rain-swollen current on May 23 during a family outing at a park in Delphi, about 60 miles northwest of Indianapolis. Conservation officer Lt. Dan Dulin tells the Journal & Courier he's urging people using Deer Creek and the Wabash River, about three miles (5 kilometers) downstream, to look for signs of the Monticello (mahn-tuh-SEL'-oh) boy and to report anything they see to police.

VETERANS: NEW CLINIC WON'T BE BUILT IN KOKOMO - The new Veterans Affairs clinic set to be constructed to replace the current facility in Peru will not be built in Howard County, according to Howard County Commissioner Paul Wyman (Gerber, Kokomo Tribune). Wyman said Howard County and Kokomo had originally been considered as a potential site for the clinic, which will add more staff and services compared to the Peru clinic, which can service around 3,000 veterans. He said several "exciting" locations in Howard County were submitted to the VA for consideration that could have been easily accessed from surrounding counties. At the same time, Wyman said, those locations would have been closer to a much larger population of veterans in Howard County, which has one of most veterans per capita in Indiana. However, Howard County was removed as a potential site once congressional leaders discovered moving it from Miami County would cross a U.S. congressional district line, he said. The Howard-Miami county line is the border between the 2nd, 4th and 5th districts. It is unclear why that issue factored into a location for the clinic, but officials say it has to do with "politics."

EDUCATION: DEAN LEFSTEIN DIES AT AGE 82 - Norman Lefstein, dean emeritus of Indiana University Robert H. McKinney School of Law and renowned legal scholar in the fields of criminal justice, indigent defense and professional responsibility, died Thursday. He was 82 (Indiana Lawyer). Lefstein was the longest serving dean in IU McKinney's history, leading the Indianapolis law school from Jan. 1, 1988, until June 30, 2002. He is credited with increasing the financial support for faculty research and promoting the expansion of the clinics, internships and pro bono opportunities for students. Also, Lefstein spearheaded the fundraising and planning for the law school's $37 million building, Lawrence W. Inlow Hall. The three-story structure, which stands on the IUPUI campus, was dedicated in 2001. "Norm was a wonderful person and transformational leader for our law school and the legal community," IU McKinney Dean Andrew Klein said in a statement.

EDUCATION: PRAISE FOR THE LATE DEAN LEFSTEIN - The Chair and Vice Chair of the Indiana Public Defender Commission released the following statements in tribute to the accomplishments of Norman Lefstein, Indiana University McKinney Professor of Law and Dean Emeritus (Howey Politics Indiana). Lefstein served for 17-years as the Chair of the Commission, having been appointed by two Governors. He recently served as a Special Advisor to the Indiana Task Force on Public Defense. "Norm Lefstein was truly a giant among men in the legal community. Countless Hoosiers have benefitted from his visionary leadership in the creation of quality standards for public defense in Indiana. Our state and the nation owe him a great debt for devoting his considerable legal mind and generous spirit to the cause of public service," said Mark Rutherford, chair, Indiana Public Defender Commission. Larry Landis of the Indiana Public Defender Commission said, "Norm's legal legacy is vast, with over 45-years as a distinguished author and scholar, a key leader in the American Bar Association, a respected educator, and an expert witness on criminal defense and legal ethics. He was also a friend, mentor, and inspiration to me and many others in the criminal defense and public policy community."

HISTORY: BROWN COUNTY PHOTOGRAPHER HOHENBERGER HONORED - A photographer known for capturing snapshots of Brown County history is now making history himself (Indiana Public Media). A group gathered outside The Nashville House Thursday afternoon to unveil a state historical marker for Frank Hohenberger. The Indiana Historical Bureau, Peaceful Valley Heritage Preservation and the Brown County Community Foundation worked together to secure the marker. It celebrates Hohenberger's contributions to Indiana, where he captured thousands of photos.

AGRICULTURE: MCKINNEY PUSHES USMCA PASSAGE - As weather and trade issues make 2019 a difficult year for many Indiana farmers, a U.S. agriculture official with strong ties to the state says the proposed replacement for the North American Free Trade Agreement would bring something the farm economy desperately needs: stability (Dick, Inside Indiana Business). "We think it's going to be a great deal for all of our farmers, and particularly (Indiana) with our proximity to Canada," said Ted McKinney, a former Director of the Indiana State Department of Agriculture who is currently serving as U.S. Undersecretary of Agriculture for Trade and Foreign Agricultural Affairs. McKinney says the United States-Canada-Mexico Agreement will provide greater market access for Hoosier ag products, including the state's substantial dairy industry. The USMCA was signed by President Trump, Mexican President Enrique Peña Nieto and Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau in November 2018 during the G20 Summit in Buenos Aires.

SPORTS: NFL PURDUE ALUM COMES OUT AS BISEXUAL - Ryan Russell shares a lot in common with many N.F.L. players: the grueling off-season training rituals documented on Instagram, the competitive fire and, yes, a nagging injury that kept him sidelined for all of last season. But Russell, a free-agent defensive end and Purdue graduate, said in an interview on Thursday night that he was holding something back: He is bisexual. Earlier in the day, Russell opened up about his sexual orientation in a personal essay published by ESPN (New York Times). Russell, 27, who has played for the Dallas Cowboys and Tampa Bay Buccaneers, is the only male athlete in the four major professional sports leagues to openly identify as L.G.B.T.Q. "It's so much better than hiding and holding it in and just kind of repressing myself," Russell said by phone. "I think the N.F.L. is definitely ready to accept an openly L.G.B.T.Q. player."

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP POSTPONES POLAND TRIP DUE TO HURRICANE - President Donald Trump has canceled his trip to Poland as Hurricane Dorian barrels toward Florida (AP). Trump says it's "very important" for him to be in Washington to deal with the storm, adding, "Our highest priority is the safety and security of the American people in the path of the hurricane." Trump had been scheduled to depart for Warsaw Saturday for a visit to commemorate the 80th anniversary of World War II. He says he'll be sending Vice President Mike Pence in his place. He says he delivered the news to Polish President Andrzej Duda earlier Thursday and plans to reschedule the trip in the "near future."

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP LAUNCHES SPACE COMMAND - President Donald Trump announced Thursday the official establishment of the US military's Space Command (CNN). "Those who wish to harm the United States, to seek to challenge us on the ultimate high ground of space, it's going to be a whole different ballgame," Trump said at a White House ceremony marking the command's establishment. Space Command will become the 11th combatant command, joining the ranks of US Central Command, which oversees operations in the Middle East, and US Special Operations Command, which oversees Special Operations Forces.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP PERSONAL ASSISTANT OUT OVER BREACH - President Trump's personal assistant, Madeleine Westerhout, whose office sits in front of the Oval Office and who has served as the president's gatekeeper since Day 1 of his administration, resigned on Thursday, two people familiar with her exit said (New York Times). Ms. Westerhout's abrupt and unexpected departure came after Mr. Trump learned on Thursday that she had indiscreetly shared details about his family and the Oval Office operations she was part of at a recent off-the-record dinner with reporters staying at hotels near Bedminster, N.J., during the president's working vacation, according to one of the people, speaking on the condition of anonymity to discuss White House personnel issues. The breach of trust meant immediate action: Ms. Westerhout, one of the people familiar with her departure said, was now considered a 'separated employee' and would not be allowed to return to the White House on Friday.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP/PENCE SCHEDULE - President Trump has canceled his trip to Poland this weekend as Florida braces for a potentially massive hurricane. Trump will go to Camp David. VP Mike Pence will travel to Poland in Trump's place. Hurricane Dorian is taking aim on a track that could potentially take it to Trump's Mar-A-Lago estate. The president will have lunch with Secretary of State Mike Pompeo at 12:30 p.m. today in the private dining room. He will leave the White House at 5:30 p.m. en route to Camp David.

FBI: IG REPORT SAYS COMEY VIOLATED POLICY - Former FBI director James B. Comey violated FBI policies in how he handled memos that detailed his controversial interactions with President Trump, setting a "dangerous example" for bureau employees about substituting personal righteousness for established rules, the Justice Department's internal watchdog found in a report released Thursday (Washington Post). The inspector general criticized Comey for keeping the government documents at his home, engineering the release of some of their contents to the news media and not telling the bureau to whom he had given them — even after he was aware that some contained classified information. Comey told investigators that he felt the memos were personal and that he was acting in the best interests of the country. But the inspector general rejected that defense, writing that Comey's senior FBI leaders all agreed the memos were government documents, and that the former director's "own, personal conception of what was necessary was not an appropriate basis for ignoring the policies and agreements governing the use of FBI records."

USDA: PERDUE URGES FARMERS TO 'KEEP ON KEEPIN' ON' - At the Farm Progress Show in Decatur, IL, Ag Secretary Sonny Perdue took the stage and took a phone call from President Trump. Via speakerphone, Trump touted the advancements in trade with Japan over the weekend and told the crowd that he could make a deal with China right now and potentially be considered a hero, but he'd rather get a deal that's good for farmers instead of just a quick one (Hoosier Ag Today). Perdue was asked during a media session if he felt like farmer support for President Trump and his administration was waning. "What I really find is the media trying to go out and discover that one person or two people that don't like it and focus their media discussions and reports on those...Is it waning? Are people anxious still? Are people hopeful and ready for a solution? Absolutely, but I wouldn't say it's waning." Perdue said farmers are resilient, patient, and real patriots. Despite all of the trade issues we're currently facing, "These are people that just keep on keepin' on."

JUSTICE: PURDUE OPIOID DEAL GETTING PUSHBACK - A proposed deal for Purdue Pharma LP to resolve more than 2,000 lawsuits over its role in the opioid crisis is facing pushback from a vocal group of state attorneys general who say it doesn't bring in enough cash to satisfy their demands, according to people familiar with the matter (Wall Street Journal). Virtually every state, in addition to thousands of cities and counties across the U.S., sued Purdue, claiming the company's aggressive promotion of its painkiller OxyContin helped trigger an addiction epidemic.

CITIES: CENTRAL AVENUE BRIDGE TO REOPEN FRIDAY - The Central Avenue bridge over Fall Creek is set to reopen after being closed for more than two years (WIBC). Indy DPW said the bridge will be open in time for the drive home Friday afternoon. The bridge closed for renovation in the spring of 2017 and was originally supposed to open that winter.

CITIES: IRSAY SELLING ZIONSVILLE MANSION - Indianapolis Colts owner Jim Irsay put a $2.5 million mansion, along with a neighboring $1.5 million property, up for sale (WRTV). The 11,710-square-foot home at 3863 Willow Brook Lane in Zionsville was listed for sale in late July and sits on 16 acres that include a pond, creek and woods. The house, which was built in 1993, has been completely remodeled and features seven bedrooms, eight-and-a-half bathrooms, a basement and a wet bar, according to the listing by Century 21 Sheetz agent Stephen Decatur.

COUNTIES: SULLIVAN LAST COUNTY TO GET E-FILING - Hamilton County was the first, Sullivan County the last, but now all 92 Indiana counties and all three appellate courts have electronic filing in court cases. Hamilton County implemented the system in 2015 and Sullivan County joined this month (Parker, Inside Indiana Business). E-filing is included in the Court's plan to help bring efficiency to courts across the state. Supreme Court staff train and support judges, clerks, staff and attorneys who use the system. A state-offered provider is free and ten commercial providers also are available to train. Nearly 17 million documents had been e-filed as of June 30, 2019. A statewide e-filing celebration is scheduled for Noon Wednesday, September 4 at the Sullivan County Courthouse. Chief Justice Loretta Rush, Justice Steven David, Judge Paul Mathias and others will gather at the courthouse to celebrate the milestone.

COUNTIES: HARRISON EARNS WORK READY CERTIFICATION - Harrison County has officially become a certified ACT Work Ready Community. Representatives from the county's education and economic development sectors underwent an extensive training to bolster the area's work readiness initiatives in an effort to earn the designation (McLaughlin, Inside Indiana Business). County leaders attended the ACT Work Ready Communities Boot Camp, which aims to prepare officials to implement and develop effective techniques to support the workforce needs. The ACT Work Ready Communities initiative empowers states, regions and counties with data, processes and tools that drive economic growth by identifying skills gaps and quantifying the skill level of their workforce. "We at the Indiana Department of Workforce Development applaud Harrison County's efforts in becoming a certified ACT Work Ready Community," DWD Commissioner Fred Payne said in a news release. "The certification helps to provide counties with the data they require in their efforts to recruit companies and provide them with a productive workforce that meets their needs."

INDIANA EDUCATION INSIGHT

When will we ever ILEARN?

Absolute carnage on school letter grades without “hold harmless”

The Governor announced August 26 that he'll ask the General Assembly to suspend accountability for schools and teachers in the wake of a dramatic decline in student test scores on the new ILEARN assessment administered for the first time earlier this Spring. House and Senate Republican leaders instantly responded with prepared public statements endorsing the Governor's proposal, and the state superintendent of public instruction also voiced support for enacting “hold harmless” legislation during the 2020 session. In short, everyone is on board with an accommodation that would ensure, in an election year, that the decline in test scores does not negatively impact teacher pay.

The K-12 system is still trying to recover from the 20 percentage-point decline in scores that occurred in 2014-15, the first year of implementation of college- and career-ready standards and assessments. ILEARN results are to be released to the public September 4 at the State Board of Education meeting . . . but you should not be surprised to see statewide passing rates down by 10 percentage points or more.

After the 2014-15 drop, scores were widely expected to rebound as the system adjusted to higher expectations and educators became comfortable with new standards and a new test format. But scores have only worsened over time.

Superintendent of Public Instruction Jennifer McCormick (R) held a press conference August 28 and publicly outlined three legislative asks for 2020. First, freeze school letter grades, unless a school's letter grade goes up. Second, pause the intervention timeline that allows the state to intervene in schools with four consecutive F grades. Third, direct the State Board of Education to initiate emergency rulemaking to diversify the state accountability formula.

Dr. McCormick's third proposal assumes this newest downturn is more than a temporary blip.

State accountability grades based on ILEARN will be calculated in the same way they have for the past three cycles. For elementary and middle schools, 50% is based on performance, and 50% is based on growth. Because there are no non-testing indicators, the dismal ILEARN results would prove devastating to the A-F grade distribution without a hold harmless safety net.

Last year schools received two sets of letter grades – one set based on the formula in State Board of Education rule, and the other pursuant to the methodology in Indiana's Every Student Succeeds Act (ESSA) plan.

This year, federal accountability placements will not be in the form of letter grades. The Indiana Department of Education amended the state's ESSA plan to begin assigning schools one of four federal ratings: exceeds expectations, meets expectations, approaches expectations, or does not meet expectations. The federal accountability placements are based on a formula that contains five indicators: performance, growth, growth for the lowest performing subgroup, attendance, and non-native speaker English language proficiency.

Because of the inclusion of non-testing indicators, the federal placements (which had been targeted for November) should be more stable.

IDOE will make a big push in 2020 to unify the state and federal accountability systems. IDOE prefers the more holistic federal framework.

ISTA exits trusteeship early

Growing base helps restore financial health

Following several years of membership growth and stable financial health, the National Education Association has released the Indiana State Teachers Association from trusteeship ahead of schedule.

“This is a big deal and great news for members of ISTA,” explains President Keith Gambill. “With the support of our members, we have come a long way in a short amount of time.”

In May 2009, the national organization assumed control of ISTA operations and installed its own acting chief executive officer to address a financial crisis that began with the ISTA Insurance Trust and spread to ISTA and its related organizations.

The Insurance Trust lost tens of millions of dollars due to inappropriate investments and mismanagement of assets. The State of Indiana settled with ISTA and investment banks for $14 million, funds distributed to 27 school districts around the state that lost assets in the morass.

The Trust designed and managed medical and disability benefit programs – some of which the State considered as unregistered securities – that Indiana school corporations adopted for their employees.

The School Accountability Panel held its second public meeting on August 22 and will deliver recommendations by November 1 on revising the high school accountability formula. Additional performance indicators under consideration by the panel look at how students fare after graduation: Did they need college remediation? Did they earn a credential? Have they obtained gainful employment? The Indiana Department of Education is not participating on the Panel . . . and was not invited to have a seat at the table.

Lawmakers enacted a hold harmless measure in 2016 when test scores tumbled in the first year of the transition to a more rigorous system of standards and assessments. SEA 200-2016 provided that the A-F grade of a school or district may not be lower than the grade assigned in the previous year. HEA 1003-2016 ensured that the downturn in performance would not prevent teachers from qualifying for a pay raise. The 2016 bills sailed through the legislative process with overwhelming bipartisan support and were signed into law by then-Gov. Mike Pence (R) less than one month after session began.

Here's what Governor Eric Holcomb (R) said in his statement:

"The results of the 2018-19 ILEARN proficiency test are scheduled to be released next week. The results will show a decrease compared to the previously administered ISTEP+ test. Since this is the first year of the ILEARN assessment, I will ask Superintendent McCormick to support my request that the General Assembly take action to hold schools harmless so the test scores do not have an adverse impact on teacher evaluations and schools' letter grades for the 2018-19 school year. This action will ease the transition to ILEARN, which is a student assessment that allows Indiana to comply with federal ESSA requirements."

ILEARN is the fourth new test over the past 10 years. The narrative around the new test and its Computer Adaptive Format started out positive but has gone south.

School corporations made contributions to the Trust using public revenues, and the Trust held and invested the funds and handled claims to pay benefits to school corporation employees as needed.

A decade ago, we brought you some of the most detailed inside coverage of the legal, financial, and political quagmire – and the attendant state investigation led by the Indiana Department of Insurance and Office of the Secretary of State (as well as the NEA-led ISTA seeking compensation from some of its former officials and consultants).

The short story was that misleading marketing, inappropriate sales tactics, personal aggrandizement, and mismanagement of assets pushed the Insurance Trust to the brink of collapse.

The State alleged that ISTA then used the money from the health plans for their own benefit to cover funding shortfalls in their long-term disability plan. This meant the money was never invested on the school's behalf to offset future health care costs as was promised. The State also alleged that ISTA continuously issued phony financial statements to schools misrepresenting investment fund balances.

With finances back on solid ground, ISTA can afford to offer a wider range of programs and services that make membership more attractive, such as conferences and professional development opportunities for license renewal.

"The fact that the NEA has chosen to release ISTA from trusteeship years earlier than expected demonstrates ISTA's growing membership and responsible stewardship of our members investment in the Association," says Gambill.

- Carmel Clay Schools receives notification from Pearson Clinical Assessment of a student data breach that included student first and last names and in some cases, date of birth. The incident was not a breach of the CCS system. Pearson does not have any evidence that any information has been misused, but as a precaution, the company will be providing the option to enroll in a complimentary one-year membership with Experian's Identity Works SM.

- The Indiana Department of Education reports that 48% of Indiana school districts (182 districts) provide 1:1 technology at every grade level, up from 41% (156 districts) in 2018.

- Edmentum (157 districts) is Indiana's most popular virtual course provider, according to IDOE survey data, followed by Apex Learning (81) and Edgenuity (59). Google Classroom (169 districts) is the market leader among Learning Management Systems, followed by Canvas (100), Schoology (27), and Blackboard (16). Powerschool (162 districts) has the largest market share among Student Information Systems, beating out Harmony (77), Skyward (66), Chalkable (16), and Synergy (13).

- 28% of districts do not currently include any money in their budget for cybersecurity.

- 16 districts across the state meet the broadband access standard established by the State Educational Technology Directors Association (SETDA) of at least 1 Gbps per 1,000 students/staff. Wi-Fi access is now available in 99.2% of Indiana schools.

- The Elkhart Community Schools will be fully 1:1 at all grade levels once the final three elementary schools distribute iPads to students come January.

- Mapping State Proficiency Standards Onto the NAEP Scales, a new report from the National Center for Education Statistics based on state assessment results from the 2016-17 school year and the 2017 results from the National Assessment of Educational Progress, finds that Indiana has the fifth-lowest grade four reading standards, the tenth-lowest grade four math standards, the ninth-lowest grade eight reading standards, and the seventh-lowest grade eight math standards.

- A poll of 400 likely Marion County voters by Mason Strategies for Indy Politics (08/11-14; 42% D, 27% R, 26% I; margin of error ± 4.9 percentage points) finds 57% of Republicans, 51% of independents, and 44% of Democrats believe that Marion County schools are on the wrong track.

- Support for school choice was found to be highest among Republicans (64%), Independents (56%), and Blacks (60%). Democrats were evenly split on school choice, with 48% supporting and 48% in opposition.

- South Bend's WNDU-TV tells viewers that even though ILEARN scores were ready to be shared with parents August 15, "it's likely you haven't seen your student's results yet, and here's why Each results report is four to eight pages long. In the South Bend school system, there are about 18,000 students that would need those results sent to them. It will cost a pretty penny to print all those out. So, the school district is waiting until the state mails out hard copies in the middle of September, and those copies will then be mailed to parents."

- A noxious odor that sent several students and staff to the hospital caused the Eastern Greene School Corporation to shut down its buildings in an abundance of caution and summon the local Hazmat Team to investigate. Students were kept out of class for one whole day while testing was conducted. Officials initially suspected a laminator in a poorly ventilated room but later blamed the inadvertent release of chemical pepper spray by an unidentified adult. In a Facebook post after the ordeal ended, the district said it would send "a notice with directives to all staff requiring that anyone carrying the chemical pepper spray into a school building must either maintain possession of the chemical on their person in a place that is inaccessible to students or secure it in a locked drawer or cabinet that is inaccessible to students."

IN Administration . . .

- One school corporation that installed cameras on school bus stop arms over the Summer now finds itself stuck in the middle of a jurisdictional tug-of-war between the county sheriff and municipal police department over which entity should be responsible for processing stop arm violations.

- Dr. Lee Ann Kwiatkowski, the new CEO and director of public education at Muncie Community Schools, endeared herself to MCS teachers when she announced at a school board meeting Tuesday night that the district will reallocate some $900,000 in federal dollars to purchase 535 new Dell laptop computers for faculty and staff, new smartboards for classrooms, and extra Chromebooks for students. Dr. K said that during her initial rounds of MCS facilities, she noticed that many of the machines used by teachers were more than five years old, and posed issues in allowing the educators to effectively teach and work with their students.

- The Muncie Star Press writes that the new technology "acquisitions are being funded with what the superintendent called 'carry-over funds' from last year's Title 1 program dollars. Title 1 is federal funding to support school districts that have large concentrations of low-income students. 'Typically, Title 1 does not like to support a lot of equipment with the funds, but this year they gave us a special exception and we were able to submit an amendment,' Kwiatkowski said."

- MCS teachers were already pleased that they had been recognized by the school board in July with the first pay increase in eight years, and a bump in starting salaries.

IN Budgets & Finance . . .

- S&P Global Ratings places the Daleville Community School Corporation on 90-day CreditWatch with negative implications in reaction to the potential liability associated with the district's role as sponsor for the Indiana Virtual charter schools. The State Board of Accounts determination that Indiana Virtual was overpaid by $47 million in state aid over three years due to overstated pupil counts implies that the amount of administrative monitoring fees that Daleville collected from the charter schools was similarly inflated.

- During the 90-day CreditWatch period, S&P will review the district's liquidity position and financial control and oversight practices. "There is a one-in-two chance that we could take a negative rating action following the review," according to the agency.

- The Madison-Grand United School Corporation stirs up a commotion with its proposal to reorganize the elementary schools located in Summitville and Fairmount, designating one for preschool through second grade and the other for grades three through six.

- The Merrillville School Corporation and other local government units in Lake County "could be required to refund Southlake Mall a total of $7.9 million in past taxes and interest following a state tax review board decision," reports the Gary Post-Tribune.

- One upcoming bond issue: September 3 - Porter Township School Corporation General Obligation Bonds, Series 2019, $1,200,000 (2024-35), Stifel, Nicolaus & Company, Inc. as underwriter . . .

IN Charter Schools . . .

- The Daleville Community Schools Board of Trustees voted to shut down the Indiana Virtual charter schools, and you might see the school district take the failed former charter school into receivership after the Indiana Virtual board of directors dissolved.

- Indiana Agriculture and Technology School (IATS), the blended learning charter school authorized by the Nineveh-Hensley-Jackson United School Corporation (Indian Creek Schools), served 120+ students in its first year. Students spend approximately one day per week in an “Active Participation Day” held at a school farm location or agricultural enterprise. Online courses are pre-recorded so that students can work at their own pace.

IN Programs & Curriculum . . .

- Purdue Polytechnic High School will establish a program in partnership with the Hamilton Southeastern Schools to be located at the Hub and Spoke facility that’s currently under construction in Fishers. At first, the program would be open only to HSE students, but down the road, it could be opened up to students in other districts. HSE is looking to enroll between 25 and 70 students in the first year.

- WISH-TV News8 in Indianapolis runs a positive piece on three schools in the Carmel Clay Schools that have eschewed plastic lunchroom utensils in favor of metal silverware.

- WRTV-TV in Indianapolis airs a series of stories by Call 6 Investigates reporter Kara Kenney examining why so few Indiana schools have tornado shelters . . . even though the state ranks among the top 15 for most annual tornados per 10,000 square miles on average between 1995 and 2014.

- The Burriss Laboratory School says it will begin notifying parents in advance of the content of annual active shooter trainings in response to complaints the school received about the use of a 911 call from the Columbine shootings. The clip was played during the Civilian Response to Active Shooter Events (CRASE) training session conducted for students by the Ball State University police department.

- The Harrison County Prosecutor’s Office spent $3,500 from drug bust proceeds to purchase new school bus stop arm cameras for the South Harrison Community School Corporation.

- Do accountability grades influence behavior? Officials at Wabash Middle School, part of Wabash City Schools, cited (or blamed) the federal school accountability framework for the more rigorous attendance policy implemented this school year that cuts the number of absences allowed per semester from 10 to five.

- The Vigo County School Corporation partners with the Hamilton Center to offer an alternative to in-school suspension for students who commit a first violation of the no-vaping policy. Students will attend a 30-40 class weekly for four weeks called “Catch My Breath” with educational materials on the risks of e-cigarettes.

- Students will swipe an ID card each time they get on or off the school bus in the South Bend Community School Corporation. The tracking system could launch at the end of October. Parents will be given access to a website to track their child’s whereabouts.

- The John Glenn School Corporation is paying to send a school bus across district lines into the Greene Township area within the South Bend Community School Corporation to transport new and returning transfer students. The service has been so well received that John Glenn declared the bus full shortly after the start of the school year and said that no more riders could be accepted at this time.

- As it prepares to start providing student transportation using its own buses and own personnel, Barr-Reeve Community Schools eyes a $2.25 million bond issue to pay for the acquisition of a facility to be used as a bus barn and to purchase $1 million worth of new school buses. Barr-Reeve has historically contracted out its bus routes.

- The Tippecanoe School Corporation is considering construction of a new middle school to serve the fast-growing northwest corner of Tippecanoe County and renovation of the existing Klondike Middle School to become a new grade 3-5 building.

- The DeKalb County Central United School Corporation works with Barton Coe Vilamaa and Stifel Public Finance on a construction and renovation project at J.R. Watson Elementary School to expand the cafeteria and kitchen and convert a courtyard into usable learning space. According to the Auburn Evening Star, "A tentative timeline shows a project hearing will take place at the Sept. 17 board meeting with the additional appropriation hearing and final bond resolution scheduled for the Oct. 22 board meeting. If the project is approved, bids would be accepted and awarded in spring of 2020 with groundbreaking tentatively scheduled for June 2020, the courtyard completed in August 2020 and the kitchen and cafeteria completed in the winter of 2020-21, the timeline showed."

IN Contracts . . .

- The Oak Hill United School Corporation School Board votes 5-2 last week to not renew Superintendent Joel Martin's contract through June 30, 2021. The board's president and vice president were the two dissenters. Superintendent Martin remains under contract through June 30, 2020, and the board appears split on maintaining the status quo after decade of Martin's employment with Oak Hill . . . or making a break in a new direction.

□ Don't be surprised to see the Oak Hill board take a new Martin contract extension vote in the coming months.

IN Transition . . .

- The Interim Study Committee on Education learned at its August 22 meeting that the average school counselor in Indiana has a caseload of 497 students, nearly twice as high as the 250 student level recommended by the American School Counselor Association . . . but not far off from the national average caseload of 482 students.

□ Chris Lagoni, executive director of the Indiana Small and Rural Schools Association, noted that to reach the 250-student standard, Indiana would need to employ an additional 2,235 counselors, a standard which would cost approximately $60 million.

- The School Accountability Panel met for the second time on August 22. Members discussed issues related to incorporating dual credit completion, remediation, credential attainment, and employment into a new framework for high school accountability.

□ Rep. Bob Behning (R) of Indianapolis, chair of the House Committee on Education, cautioned against rewarding “random acts of dual credit.” Jason Bearce, vice president of the Indiana Chamber of Commerce, agreed. “We hear a lot of stories about students generating college credit in high school, but it doesn’t seem to be leading to the outcomes we want as far as college completion,” he said. Behning suggested focusing on dual credit that’s tied to stackable credentials or sequential tracks of study. Rep. Behning said the panel has to consider holding high schools accountable for the postsecondary readiness of their students, and Commissioner of Higher Education Teresa Lubbers said she was comfortable with including remediation as an accountability metric. Commissioner Lubbers suggested that the four-year colleges aren’t confident that the Core 40 diploma adequately prepares students for postsecondary success. Perry Township Schools Superintendent Pat Mapes observed that Indiana desperately needs to revisit the list of courses required for a high school diploma. Students who have no interest in foreign language and performing arts should be able to pursue courses that better align to their postsecondary pathway goals.

□ The panel also discussed on-track indicators, such as a benchmark of earning 20 credits by the end of a student’s sophomore year. Superintendent Mapes explained, “If we get a kid who comes to us in their junior year, and they’ve only got six credits, who is responsible for that student, the previous school or the current school, and where does that kid land in the accountability matrix? I would tell you it should go a little back to where they were at.” Rep. Behning said he agreed completely. “The accountability system ought to recognize that if I come to your school and I’m credit deficient, and I am still able to graduate on time, you should get extra credit.” Sen. Jeff Raatz (R) of Richmond, chair of the Senate Committee on Education and Career Development, then questioned whether the accountability also needed to extend back to the elementary and middle schools that socially promoted kids who weren’t ready. Mapes added that Perry Township recently enrolled some freshmen students from Guatemala who can’t speak or read English. “If we can get them to know the alphabet and speak some basic English” by the time they reach graduation age, that will have been a huge success, said Mapes.

□ Byron Ernest, chair of the panel, questioned whether there might be a better way to determine whether students are on track that didn’t involve relying on credits. He recalled when he first started as principal of Manual when the school was taken over by the State Board of Education that many of the freshmen had received A’s in algebra, yet only a single digit percentage passed the end of course assessment. “There’s the mobility issue of students swirling among districts and how long they are in one place, and there’s also the issue of credit completion and deficiency,” observed ICHE’s Lubbers. “We need to start with having more data before we move to any sort of recommendation on what we should do.”

- At the first of three town hall listening sessions by the Next Level Teacher Compensation Commission, Chair Michael Smith emphasized from the start that the group’s mission is to seek solutions to increase teacher compensation – not to reform the K-12 system. Indiana State Teachers Association President Keith Gambill was the first from the public to speak. He said Indiana needs new revenue sources. Several teachers who spoke advocated for restoring salary schedules with step increases in order to give teachers more predictability and certainty in how much they can expect to earn over time. Former ISTA President Teresa Meredith asked for a “minimum guarantee” in the school funding formula to stop the bleeding in rural communities. At the second session, teachers commented that the Governor should spend the state surplus on teacher pay, that teacher pay should not be taken over by the state but continue to be determined locally, and that teachers are expected to spend hundreds of dollars out of their own pocket on classroom supplies and educational materials. The third meeting – which took place one day after the state said steps would be taken to ensure that teacher pay is not negatively impacted by this year’s decline in test scores – was the most heavily attended. Not surprisingly, suggestions were made to spend less on testing and more on teacher pay. One person proposed that the Hoosier Lottery sell a #RedforEd scratch-off ticket and direct the proceeds to teachers.

□ The Next Level Commission has already received more than 2,000 online comments.

- The #RedforEd movement that started last Winter and grew throughout the Spring did not let up over the Summer. Teacher demonstrations and rallies have continued across the state through the start of the new school year. Something to keep an eye on heading into the 2020 elections . . .

IN Courts & Conduct . . .

- A student was found in possession of a handgun at Banneker Elementary in the Gary Community School Corporation . . . a BB gun was found in a student’s backpack at Northview Middle School in the M.S.D. of Washington Township . . . the M.S.D. of Washington Township confiscated a handgun from a student at North Central High School . . . a student at Ben Davis High School found with a gun in his backpack was arrested . . .

- The Howard County Sheriff’s Department used the Red Flag law to serve a warrant and confiscate firearms from a home in Russiaville after Western School Corporation staff reported to authorities that a 12-year-old student made threatening comments to teachers at school, reports the Kokomo Tribune. WSC Superintendent Randy McCracken released a statement to parents and staff explaining that “In regards to this incident, no threat was made toward the school, students or staff, so information was not shared regarding the situation with the school community. Our Liaison officer, in following up on the parental discussion, used the red flag law to make sure all weapons were secured and away from the student as promised.”

- The mother of a special needs student at Castle High School tells the Evansville Courier & Press she plans to hire an attorney after her son was bullied online by his peers in a group chat on Instagram.

□ The bullies “called this student names including sped, retard, tard, weirdo, etc. They tried to get this student to send nudes and inappropriate pictures so they could make fun of him. They also told him they would ‘slap the sh*t out of him on Monday’ if he did not send nudes,” according to a petition that asks the Warrick County School Corporation Board of Trustees to take action in response and institute a stricter bullying policy.

- Indianapolis NBC affiliate WTHR-TV 13 Eyewitness News obtained a video shot in the locker room of Alexandria High School of a student being repeatedly punched by a peer while being restrained by two other students so he couldn’t fight back or defend himself. The male victim believes he was attacked because he’s gay. The fight is under investigation by the administration and Alexandria Police Department, and officials have declined to say whether the student’s sexual orientation was a motivating factor in the attack.

- In Ryan v. Ft. Wayne Comm’ty Schools, 1:19-cv-00333-HAB-SLC, the parents of a 10th grade student with special needs ask the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Indiana for damages from Fort Wayne Community Schools after their son sustained a fractured hip and broken femur when he was attacked by fellow students in two separate incidents. In the first, the teenager was injured when FWCS allegedly placed him in a physical education class contrary to his Individualized Education Plan (IEP), according to the suit. In the second incident, the young man was injured when “the teaching assistants, who were supposed to be in the class to monitor and supervise the students, were not present due to a mandatory meeting according to the only teacher present. The teacher acknowledged that because she was left alone as the only teacher to supervise, she was unable to stop the attack,” according to the suit.

- In Florence W. v. M.S.D. of Lawrence Twp., No. 1:18-cv-02698-RLY-TAB, a mother seeks judicial review on behalf of her minor daughter (identified as M.W.) of an Independent Hearing Officer’s conclusion that the Lawrence Township schools provided M.W. with a free appropriate public education under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act. M.W. has withdrawn from the district and enrolled in the Fortune Academy, a private day facility in Indianapolis, at an alleged annual cost of $18,000. The case is pending in the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana.

□ In response, the Lawrence Township schools, represented by Alexander Pinegar of Church Church Hittle + Antrim, files a counterclaim alleging that the lawsuit is frivolous, unreasonable, and without foundation. In late 2017, the district asserts that the plaintiffs requested an independent educational evaluation of M.W. The request was granted by the district, and the independent evaluator (chosen by the plaintiffs) proceeded with her evaluation, completed it in late January 2018, and reviewed it with Florence W. on or about January 23, 2018. After the district’s special education director received the independent educational evaluation report from the independent evaluator, the case conference committee was to convene to discuss the recommendations. But just days before the scheduled case conference, plaintiffs initiated the litigation. The plaintiffs’ attorney serves as a member of the governing body for the private day facility.

- Indiana joins eight other states in a petition before the U.S. Supreme Court requesting reversal of a U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit decision in Deal, et al., v. Mercer Co. Bd. of Education, No. 17-2429 (4th Cir. 2018) in which plaintiffs backed by the Freedom From Religion Foundation have challenged the constitutionality of a Bible in Schools program in West Virginia.

□ A student who has left a school district with no stated intention ever to return does not have standing to seek to enjoin a portion of that school district’s curriculum, argue the amici curiae, and because the Fourth Circuit held the opposite, summary reversal is warranted. Elizabeth Deal alleges that her daughter Jessica was harassed by other students for not participating in the Bible in Schools program and that the mistreatment was a major reason why she transferred to another school district. The Fourth Circuit concluded that respondents could seek an injunction because Jessica faced “ongoing feelings of marginalization.” The amici write in their brief, “Allowing hurt feelings to fill in for an imminent threat of harm would render much of this Court’s standing jurisprudence superfluous. No longer would a direct connection between a plaintiff and a challenged action be needed—all a plaintiff would need to allege and prove is that the government action (past or ongoing) continues to cause him emotional distress.” Moreover, “because Jessica’s feelings of marginalization are unconnected to any current exposure to Mercer County’s Bible in the Schools program, it is speculative that an injunction barring the program will redress her hurt feelings. An injunction cannot wipe away the source of Jessica’s feelings – her past exposure to the program. What respondents seek is mere vindication, but that is insufficient to create a case or controversy.”

- Tim Bless, longtime high school football coach in the Bartholomew Consolidated School Corporation, has been sued in the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana for copyright infringement for allegedly posting portions of copyrighted material on his Twitter account (@CoachTimBless). The suit, Bell v. Bartholomew Consol. School Corp., et al., No. 1:19-cv-03308-JRS-TAB, also names BCSC for allegedly failing to prevent the alleged infringement. The plaintiff is a resident of Texas and the author of the book Winning Isn’t Normal.

- Stephanie D. Rhoton, who had been secretary of the Wood Memorial High School Parent Teacher Organization in the East Gibson School Corporation was charged with a Level 5 Felony charge of Fraud on a Financial Institution and a Level 6 Felony charge of Fraud in Gibson County Superior Court last week. State v. Rhoton, No. 26D01-1908-F5-000840.

□ According to an Indiana State Police probable cause affidavit, Rhoton – one of only two people with access to the PTO credit card – allegedly took the PTO card in July and used it for assorted unauthorized personal charges (including for parasailing) while on vacation to (and in) Daytona Beach, Florida. Screen shots of her Facebook page seemed to confirm the times and activities cited after the treasurer looked into the charges she had not authorized, and the ISP detective wrote in his affidavit that the treasurer told investigators that “Rhoton admitted to her that she was responsible for the unauthorized PTO charges.”

IN Higher Education

IN General . . .

- Ivy Tech Community College proposes the “White County Promise” scholarship program.

□ Ivy Tech is asking White County Commissioners to agree to fund a “last-dollar” scholarship program for graduates from Twin Lakes, North White, Frontier, and Tri-County high schools. For students who qualify for Pell Grants and standard financial aid packages, White County would be on the hook for about $1,100 per student per year. Recipients must be White County residents and would have to maintain a 2.0 GPA, enroll in 12-15 credits per semester with at least six credits at the Monticello site, and participate in a for-credit internship program/clinical. As proposed, each student would be eligible to receive assistance for up to two years.

- Takeaways from the Indiana Commission for Higher Education’s annual College Equity Report 2019.

– Indiana’s college-going rate dropped one percentage point from the previous year to 63 percent. The decrease can be almost entirely attributed to declining college-going rates among males.

– Students in the 21st Century Scholars program outpace all other groups in college-going rates. 86% of Scholars entered college within one year, an increase of five percentage points from last year’s report. Less than 40% of low-income non-Scholars entered college within one year, a rate that has dropped by five percentage points in five years.

– Just 16% of Black students and a quarter of Hispanic students earn the Academic Honors Diploma versus 40% of white students and 36% of students overall.

– 46% of students who graduated high school in 2016 and enrolled in college within one year achieved early college success, which is defined as not needing remediation, completing all coursework attempted, and persisting to the second year. The success rate has increased by an average of one percentage point per year for the past five years.

– Early college success was attained by 43% of 21st Century Scholars, a five-year gain of 12 percentage points; 23% of low-income non-Scholars, up by three percentage points since 2011; 26% of Black students, an increase of nine percentage points over the past five years; and 50% of white students, a five-year gain of four points. The criterion that posed the biggest obstacle for all groups was completing all coursework attempted.

– Only 13% of students in the class of 2016 who enrolled in college within one year needed college remediation. 54% of students completed all coursework they attempted. 75% of students persisted to their sophomore year.

– 70% of students who enrolled in college after earning the Academic Honors Diploma achieved early college success compared to just 26% of students with the Core 40 Diploma.

– Approximately 69% of Hoosiers in the 2017 high school graduation cohort took a college entrance exam, and 79% of those test takers earned a score that indicates they are college and career ready.

– 26% of Black students and 35% of Hispanic students completed a bachelor’s degree within four years. 35% of Blacks and 57% of Hispanics complete a bachelor’s degree in six years.

– Hispanic students outperform all other groups in terms of completing associate’s degrees on time. 21% of Hispanic students earned an associate’s degree within two years compared to 15% of whites, nine percent of Asians, and six percent of Blacks.

IN Enrollments . . .

- Indiana University Bloomington enrolls its largest-ever class of first-year students. The Class of 2023 numbers nearly 8,300 students, up from the previous record of 8,097 set last year.

● Saint Mary-of-the-Woods College campus program enrollment this Fall is expected to be about 520, the third highest total enrollment since the College’s founding in 1840. This is the first time the campus program has had enrollment above 500 since 1967, and it marks only the sixth time in the history of the College that the campus program has enrolled more than 500 students. The campus program’s new student class is expected to be around 185. The Woods Online program expects to enroll an additional 360 students.

● Ball State University welcomes the largest freshman class in the school’s 101-year history. The class of 2023 numbers a record 4,050 students. It’s the most diverse in school history, and the projected median high school grade-point average of the freshman class is 3.53, which is also a record.

● Butler University greets its third-largest class ever – 1,125 first-year students (the largest class in university history was last year’s 1,336 first-year students, and the second-largest is the Class of 2020).

□ “We were asked to enroll 4,700 full-time undergraduate students by 2020,” says Butler Vice President for Enrollment Management Lori Greene. “We are ahead of schedule. We hit 4,726 in fall 2018. Now, it is really more about sustainability and trying to determine what our ideal size is as an institution in terms of meeting the expectations of the student experience.”

● Don Bishop, associate vice president for undergraduate enrollment at the University of Notre Dame, explains to the student newspaper, “We did make an effort and recruit more diversity. ‘Diversity’ as defined in the broadest way – socioeconomic diversity, cultural diversity,” he said. “The largest number of students came from public high schools – 43% – the next percent are Catholic [schools] – I think it’s 38% – and then 19% for private or charter schools.” Bishop said Notre Dame is “the most nationally diverse university. The average first year student comes from a median distance of 750 miles.”

□ According to Bishop, when reviewing UND enrollment applications, “We’re looking at a student’s motivation for success as a heavy decider” in who gets admitted. “One way you can look at it is why somebody has gone as far as they have and how far they’ve gone from where they were [gives] a great deal of predictive value in predicting how far they will go with what they get here,” he said.

Trine says Parkview's support has helped Trine welcome its largest incoming freshman class of CSIT majors this Fall.

Coupled with college coaching services, the last-dollar scholarships are designed to help Marion County students complete college by reducing barriers to on-time completion.

- In a matter of first impression, the Indiana Public Access Counselor issues an advisory opinion finding that Indiana Wesleyan University violated the Access to Public Records Act (APRA) when it withheld records from the IWU Police Department related to the arrest of a student for intimidation. "There is no dispute that APRA applies to private university police departments," reads the opinion. APRA requires a private university police department to release a record if it created solely for a law enforcement purpose and relates to arrests or incarcerations for criminal offenses.

□ In this matter, IWU argues that all records created by its campus police are created for other institutional uses and are not created solely for law enforcement purposes. The Access Counselor rejects IWU's assertion. "To the extent that IWU uses its police department's records for some non-law enforcement purpose such as the enforcement of the university's rules and regulations does not change the purpose of the record's creation. Usage and creation are mutually exclusive constructs. Mere usage for an institutional purpose does not render its creation as a criminal enforcement measure institutional."

□ "By its own admission the IWU campus police are more than security guards that help out students with lock-outs and serving as genteel cross-campus escorts. On the contrary, it has the power to investigate, arrest, detain, and use appropriate force. Granted, this matter may have ultimately resulted in the administration taking disciplinary action against the student, however, it began as a criminal matter. It matters not if institutional action was subsequently carried out. Undoubtedly, those records created in the furtherance of administrative or institutional pursuits would be separated and withheld, but not the records created as a result of the underlying law enforcement activity," he state Access Counselor concludes.

IN Courts & Conduct . . .

- A jury trial initially scheduled for October has been postponed until February 2020 in the case of Swingley v. City of Muncie, et al., No. 18C05-1710-PL-000108, in which a Ball State University student who was run over by a car while walking to class seeks compensation for the alleged negligent failure of Ball State and the City of Muncie to provide sidewalks and/or safe walkways for students walking to and from class. The suit is pending in Delaware County Circuit Court 5.

- A student who became seriously ill after developing a fungal infection while living in an Indiana University dorm has filed suit, alleging IU negligently maintained the dorm's heating, ventilation, and air conditioning systems resulting in dangerous mold infestation and that IU withheld information about the hazardous dormitory conditions from its students. The case is Engelking v. Trustees of Indiana Univ., No. 29C01-1908-CT-007630, and was filed in Hamilton County Circuit Court.

- The Indiana Court of Appeals schedules oral argument for October 8 in City of Bloomington Bd. of Zoning Appeals v. UJ-Eighty Corp., No. 19A-PL-00457, a case in which Indiana University is an amicus curiae.

□ In February 2018, IU ceased to recognize the Tau Kappa Epsilon (TKE) fraternity due to evidence that TKE members engaged in pervasive drug use. Once TKE lost its recognition as an IU student organization, the property on which the TKE house sits no longer qualified as a "Fraternity/Sorority House" under the City of Bloomington's zoning ordinance. Two TKE members refused to vacate the house, causing the City to issue a notice of violation to the property's owner, UJ-Eighty Corporation. The owner sought judicial review of the notice of violation, and in February 2019, the trial court issued an order striking down Bloomington's zoning regulations as unconstitutional after concluding that they give IU "unrestricted power to determine the petitioner's use of its property without providing any mechanism for reviewing and overruling the University's decision." The trial court noted that under the City's definition of fraternity/sorority, IU can "make the decision to recognize or sanction a fraternity under whatever procedures it chooses, without restriction" and that the Ordinance does not provide the petitioner with a "right to a review of the University's decision."

□ As an amicus party to the appeal filed by the City of Bloomington, IU asks the appellate court to uphold the ability of the city to pair IU's recognition of a fraternity or sorority to the city's zoning code because "it is the university that is in the best position to determine whether a fraternity or sorority should be recognized as such It would be illogical and improper for another entity—such as the City of Bloomington or property owner – to be charged with making the determination about whether fraternity or sorority qualified as such."

□ Permitting the trial court's decision to stand "effectively removes the requirement that fraternity or sorority be recognized by IU in order for property to be used as fraternity or sorority house," the University contends, and as a result, members of fraternities or sororities that lost recognition would be permitted to continue living in their chapter houses after they cease to be recognized by IU.

□ The implications of letting the trial court's decision stand reach far beyond Bloomington, according to the IU friend of the court brief. Zoning ordinances in other jurisdictions similarly define fraternity or sorority by referencing such groups' association with or approval by a college or university – including the zoning codes of Greencastle, Tippecanoe County, Franklin, Muncie, Indianapolis-Marion County, and South Bend.

□ IU's legal team explains, "If the ordinances of those cities are also held invalid, that would jeopardize the ability of colleges and universities across the state to ensure the safety of the students and campus community. Not only do colleges and universities across the state have an interest in regulating their student organizations and being able to hold them accountable, but the communities across the state where these colleges and universities are located have an interest in the institutions being able to hold their student organizations accountable. This interest is inherently tied to municipalities being able to enforce their zoning ordinances to promote and maintain the order, health, and safety of the communities. In Bloomington and other Indiana cities in which colleges and universities are located, those colleges and universities should be charged with defining what constitutes fraternity or sorority or any other student organization. The Court of Appeals should reverse the decision of the trial court."

- The U.S. Bankruptcy Court in Indianapolis approves an expensive settlement agreement between the estate of ITT Tech and the Internal Revenue Service over deductions that the defunct for-profit institution claimed for its private student lending program.

□ In 2010, ITT Technical Institute created the PEAKS Loan Program under which $300,000,000 was raised from institutional investors and loaned to ITT students to pay tuition and fees. The IRS settlement would allow ITT a bad debt deduction in 2012 of $49,588,680 and a net operating loss deduction in 2012 of $52,058,304 for carryback of a net operating loss from 2014. The ITT estate will owe additional tax for 2010, 2011, and 2012 of $936,028, plus applicable interest and penalties, down significantly from the $18,292,065 that would have been owed under the adjustments originally proposed by the IRS in 2013. This would be offset against a refund due to the debtors from the IRS of approximately $8,644,105 for the 2015 tax year due to carryback of a 2016 net operating loss to 2015.

□ "The Trustee's accountants have reported that the IRS has tentatively estimated that the net refund to the bankruptcy estates after the setoff will be approximately $6.8 million," the U.S. Bankruptcy Trustee explains to the judge.

Crowded House race in CD 05

Field likely to top the 6 in 1982 and 8 in 2012, last times seat was open

When we compiled our initial list of potential candidates for the open CD 05 after U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R) opted to abandon the banks of the Potomac for the banks of the White River, it was a simple chore: just list all the Republicans in the district and remove the mayors of the three Hamilton County cities who would lose the autonomy and ability to affect things that they currently enjoy.

We weren't far off on how it would play out . . . and Labor Day weekend isn't even over yet. The only thing we may have overlooked is that some potential candidates could emerge from outside the district, but our first look did include State Treasurer Kelly Mitchell (R), and she's followed up the behind-the-scenes moves we've tipped you to (moving north into the district, spending three to four hours each night on calls to local leaders, traveling to local GOP confabs, and assembling a cadre of staffers and consultants) with an official declaration of candidacy last week.

Today, it looks like there may be as many GOP candidates for Congress in the 2020 primary as there were Democrats for president on the first debate stage(s) of that current race. The eight-candidate open seat field of 2012 (which followed seven in 2010) could be surpassed by week's end, and more might choose to get in when they realize that the path to victory may in practice involve two sub-primaries with no run-off. Winning the GOP primary here means winning one's own respective lane - "right" or "moderate," defined by views on social issues and willingness to associate with the top of the national ticket - and then winning overall. The latter depends upon how many candidates crowd each lane, and right now it appears the right lane is getting more crowded than what could then turn out to be the "passing" lane.

And is there a separate lane for a female GOP candidate? No discussion of 2020 politics fails to mention the importance of the female suburban Republican vote . . . and right now, Mitchell is the only GOP woman filing.

Three of the four Democratic candidates to date - and the two leading candidates - are also women, and CD 05 has not seen a general election contest between two males since 2010.

Winning one's own lane might take as little as 15% of the vote - and depending upon how many candidates line up in the other lane (assume 10 or more), that might mean that 20% overall (about 20,000 to 23,000 votes?) could win the entire primary. We repeat, however, that the vote totals for a given candidate in a particular lane will be depressed by the number of hopefuls who jump in. This reality may well make it more likely than not that a candidate on the fence who knows that s/he can't win 30,000 votes may still find it worth jumping in if they have a shot at picking off 15,000 to 25,000 votes, which could be enough if third-party spending, as rumored, drowns out some well-funded candidate voices next Spring.

We've told you before that of the nine Hoosier members of Congress, only U.S. Reps. Jackie Walorski (R) and Greg Pence (R) won their first primaries by a majority. In CD 05, then-U.S. Rep. Dan Burton (R) won less than 30% of the vote in his final - winning - primary in 2010 (just 29.67%), and Brooks then won the 2012 primary with virtually the same percentage (29.95%).

One poll shows muni hit to GOP brand

We're hearing about August polling (for point of reference and not relevance, before the Andrew Luck abdication) that suggests the political row may be even tougher for all Republicans to hoe in Indiana than anyone might have thought . . . yes, even in Indiana.

Polling for a popular incumbent Republican mayor by a prominent national Republican polling firm showed an overwhelming percentage of respondents indicating that they believed the city in question was on the right track, and the mayor in question enjoyed an approval rating north of 85% - of course, basically unheard of anywhere today.

But the third question posed dealt with the head-to-head race, and when those surveyed were asked by name whether they favored the Republican mayor or the challenger, also identified by name and party ID, the support level dropped by about 28% (and 24 points), even though the mayor, identified by name - but not party - had just earned the soaring favorables.

The pollster was said to be floored by the discrepancy . . . and those analyzing the results of that poll in toto express concern for the GOP brand even this year in Indiana municipal elections - even as this incumbent is clearly safe.

All of this seems to bode well for a second-tier candidate, but we'll worry about that "strategy" beginning around early February.

Mitchell's candidacy followed the entry of former Department of Workforce Development commissioner Steve Braun (R) of Zionsville into the race, the first Boone County hopeful. The brother of U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R), he lost the three-way open seat CD 04 race in 2018 to now-U.S. Rep. Jim Baird (R) after a strange and nasty turn of campaign events near the end pushed Baird over the top. Braun positioned himself as a social conservative with business experience in that race, but could edge more toward the middle in CD 05 this year. Braun is reportedly prepared to spend some of the big bucks he made selling an IT venture, but his 2018 "Rose Garden" approach makes some wonder whether he can effectively engage in what will be a rough-and-tumble race that might even prove to be beyond the control of the candidates and their consultants (all of the top Hoosier GOP consultants are expected to have a horse in this race, which will be interesting of itself) themselves. Coverdale Consulting (Braun) and RightVoter (Mitchell) are already in; Mark It Red, Limestone Strategies, and Hallowell Consulting are also said to be likely participants. Mitchell has also signed on Red Curve Solutions, LLC as its treasury, budgeting, and compliance service provider.

Also entering the race is Purdue alum Danny Niederberger (R) of Indianapolis, born and raised in Westfield. He is an accounting and operations professional at Concise Capital. His "five pillars" focus on rights of the unborn, cutting spending and government debt, bolstering Second Amendment rights, imposing term limits, and investing in "soft skills" rather than STEM for K-12 education. He has no base or network, however, and freely acknowledges that he doesn't intend to do much in the way of fundraising. He'll end up eating the exhaust of the others in his lane.

Will former Sen. Mike Delph (R) of Carmel jump in? His district included some of the Indianapolis northwest side and Carmel/Boone County territory in CD 05, which he knows well from his time as district director for the Burton congressional office - and he and Kelly Mitchell may be the only two candidates in the contest with strong networks in the northern counties traditionally overlooked in the CD 05 primary. He's strong with the social and fiscal conservative networks, and has been seen around the district helping out in some municipal elections, working party events, and quietly building an organizational and grassroots structure. Delph tweets a reminder Wednesday, that state Republicans have "important local elections across the State" in two months, and "That's where the focus and energy of the party needs to be. 2020 will be here soon enough," he concludes in a subtle reminder that political courtesy once dictated that campaigns didn't begin until after Labor Day - and largely after municipal elections local election years.

The mikedelph.com domain is now adorned with a "Coming Soon" banner. Look for him to jump in; after all, if you recall what we told you about his 2018 SD 29 winning primary (and losing general election) numbers, he won Carmel and Zionsville in both rounds (the primary against a female Carmel city official who attends church with Beckwith), and in the general election he was swamped in Wayne and Pike townships (60% of the Senate district) by a wave of straight-ticket, clearly anti-Trump votes - like all other Republicans (Mike Braun (R) won only 32% in SD 29, Delph 34%, and Mitchell led the trio with about 36%).

Opting against a race is another candidate who would have joined former Indianapolis mayor Greg Ballard (R) and Fishers Deputy Mayor Leah McGrath (R) in the more socially moderate lane: Sen. John Ruckelshaus (R), the only Republican senator to represent a district won by Hillary Clinton (D) in 2016. The tireless campaigner has been knocking on doors in his north central Indianapolis/south central Hamilton County district for several months now, and would have been a strong primary and general election candidate - despite his gender. But his Senate seat is up for election in 2020, he could not run safe, and it is difficult to think of another Republican who could hold that seat in a volatile election (it will still be a tall order for Ruckelshaus himself as he watches Republicans around him fall).

Sen. Ruckelshaus wrote to supporters Wednesday that after mulling things over for many weeks with his family and others, "it soon became clear that a run for Congress would be more about politics rather than focusing on the substance of the issues that I believe we need to address. Therefore, we have ultimately decided that the best way to continue serving my community is to stay in the State Senate."

Here's how we would line up the lanes among candidates that are in the race or who are still widely believed to be considering a run . . . and some of this is based more on how people may perceive individuals than reality:

Social Conservative	Social Moderate
Beckwith	Mitchell
Braun	Abernathy
Delph	Savage
Henderson
Niederberger

When you see this group lining up along the backstretch, it's not hard to see another hard-line conservative, such as Hamilton County Councilmember Fred Glynn (R) or Sen. Victoria Spartz (R) taking a new look at joining the field . . . given that it would take a small percentage to win this lane. The percentage could fall even lower if Democrats have a competitive 2020 presidential primary in Indiana (think back to 2008) and hard-line conservatives jump party lines again to oppose, for example, a Sanders or Warren "Socialist," leaving social moderates (and Hamilton County RINOs!) to become the key bloc remaining among GOP primary voters. Remember, there should be no compelling GOP presidential or gubernatorial primary, and Indiana has no Senate seat up in 2020.

And with the social moderate field potentially winnowing down, there may be a business leader from the north side of Indianapolis or Hamilton County willing to take a flyer on a bid (talk is that a self-financing high-tech guy, perhaps local entrepreneur Nathan Altman of Indianapolis, a Carmel native who considered an independent 2018 U.S. Senate run; his mother, a Carmel attorney, is a prominent veteran elected county official . . . or even another name). The traffic in this lane is small today, and potentially wide (think about the typical Susan Brooks primary voter, or the suburban Republicans, men and women, uneasy about the Trump/Pence ticket). Brooks Chief of Staff Whitney Savage (R) was looking early on at this race, but is now seen as not likely to enter (and the Brooks team seems to be leaning to Mitchell), and former state agency leader Kent Abernathy (R) is, like Braun, someone who might be comfortable between the middle of the two lanes.

The intrepid Mitchell benefited from her Lugar Series network in her 2014 nomination at the state convention, and there are lots of Lugar Series alums floating around in CD 05 – who might either unite behind Mitchell again or think that this might be their own opportunity to pursue higher office (though if Mitchell were to win the congressional seat, her treasurer's post would be up for a two-year gubernatorial appointment . . . and it wouldn't hurt for a female CD 05 social moderate to be named to the post and run in 2022 – perhaps Zionsville Town Councilor Susana Suarez (R), a former Holcomb gubernatorial aide; Fishers City Councilor Cecilia Coble (R), a local attorney; or Fishers Deputy Mayor McGrath?).

With Terry Henderson (R) of Atlanta the furthest north in the potential field to date, someone from northern Hamilton County (from the Beck family?) or Madison County could feel empowered, though so many votes are centered south of 226th Street in Hamilton County, it would require a huge and united turnout from all of those areas, an unlikely prospect today.

And as all of this is playing out, we're also hearing that some large-scale push-polling was already taking place last week in Hamilton County.

We're not entirely sure if this effort was on behalf of a candidate or an outside entity, but there was a lot of special focus on Braun and Delph, with ballot-test descriptions of Braun as an ally of his brother, the U.S. senator . . . and Delph as someone who wanted to make gay marriage illegal. Other descriptions of Mitchell and Beckwith were said to be more neutral. This early effort is an indication of how expensive and gritty this race will become.

IN Politics

Federal Office Races . . .

- South Bend attorney Pat Hackett (D), an adjunct law professor at the University of Notre Dame, launches a new challenge to U.S. Rep. Jackie Walorski (R) in CD 02 after she fell short in the 2018 primary. Hackett finished second with 28.21% (Mel Hall (D) won with 41.67%) in a race in which three of the six candidates topped 20 percent. Out of 36,966 votes casts, the margin of victory was 4,973 (13.46 percentage points) according to the Capitol & Washington database . . .

- In his latest fundraising request, U.S. Rep. Greg Pence (R) assures supporters that "I wake up every single day and hit the ground running to continue fighting for Sixth District Hoosiers," and asks for contributions to his Greg Pence Victory committee, which is a joint fundraising committee benefiting his Greg Pence for Congress campaign committee, his Mustang PAC leadership political action committee, his brother the Vice President's Great America Committee, and the National Republican Congressional Committee.

State Office Races . . .

- A gauntlet of sorts is thrown down as the Democratic Governors Association - Indiana registers as a state political action committee.

IN Legislative Races . . .

- Mark Hinton (D) of Carmel announced Monday that he will again seek the HD 39 seat held by Rep. Jerry Torr (R). The Purdue University alum who works in healthcare management and as a private consultant for a hotel company, lost by more than 9,000 votes out of some 65,000 votes cast in 2018. he plans to make support for public education his leading issue.

IN Mayoral Races . . .

- A survey conducted for Indy Politics by Mason Strategies (08/11-14; 400 LVs; margin of error \pm 4.9 percentage points) finds Indianapolis Mayor

Joe Hogsett (D) leading Sen. Jim Merritt (R) 55% to 27% with Doug McNaughton (L) picking up four percent of the vote, and another 15% claiming to be undecided. A majority (53%) consider the city to be on the right track, and Mayor Hogsett enjoys a 73% approval rating, but Abdul Hakim-Shabazz of IndyPolitics.org points out that "the contentedness of Indianapolis voters is somewhat soft: only 25 percent 'strongly' approve of the job Hogsett is doing, and only 41 percent are 'definitely' planning on voting for Hogsett." Despite the challenger being the senior Senate Republican, having served Indianapolis since 1990, a majority (54%) of local voters say they don't know enough to form an opinion of GOP challenger Merritt . . . or haven't even heard of him.

□ IndyPolitics.org details that "support for Hogsett is strongest among women (59 percent), voters under the age of 40 (67 percent), black voters (75 percent), and college-educated voters (65 percent). Partisan breaks showcase Merritt's name ID challenges, as Hogsett has the support of 90 percent of Democrats, while Merritt only has the support of 78 percent of Republicans. Independents break towards Hogsett 46 percent to 19 percent, with 11 percent supporting the Libertarian and 25 percent remaining undecided." The leading issues facing Indianapolis are crime and gun violence (36%) followed by roads and potholes (27%) uniting across Republicans, Democrats, and independents, as well as among both those who are positive and negative about the city's direction.

□ If you look back at Peterson-Ballard polling 12 years ago in the same week, you will see a big difference in voter attitude: in mid-August 2007, only 42% of respondents believed that the city was headed in the right direction, while 64% considered it headed on the wrong track. Only 23% would definitely vote to re-elect the then-incumbent Democratic mayor, while the challenger saw his numbers jump by more than 50% from two months earlier despite spending virtually no money. More than a majority (52%) then said that it was time to give a new person a chance to be mayor, up again by a wide margin from earlier polling that year.

IN the Presidential Race . . .

● South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D) is tied with U.S. Sen. Cory Booker (D-NJ) at five percent in fifth place in the latest Monmouth poll (08/16-20; 298 Democratic voters; margin of error ± 5.7 percentage points), one percentage point behind U.S. Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) even as there is big change at the top of the ladder among the top three hopefuls in this poll with a very small sub-sample (Booker and Buttigieg could be below zero based on the margin of error). He remains in fifth, unchanged at five percent, in the moist recent Morning Consult poll, which shows a picture at the top much like recent weeks, in contrast to the Monmouth shake-up. New national numbers from Emerson College Polling (08/24-26; 627 D primary voters; margin of error ± 3.9 percentage points) finds Mayor Pete down to just three percent, trailing Andrew Yang (D) who is at four percent, and has never been north of Buttigieg in any national poll. Mayor Pete is tied for sixth with Sen. Booker and U.S. Rep. Tulsi Gabbard (D-HI). He is at his lowest ebb since March in Emerson's past national polls, before his formal campaign launch Back Home in South Bend. In a general election match-up, Mayor Pete loses to the incumbent 51% to 49%, unlike his numbers in other national polls. Emerson earns high marks for its work from independent reviewers, so you have to wonder if this poll is a canary in the coal mine for Mayor Pete. Professor Spencer Kimball, director of Emerson Polling, points out that "Mayor Pete has raised enough money to stay in the race for now but will need a strong debate performance to remain relevant." But before you write him off, an even more recent Quinnipiac University poll (08/21-26; 648 Democratic and D-leaning independent voters RVs; margin of error ± 4.6 percentage points) finds Mayor Pete in his traditional fifth place spot with five percent, with Yang at three percent and no other lower-tier hopeful posting more than one percent. He performs better among Democratic-leaning independent than among Democrats, by a 2:1 margin, a difference no other hopeful tops. Among the larger general election Q sample (1,422 RVs; margin of error ± 3.1 percentage points), all of the top five Demos trump the incumbent in a Fall match-up, with Mayor Pete leading him with 49% to the President's 40%, albeit the lowest margin of the top five Demos. He takes six percent of the R vote in such a contest, but also loses six percent of the D vote. Among independents, he leads the incumbent 52% to 31%, and performs far better with women than men (he loses to the President 55% to 36% among men while winning the female vote 54% to 39%). He far underperforms the leading four candidates among general election black voters. A new USA TODAY/Suffolk University Poll (08/20-25 424 D RVs; margin of error ± 4.96 percentage points) also finds Mayor Pete in better shape than in the Emerson numbers, actually tied for fourth with Sen. Harris at six percent, double the Yang percentage. Buttigieg was also the second choice of 12%, trailing only U.S. Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) in the ranked-choice option . . . the Buttigieg campaign lays out a mental health and addiction treatment expansion plan, including a 10-year, $100 billion grant program . . . the New York Times details how South Bend police issues overshadow Team Pete's narrative about restoring its economy.

● U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) learned last week that in his role as chair of the National Republican Senatorial Committee he will be charged with retaining two U.S. Senate seats in Georgia next year after the forthcoming resignation of U.S. Sen. Johnny Isakson (R-GA) – giving Democrats a wider Senate map as the Peach State looks more purple than in recent cycles. As the Wall Street Journal explains, Georgia special elections "are wide open, with no primaries for either party to choose nominees."

● In Common Cause Indiana, et al. v. Lawson, Nos. 18-2491, 18-2492, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit Wednesday upholds a preliminary injunction issued by Judge Tanya Walton Pratt of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana against implementation of a 2017 law related to voter purges. In a 39-page ruling authored by Chief Judge Diane Wood (on the President's short list for a potential Supreme Court vacancy), the panel agrees with Judge Pratt that using the controversial Crosscheck program created by then-Kansas secretary of state Kris Kobach (R-KS), the vice chair of the short-lived presidential voter fraud commission chaired by Vice President Mike Pence (R) to "automatically" remove voters from the voting rolls likely violates the National Voter Registration Act (NVRA) and that the plaintiffs had standing, were likely to succeed on the merits, and would suffer irreparable injury if the law were to take effect immediately.

□ The bulk of the ruling revolved around the standing question, and Chief Judge Wood even noted almost two-thirds of the way in that "On the merits, Indiana challenges only the district court's conclusion that the Organizations have shown the necessary likelihood of success." She does "stress that we are not evaluating the question whether Indiana may choose to participate in Crosscheck or any other program. That is the state's decision to make. Our concern is only with the way the state is using the information it receives, and in particular whether that use complies with the NVRA." The process that Indiana wanted to use to cleanse its voter rolls of people it suspects no longer qualify to vote there under SEA 442-2017, codified at I.C. 3-7-38.2.5(d)-(e), was "an aggressive new strategy . . . allowing Indiana immediately to remove a voter based on information received from a third-party database," and the Act "does away with the process of contacting the voter or confirming that the voter requested removal" and "made no provision for contacting the voter or confirming her wish permanently to change domicile and cancel her Indiana registration." The ruling continues, "The state attempts to trivialize that omission, but a review of the NVRA reveals that it is fatal The accuracy or lack thereof of the state's information concerning the voter's change in residence makes no difference under the NVRA. The statute does not set an accuracy threshold; it relies instead on follow-up with the individual voter."

□ The appellate panel's discussion of the "inference that the voter is relinquishing her Indiana domicile" is intriguing. The conclusion: "The only way to know whether voters want to cancel their registration is to ask them. Registering to vote in another state is not the same as a request for removal from Indiana's voting rolls. Indiana relies on the criminalization of double voting to support its argument that registering to vote in a new jurisdiction must imply that the voter does not want to be registered in his old jurisdiction any more. In so arguing, Indiana equates double registration with double voting. But the two are quite different," and in "the overwhelming majority of states, it is not illegal to be registered to vote in two places"

□ The final passage of the Wood opinion adds, "We live in a representative democracy, in which the voice of the people is essential to the legitimacy of our governing institutions. Democracy starts with each voter's act of showing up at the polls to express his or her preferences. The integrity of the voting process is critical, and one measure to protect that integrity is the voter-registration process. A name on a voter roll in Indiana is there only because a voter took the trouble to put it there. Laws such as the NVRA ensure that the states do not undo that work without good reason."

● As payday loan discussion continues at a heated level during the interim, Security Finance Corporation of Spartanburg and Affiliates Political Action Committee registers with the Indiana Election Division as a political action committee affiliated with South Carolina-based consumer lender Security Group, Inc., and Security Finance Corporation of Spartanburg.

● In Hero v. Lake Co. Election Bd., No. 2:19-cv-319, attorney Joe Hero, a former Lake County Republican local official, files suit with the assistance of the American Civil Liberties Union of Indiana against the Lake County Election Board, alleging that the Board was unconstitutionally upholding “a ten-year ‘ban’ that Mr. Hero received from the Republican Party for having previously supported two independent candidates for local office,” and denying him the right to file for an at-large seat on the St. John Town Council. He claims that the Board’s enforcement of the Republican Party’s “purported ban runs afoul of his right to ballot access, and therefore violates the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution. Appropriate declaratory and injunctive relief is warranted.”

□ Hero’s attorneys contend that “The Lake County Election Board has no legitimate interest in prohibiting Mr. Hero from seeking election as a member of the Republican Party, but even if it did possess such an interest, that interest pales in comparison to the burden that this prohibition has on Mr. Hero’s ballot-access rights.”

● Our sister Hannah newsletter, INDIANA EDUCATION INSIGHT, reports that after several years of membership growth and stable financial health, the National Education Association releases the Indiana State Teachers Association from trusteeship ahead of schedule.

□ Not only is this a big deal for ISTA members, but it is big news in the context of 2020 elections if a revived and unleashed ISTA, under local control, reinserts itself in the political dynamic as the 800-pound gorilla of public education that it once was before a decade ago when campaign finance laws were different, social media wasn’t politically dominant, and the national organization was forced to assume control of ISTA operations and install its own acting chief executive officer to address a financial crisis that began with the ISTA Insurance Trust morass and spread to ISTA and its related organizations. You should monitor this potential closely . . .

● U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) continues to be a target of the National Association for Gun Rights, and its leader, Dudley Brown, who emails NAGR supporters in Indiana to remind them of his earlier missive, and adds (in a slightly different and less nuanced message than that directed at Indiana’s senior senator) that “Your U.S. Senator Mike Braun is running around Indiana – offering his support for dangerous ‘Red Flag’ Gun Confiscation. He also wants to expand the Universal Brady Gun Registration scheme!” Brown asks Hoosiers to call Sen. Braun “right away” and “Urge him to reverse course and oppose all gun control, especially ANY ‘Red Flag’ gun confiscation law and any national gun registration scheme” . . . Sen. Braun uses the $572 million Johnson & Johnson Oklahoma judgment over misleading marketing practices aimed at influencing doctors in on opioids, to remind Hoosiers he offered legislative solutions to address the root cause of some of the fundamental issues at stake in the case. He introduced three measures since May with Democratic co-authors to ensure Food and Drug Administration (FDA)-approved labeling for opioids is accurate and not misleading; require clear, concise warning labels for patients on the outside packaging of any prescription opioids regarding the risk of opioid drugs; require all prescribers – as a condition of their federal license to prescribe medications – receive education about responsible opioid prescribing practices and the commonly misunderstood key facets of opioid abuse among patients; and prohibit FDA from allowing opioids to be labeled for intended use of “around-the clock, long-term opioid treatment” until study on long-term usage of opioids. “When it comes to addressing the opioid crisis, I have offered simple solutions: clear and accurate labeling for prescribers and patients to rely on, and proper training for prescribers so these doctors are not misled by sales staff hired by the pharmaceutical industry,” said Sen. Braun. “While the opioid crisis is a tragic – and there are many causes to the crisis – my opioid legislation offers real solutions that, if implemented, can stop the kind of behavior that these companies appear to have engaged in, which ultimately played into this landmark opioid decision” . . . in a Lafayette Journal & Courier op-ed, Sen. Braun notes that as college costs rise, Purdue University President Mitch Daniels has provided a national model for universities, having “shaped Purdue into the national model for making college affordable, attainable and actually worth it.” Sen. Braun writes that “if universities do follow Mitch Daniels’ first-rate example at Purdue, he’ll be rightly remembered as a watershed innovator for the industry: the Henry Ford of higher education.”

● U.S. Rep. Larry Bucshon (R) sees the President sign into law H.R. 3245, his Restore the Harmony Way Bridge Act. Rep. Bucshon called the signing “a great day for the Hoosiers of New Harmony in Posey County, Indiana as well as the citizens of White County, Illinois. This bipartisan, bicameral effort to convey the Harmony Way Bridge to the bridge authorities of Indiana and Illinois will allow the local communities to pursue the best opportunities in refurbishing this bridge. Since coming to Congress almost nine years ago, this has been a priority for me and while it took longer than anticipated we have crossed the finish line it has been decades in the making. I look forward to future of this bridge that connects Indiana and Illinois across the Wabash River for all to enjoy.”

● U.S. Rep. Jackie Walorski (R) ranking member of the House Committee on Ways and Means Subcommittee on Worker and Family Support, teams with that panel’s chair, U.S. Rep. Danny K. Davis (D-IL) on joint visits in both of their districts to community organizations dedicated to helping individuals and families overcome challenges and escape poverty. The experience is part of their desire to explore bipartisan solutions to reduce child poverty, increase economic well-being, improve child safety, and support parents and grandparents. Their subcommittee has jurisdiction over federal programs aimed at helping workers, children, and families thrive. “Breaking the cycle of poverty requires collaboration at every level, and it means working across the aisle to fix what’s broken and build on what works,” Rep. Walorski explains after a visit with Rep. Davis in his diverse Chicago/west-suburban district. They heard from community leaders about support services for kinship caregivers and youth in foster care, home-visiting programs for at-risk families, transitional housing and job training for young mothers facing poverty, and re-entry work programs for ex-offenders. “I’m grateful to my friend and colleague Chairman Davis for sharing with me the passion and dedication at work across his community. As we continue our work together to help families thrive, I look forward to showing him how Hoosiers in my community are tackling similar problems and serving their neighbors in need.” Rep. Davis says that he looks forward to visiting Indiana “very soon to learn about the successful programs in her community.”

● U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R), a member of the House Armed Services Committee, joined Wolf Blitzer live on CNN from Fort Wayne Thursday evening to discuss Afghanistan, foreign aid, and Ukraine. “I am one who believes that a sustained presence in Afghanistan is important to continue to fight the Taliban, fight future threats that come from that part of the globe. But it appears that the deal that President Trump is striking with the Taliban would leave a residual force there more focused on counterterrorism. And if that is where the President and the Administration arrives, then I think I can support where we’re heading.” Rep. Banks would be opposed to eliminating $250 million in military aid to Ukraine, “But I’m not opposed to the President calling for a review of the substantial amount of money that we spend in foreign aid to support the Ukrainians. That is all that he’s done at this point. And I imagine that that review will come back with a positive outlook of how our aid dollars are spent with our – with a very important partner that we have in Ukraine in a very important region of the world.” He adds, “this president has provided lethal aid to our Ukrainian partners to fight against the Russians when President Obama was in office, and the Ukrainians asked for help, we sent them blankets. President Trump has sent them lethal aid to fight back against the Russians. This president has been tough in that regard, in giving the Ukrainians what they need to battle back against Russian aggression.”

● A generation ago, when a 39-year-old Myra Selby was interviewing with the Judicial Nominating Commission for her eventual appointment to the Indiana Supreme Court, your favorite newsletter told you about some of her answers and comments in that 1994 session . . . and one paragraph from our story may have some significant implications for what you might expect from Hearing Officer Selby in her role adjudicating the attorney discipline complaint against Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) on behalf of the Supreme Court next month.

□ “As for her judicial philosophy,” we wrote about the then-incoming justice at the end of 1994, “she says that the approach that she will ‘embrace is that of trying to find the right decision,’ even if that differs with the body of law. ‘One can always have an eye on the goal of coming to the right decision,’ but ‘analytically, one can come to [the right decision] in a number of ways. Her personal philosophy and life experiences ‘will always play a part’ in her judicial decisionmaking. Is she an advocate of judicial activism or of judicial restraint? She told the panel that she was ‘in the middle of those two’ forks, but, in perhaps her boldest statement, she argued that ‘[you] don’t advance development of the law ... by doing what I think has been happening with the U.S. Supreme Court,’ where, she contends, division among the justices has led to ‘confusion rather than clarity.’ She also slammed the nation’s top court for being too insulated.” Yes, a quarter of a century (and actual service on the Supreme Court, private practice, and life experience) has passed since she made those remarks, but this represents one of the few public utterances by Selby – inscrutable as a Bayh Administration gubernatorial aide and largely enigmatic after her judicial service – that could offer a perspective on – if not a clue to – her potential approach to the Hill matter.

□ After a closed hearing last month, Hearing Officer Selby denied a motion filed by the Office of the Inspector General to quash AG Hill’s subpoena requiring OIG to produce all statements, photos, videos, and documents (digital included), collected during the course of OIG’s investigation of General Hill. She finds that Hill “has made a showing of particularized need for the documents, information or objects and there has been a showing that the information cannot be obtained from another source. Accordingly, the Inspector General is hereby ordered to produce the documents, information or objects set forth in Respondent’s Notice of Items sought from special prosecutor’s file held by the Office of Inspector General. Any names or identification included in Item No. 32: ‘Hotline complaint with subject: AG’, may be redacted prior to production.”

□ Despite losing the battle, Indiana Inspector General Lori Torres is gratified that she won the larger war, setting precedent that will serve her office going forward. “We are grateful for the Court’s decision,” she says of the Selby ruling. “The Court required compliance with the IG statute, which requires a third party to show a particularized need and proof they have no other source from which to obtain the information and requires a court to order disclosure. That was always our intent – to ensure that Attorney General Hill complied with the confidentiality statute. Our position is consistent with our history of holding investigative documents, including testimony, confidential. We are comfortable with this outcome.”

□ The entire disciplinary process was nearly derailed as August closed. Recall that we told you Hill's attorneys had subpoenaed the respective top leaders of the Senate and House during the period at issue during the controversy. One of the two, David Long, was the president pro tem of the Senate as events unfolded, but he left the Senate in mid-term to become a member of Ice Miller LLP, the same law firm as Hearing Officer Selby. As Selby explains it, counsel for Hill communicated to her "a concern with regard to a potential witness, David Long, who is a member of her law firm. Based on this disclosure, the question of possible recusal or disqualification of the Hearing Officer based on this disclosure was discussed during a telephonic status conference. While Selby observes that "No motion to recuse to disqualify was pending," she had "indicated that she was considering the matter pursuant to applicable provisions of the Code of Judicial Conduct. The Hearing Officer set forth her analysis of the facts and circumstances involved, as well as the obligations and standards as set forth in Code of Judicial Conduct Rule 2.11. Counsel for both parties were heard. After due consideration, the Hearing Officer has determined that there is not a basis for disqualification or recusal."

□ The depositions of former Sen. Long and House Speaker Brian Bosma (R), as well as Speaker Bosma's chief of staff, Tyler Campbell, were scheduled to be taken August 29.

□ Hill's attorneys also revealed last week that they will depose Rep. Mara Candelaria Reardon (D) and two of the legislative staffers who were fellow plaintiffs in the civil suit against him on September 4 . . . and the length of those depositions is considerably longer than the time set aside for the legislative leader interviews.

● The Department of Local Government Finance issues a nonrule policy document as required by HEA 1043-2017 and HEA 1021-2019 determining the threshold amounts for a "controlled project" as defined in IC 6-1.1-20-1.1; whether a proposed controlled project must be approved by registered voters through a petition and remonstrance; and whether a proposed controlled project must be approved by registered voters through a referendum. The new threshold amounts determined for 2020 are as follows:

(1) For a project to be a controlled project, the threshold amount is $5,350,950.

(2) For a controlled project to trigger a petition and remonstrance process, the threshold amount is $16,052,850.

(3) For a controlled project to trigger the referendum process, the threshold amount is $16,052,850.

● We believe the first public appearance of any consequence by Dan Coats, the former director of national intelligence, since his retirement from a distinguished career of public service will be September 24 before the Economic Club of Indiana in Indianapolis. As one might say, "That's going to be special!"

● Despite Surgeon General Jerome Adams hailing from Indiana (and heading Back Home for a November 18 speech to the Economic Club of Indiana) - and having an acute understanding of and unique perspective on the state's opioid problem, both professionally and personally, Indiana has been grossly shortchanged in federal funding to address the opioid problem, according to a new analysis released by the Richard M. Fairbanks Foundation.

□ A Comparison of State Share of Federal Opioid Funding to State Share of Opioid-Involved Overdose Deaths reveals that "the amount of funding flowing to states is not aligned with their share of opioid-related deaths," and - spoiler alert - Indiana lands at the bottom of the pack.

□ Using recently released data from the Bipartisan Policy Center on federal opioid appropriations by state for fiscal years 2017 and 2018 and comparing this funding to opioid-related overdose deaths, measured using three calculations to correct for underestimates of opioid-related overdose deaths, researchers determine that there are "clear winners and losers: Some states receive significantly more funding than their proportion of the nation's opioid-related deaths, while others receive far less. The most overcompensated four states, receiving far more than their share of federal funding, relative to their share of opioid-related overdose deaths: Oregon, Washington, Texas, and California. California, for example, received almost 11% of federal funding for opioid interventions, but accounted for less than five percent of opioid-related overdose deaths nationally. "On the opposite end, some states with high rates of overdose deaths emerged as clear losers, receiving significantly less funding to address the opioid epidemic than their share of the nation's opioid-related casualties. The four states subjected to "the greatest underfunding were Pennsylvania, Ohio, New Jersey and Indiana Indiana has 4% of deaths and less than 2% of funding."

State	% of opioid-related deaths	% of opioid-related funding	Total federal funding	Amount of overfunding
California	4.8%	10.9%	$ 912.6M	$ 506.4M
Texas	3.3%	6.4%	$ 533.2M	$ 254.8M
Washington	1.3%	2.4%	$ 200.2M	$ 91.5M
Oregon	0.6%	1.4%	$ 118.3M	$ 67.0M
underfunding
Indiana	4.0%	1.9%	$ 158.8M	- $ 175.6M
New Jersey	4.7%	2.3%	$ 192.0M	- $ 203.9M
Ohio	8.0%	4.1%	$ 344.0M	- $ 329.1M
Pennsylvania	8.8%	4.1%	$ 344.5M	- $ 398.0M

□ A key conclusion: "The implications of these findings are clear. People suffering from opioid use disorder are worth the same across each state. The way funding is allocated now - which is not commensurate with the percentage of opioid-related overdose deaths - creates a misalignment between resources and need. As we look to meaningfully tackle America's opioid epidemic, addressing these disparities must be part of the solution."

● The State touts a deal allowing state employees to save 20% on select Indianapolis Colts home games, including match-ups against the Falcons, the Panthers, and all three division rivals . . . and this deal was in effect even before the big Colts QB news hit the fan(s).

● The case, Planned Parenthood of Indiana and Kentucky, Inc. v. Adams, et al., No. 17-2428, was argued back during the first week of January 2018, and was finally decided just last week. This is the legal action arising from SEA 404-2017, the measure that offered a judicial bypass process for a minor seeking an abortion without parental consent. The law authorized a judge to notify the parents of a minor seeking an abortion before the procedure if the judge believed it in the minor's best interest, but it was preliminarily enjoined by Senior Judge Sarah Evans Barker of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana, and the State appealed.

□ We told you after 32 minutes of oral argument between Indiana Solicitor General Tom Fisher facing off against Ken Falk of the American Civil Liberties Union of Indiana in front of a three-judge panel that consisted of two Hoosiers, judges Michael Kanne and David Hamilton, and Judge Ilana Rover, that “Based on what we’ve heard in oral argument in other Seventh Circuit cases dealing with challenged Indiana abortion laws, the outcome does not look to be favorable for the law as enacted. The questions posed to Fisher were far more probing and skeptical than those of Falk.”

□ Some 20 months later, it turns out what we told you was on target. A 50-page 2-1 ruling authored by Judge Hamilton, summarizes things thusly: “Indiana statutes have long provided a fast and confidential judicial bypass procedure that is supposed to allow a small fraction of pregnant, unemancipated minors seeking abortions to obtain them without the consent of or notice to their parents, guardians, or custodians. In 2017, Indiana added a parental notification requirement to the judicial bypass statute. Before the law took effect, plaintiff Planned Parenthood of Indiana and Kentucky, Inc. sued to enjoin its enforcement. In a careful opinion, the district court issued a preliminary injunction against enforcement of the new law’s notice requirements. Planned Parenthood of Indiana & Kentucky, Inc. v. Commissioner, 258 F. Supp. 3d 929, 956 (S.D. Ind. 2017). The defendant state officials have appealed a portion of the preliminary injunction. In light of the lopsided factual record, the deferential standard of review, and the preliminary status of the findings of fact and conclusions of law, we affirm That lopsided factual record indicates that, for the small group of minors affected by this law, requiring parental notice is likely a ‘deal breaker’ for a significant fraction.” Judge Hamilton observed that “The State has not yet come forward with evidence showing that there is a problem for the new parental notice requirement to solve, let alone that the law would reasonably be expected to solve it.”

□ Indiana Public Broadcasting’s Brandon Smith tweets, “By my count, this is the 11th time in the last 3 years Indiana has lost in court over anti-abortion laws. In that same span, it has scored a victory just twice.” One of those wins, earlier this year, was a loss by Indiana University on disposal of fetal remains used in research.

□ The majority also finds from Judge Barker’s “thorough” opinion that “Planned Parenthood demonstrated a likelihood of success on the merits because Indiana’s notice law creates a substantial risk of a practical veto over a mature yet unemancipated minor’s right to an abortion. This practical veto appears likely to impose an undue burden for the unemancipated minors who seek to obtain an abortion without parental involvement via the judicial bypass. The burden appears to be undue because the State has made no effort to support with evidence its claimed justifications or to undermine with evidence Planned Parenthood’s showing about the likely effects of the law In this case, the State has not yet come forward with evidence showing that there is a problem for the new parental notice requirement to solve, let alone that the law would reasonably be expected to solve it,” and takes issue with the State’s purported rationale for prior notice when notice after the fact would address its concerns. “Planned Parenthood’s evidence shows a serious risk that prior notice, instead of giving parents an opportunity to offer wise counsel, will actually give parents an opportunity to exercise a practical veto, preventing the pregnant minor from actually exercising the constitutional right the juvenile court has allowed her to exercise.”

□ The majority also notes that “the State’s brief acknowledges that at least one purpose of the notice requirement is to inhibit the effectiveness of the judicial bypass process itself.” The panel does, however, “disagree with Planned Parenthood’s argument that the statute permits notice to parents even if the bypass court refuses to allow the pregnant minor to proceed without her parents’ consent.”

□ In dissent, Judge Kanne begins by observing that “The question presented in this case is straightforward and narrow: does the Constitution prohibit Indiana from requiring a mature minor to notify her parents of an impending abortion when she cannot show that avoiding notification is in her best interests? The Supreme Court has confirmed that both parental consent and parental notification laws are constitutional,” he reminds his colleagues. “Indiana law requires a minor seeking an abortion to obtain consent from her parents unless she can demonstrate to a judge her maturity or show that an abortion is in her best interests. Ind. Code Ann. § 16-34-2-4(e) (2017). This statutory scheme is constitutional.” Fifteen pages later, he concludes, “The challenged Indiana statute requires parental notification but allows for judicial bypass of that requirement when it would be in the minor’s best interests. Planned Parenthood provided evidence that obtaining parental notification will often not be in the minor’s best interests, but the statute already complies with Supreme Court jurisprudence focused on those concerns. The operative question is whether, given the State’s manifest interest in involving parents in consequential decisions by their children, the notification requirement constitutes a substantial obstacle for mature minors. The record provides no clarity on that point, and so – because the law was enjoined pre-enforcement – we can only speculate. As the majority recognizes, ‘evidence matters.’ [citation omitted] The district court abused its discretion by enjoining the law pre-enforcement, and its decision should be reversed.”

● A coalition of Democratic attorneys general from 16 states, led by Illinois, intervenes on behalf of Whole Woman’s Health Alliance, the Texas abortion facility which the Indiana State Department sought to prevent from opening in South Bend.

□ The 16 AGs file an amicus brief with the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit opposing attempts by Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) on behalf of ISDH to deny Whole Woman’s Health a license over its failure to provide requested documentation about the safety record of affiliated clinics in other states, requests that a three-judge panel of Republican-appointed judges (including one on the President’s “short list” of potential Supreme Court appointees) found to “paint[] a troubling picture. A seemingly endless cycle of demands for information, responses, and new demands does not suggest a bona fide process. At some point, enough is enough. As courts throughout the nation recognize every day in resolving litigation discovery disputes, there comes a point where record requests become so duplicative, or marginally (if at all) relevant, that they are nothing but harassment.”

□ That panel upheld a preliminary injunction granted by Senior Judge Sarah Evans Barker of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana insofar as it allows Whole Woman’s Health Alliance to open its South Bend abortion clinic “as though it were provisionally licensed,” after it was denied the license it sought. Whole Woman’s Health Alliance, et al., v. Hill, et al., No. 19-2051.

□ In the amicus filing in the underlying case, Illinois' attorney general, joined by 15 other states, argues that Judge Barker's preliminary injunction strikes a proper balance between respect for state policy judgments and meaningful judicial review of abortion laws. states have an interest in ensuring public health and safety through regulatory schemes that promote safe access to abortion – a safe medical procedure – and when licensing regimes are enforced in a way that deprives women of access to abortion care, it increases public health risks. Finally, the AGs contend, when a state imposes unconstitutional burdens on women seeking abortions, because women crossing state lines to seek access to abortions and related care may strain the resources of neighboring states. The brief notes that women from Indiana already regularly travel to Chicago to obtain abortions due to Indiana's restrictive laws. As such, potential repercussions from Indiana's actions are not limited simply to Indiana or women who live in Indiana. Illinois is part of the Seventh Circuit, and would be largely bound by any legal findings. The brief also observes that residents of Illinois residents attend institutions of higher education in Northern Indiana, and "although these students may have temporarily left ... to pursue their education," Illinois and the other amicus states "retain an interest in ensuring that they are spared the 'stress, anxiety, shame, and financial hardship' associated with not having access to constitutionally protected medical care."

□ The AGs assert that the interest of states in public health is best served when their licensing and regulatory processes are applied to protect the health and safety of patients, rather than to deny women access to safe abortion services. Preventing a clinic from operating in an underserved area may have the effect of directing women into unsafe situations involving abortions in unregulated conditions, or to ultimately be subject to more risky procedures as a result of forced delays in seeking care. The brief reminds the court that there are only six abortion clinics in the entire state of Indiana, and one-half are found in Indianapolis.

□ In a key legal argument, the amicus observe that Judge Barker "held that defendants' regulatory regime was unconstitutional as applied to plaintiffs. On appeal, defendants argue that abortion regulations are subject to facial challenges only. But when a party is challenging the specific application of an abortion law – such as the denial of a licensing application for a single clinic – state interests are well served by as-applied review. This approach respects the States' legislative and policy judgments on how best to promote health and safety within their borders, yet also ensures that meaningful scrutiny is applied to the enforcement of abortion laws so that the right to abortion care is not unduly burdened."

□ They further explain that "Although at times a statute or regulation may be amenable to a facial challenge, plaintiffs are not as a general rule foreclosed from bringing as-applied challenges to abortion laws. And when a party challenges the constitutionality of a state action taken under a state licensing statute or regulation against a single entity, the States have an interest in that narrow challenge proceeding on an as-applied basis, because if the challenge results in an injunction, the law remains valid and enforceable in other contexts. This state interest is particularly acute when, as here, a district court issues a preliminary injunction affecting enforcement of the law while litigation is ongoing. Additionally, the amicus States have an interest in ensuring that abortion laws are enforced to protect the public health and safety of their residents, without unlawfully interfering with reproductive autonomy."

□ Finally, the Democratic chief state legal officers assert, "States – including the amicus States – have enacted a variety of licensing schemes that may be lawfully applied to protect these interests. However, where, as the district court held occurred here, a State's application of its regulatory regime unduly burdens the right to access abortion services, this application of state law increases public health risks and may strain the resources of neighboring States, because women must cross state lines to receive constitutionally guaranteed medical services."

- The Office of the Attorney General files a motion for summary judgment defending "the constitutionality of two common-sense regulations designed to protect the health and safety of women seeking an abortion." One challenged section requires physician reporting of abortion complications, and the other requires the Indiana State Department of Health to inspect abortion clinics annually to ensure compliance with applicable health and safety regulations. "Both requirements apply to abortion clinic operations rather than the abortion procedure itself (or women seeking abortion), and Plaintiff Planned Parenthood of Ind. & Ky. ... does not argue that either provision imposes an 'undue burden' on such women." "The state has a clear interest in protecting women's health and safety," Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) said after filing the motion. "These laws are reasonable and constitutional means toward achieving this goal." Planned Parenthood of Indiana and Kentucky, Inc. v. Comm'r, Indiana State Dep't of Health, No. 1:18-cv-01219-RLY-DLP.

□ More specifically, the State's memorandum in support of the motion argues that under Evidence Rule 702 and controlling precedents, Planned Parenthood's experts are not qualified to offer some opinions that they tender, and the reporting requirement is not unconstitutionally vague and is properly read to include a mens rea requirement. OAG contends that the phrase "arising from the induction or performance of an abortion" is not unconstitutionally vague; the specific listed complications are not vague; the term "psychological complications" is not vague; "any other adverse event" as defined by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration is not vague; and specific complications are severable. The brief asserts that the reporting requirement does not violate due process, and neither the reporting requirement nor the inspection requirement violates equal protection. The reporting requirement does not violate equal protection because there is no evidence that it singles out abortion providers for disfavored treatment, and the inspection requirement does not violate equal protection.

- The Family and Social Service Administration decides to officially cancel its Request for Proposals for Long Term Care Ombudsman Services.

- The Indiana State Prison is certified as fully compliant with the National Prison Rape Elimination Act (PREA). This certification requires 100% compliance with each of the 43 standards and subsections – 189 in total. The Indiana State Prison met all the standards required for compliance and exceeded the standards in two areas: staff and volunteer training. The certification included a three-day on-site review in April.

□ Among the steps taken by the Michigan City facility to comply with PREA: Increasing inmate education about their rights, and adjusting the process used to notify offenders of their duty to report for medical and mental health care staff.

● On Tuesday, 30 of the best technology projects in state government were named as award finalists by the National Association of State Chief Information Officers, and among the 19 states up for honors is Indiana's effort "Connecting Indiana's Medicaid and Corrections Data to Improve Hoosier Health," one of three finalists in the category of "Cross-Boundary Collaboration & Partnerships."

● Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) takes the time to write another op-ed for FoxNews.com citing California's Proposition 47 - the "Reduced Penalties for Some Crimes Initiative" - from five years ago as a key factor in San Francisco's double-digit percentage rise in homelessness in the last two years. The measure granted leniency to offenders whose crimes are deemed "nonviolent" and "non-serious." "The initiative requires courts in many cases to hand down only misdemeanor sentences for crimes previously classified as felonies. These include offenses such as fraud, grand theft, shoplifting and the personal use of most illegal drugs. San Francisco officials, particularly the city's district attorney, played leading roles in promoting this compassionate vision. They promised a wide array of benefits, such as saving money by sending fewer people to jail," but opposite effects have been experienced, and "one must acknowledge the likelihood that reducing penalties for crimes such as illegal drug use might lead more people to indulge in such activities. This makes it more likely that more people will slide down the slippery path to addiction, homelessness and further crimes."

□ In the op-ed, General Hill observes that "California is not the only place where going soft on crime has had negative effects on urban centers. Similar trends have occurred elsewhere. These realities beg the question: Can policies that make things intolerably worse for everyone really be called compassionate at all? The best correctional models are those that hold offenders accountable for their crimes but also help improve their character by addressing social, emotional, spiritual, educational and familial issues through targeted services. As Indiana's attorney general, I have championed drug addiction treatment programs in jail. For criminal offenders with addiction problems, imprisonment can be a godsend if it helps put them on the road to recovery. The key is connecting them with quality long-term treatment programs that begin during incarceration and continue well beyond their release. Besides offering quality substance abuse treatment programs, we need to do a better job providing education, job training, mental health services and other programs to inmates. We also should explore incentives for employers willing to provide a second chance to job applicants with criminal histories. There is nothing compassionate, however, about going soft even on so-called "nonserious" and "nonviolent" crime. What about the victims of such crime? Where is the concern for them among those eager to reduce criminal penalties? In the 1990s, then-Mayor Rudy Giuliani implemented the "broken windows theory" to significantly reduce crime in New York City. By aggressively targeting even low-level crimes such as vandalism and public intoxication, Giuliani created a safer environment in which more serious crimes were less likely to occur. We have gone from the success of Giuliani's 'broken windows' policy to the failure of broken cities that embrace policies that are contributing to their own destruction. President Ronald Reagan was right when he said: 'We must reject the idea that every time a law's broken, society is guilty rather than the lawbreaker. It is time to restore the American precept that each individual is accountable for his actions.' In states and cities all across our great nation, officials might be surprised at the extent to which accountability and compassion can go hand in hand."

□ Following the weekend op-ed, on Monday morning, he joined Fox News' Fox & Friends live to expound upon the points he made in print. Host Steve Doocy asked him about the Reagan quote he relied upon, and Hill told him "That's one of my favorite quotes of all time, because it really speaks to the heart of the issue what it means to be an American. Accountability for your conduct." General Hill went on to urge California to take a closer look at its criminal justice reforms. "[S]imply reducing sentences, cutting sentences, pretending that criminal conduct isn't occurring or watching criminal conduct occur, but changing the definition so we no longer think it is criminal conduct, or counting it as a score, that doesn't work," he explained. "We need to make sure we hold people accountable for smaller offenses," a callback to the Giuliani "Broken Windows" approach.

● Just a few hours after our front-page story last week about state universities combining forces on cybersecurity defenses, Lake County government officials revealed that their computer systems had been the target of a cyberattack that forced the shutdown of assorted internal government applications and email service to avoid further problems. The county had been notified about a ransomware intrusion by its information technology vendor, Cenifax Management Inc. The county's cybersecurity contractor, CrowdStrike, immediately began a damage assessment and mitigation effort, scanning the county servers and some 3,000 individual computers and adding new security software to the individual machines.

□ The county has insurance coverage for such situations, and while a ransom inquiry was made, it did not include specifics - such as the amount requested - and the county chose to ignore that initial probe. Intriguingly, even as more local government units take out ransomware insurance coverage (LaPorte County felt fortunate to rely upon its insurer when it was recently a ransomware victim), some question whether the local unit gives up too much control (the decision on whether to pay and how much, even though the cost is underwritten by the insurer, an potentially making the local unit complicit in aiding a criminal enterprise) . . . and ProPublica reported Wednesday that "Even when public agencies and companies hit by ransomware could recover their files on their own, insurers prefer to pay the ransom. Why? The attacks are good for business."

□ You must weigh that all, however, versus the cost of paying ransomware from government (taxpayer) funds - as well as the ability of the insurer to bring in a security firm to immediately mitigate and work toward recovery (and some insurers will require security audits and patches before they will agree to indemnify a potential insured).

□ The IT security firm Barracuda Networks (you may remember them as a sponsor of a Bryan Herta Motorsports car for Alex Tagliani at the Indianapolis 500 a few years ago) finds that state and local governments account for the majority of ransomware targets - some 70% of the 55 ransomware attacks it was aware of to date in 2019 alone, according to a report Barracuda published Wednesday. "Smaller towns are often more vulnerable because they lack the technology or resources to protect against ransomware attacks," Barracuda observes, with just over 15% of the municipalities targeted having populations topping 300,000, although that group ended up with the largest damages (thanks largely to the attack that crippled Baltimore).

● We've been following the big-box/dark store property tax conundrum for you for several years now, and Karen Caffarini reports in the Gary Post-Tribune that "The City of Hobart, Merrillville School Corp. and other taxing entities could be required to refund Southlake Mall a total of $7.9 million in past taxes and interest following a state tax review board decision, and elected officials warn this could be just the tip of the iceberg in Lake County," with one elected official warning his colleagues that "with the property tax cap, the burden of replacing this lost money could not be placed on most residential taxpayers, but would have to come from spending cuts, staff reductions, bonding options and other means. Latonya Spearman, Lake County's chief deputy auditor, said there are more than 100 tax appeals filed in Lake County alone, many of which are from big box stores, such as Meijer and Lowe's, and from smaller retailers like Walgreens."

□ The Indiana Board of Tax Review in August "set the mall's assessed valuation at $190 million, $50 million less than it was assessed at based on its market based assessment and $90 million less than the mall was sold for a couple of years ago," and the mall owners are asking the Indiana Tax Court "to have its assessed value reduced even more, to $110 million. The mall is seeking a refund for the years 2011 through 2014. If its assessed value remains at $190 million, the City of Hobart would owe the mall about $3.4 million in refunds and interest, Merrillville schools would owe about $2.9 million and Lake County and other taxing bodies, including the Lake County Library, would owe $1.6 million, although city officials stressed these are not official numbers." Appeals for tax years 2015 through 2018 are also under appeal, and local officials "expect they will come in with similar number."

□ On the flip side, there was a rare IBTR win last week for another county. "A five-year battle over property taxes with the Meijer store in Whitestown resulted in a victory for Boone County from the Indiana Board of Tax Review," according to the Lebanon Reporter. "Meijer Store LTD out of Michigan has appealed every assessment since 2014. Each year, Boone County has based the mega warehouse store's property tax bill on a value of more than $11 million. Meijer claims the valuation is closer to $7.3 million. The difference in valuation means thousands of dollars in taxes due. Wednesday, the Indiana Board of Tax Review released the final determination after a hearing held last December. The finding is that the valuation is nearly $13 million This case was being watched by many other counties and the state legislature"

● Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) joins Attorney General Jim Hood (D-MS) in leading a bipartisan coalition of 47 attorneys general calling upon Congress to authorize the "Autism CARES Act of 2019." This legislation would provide federal support for research into autism spectrum disorders (ASD) and services to those affected by these conditions. "The United States is a caring and compassionate nation," General Hill says. "As Americans, we must stand together to help alleviate the challenges imposed by ASD upon families across the country." A previous version of this legislation is set to expire on September 30.

● For several years we've been following the progress for you of Convention Headquarters Hotels, LLC v. Marion Co. Assessor, No. TA-21, the JW Marriott's appeal of its 2010 Marion County property tax assessment (which the assessor proposed hiking from about $18.5 million to some $487 million). In the latest iteration, the Indiana Tax Court denies a motion by the Marion County Assessor's Office to dismiss the challenge on assorted technical and procedural grounds.

● Indiana ranks 33rd in the nation in highway performance and cost-effectiveness in the Reason Foundation's Annual Highway Report, which measures the condition and cost-effectiveness of state-controlled highways (Indiana's state-controlled highway mileage is the 23rd largest in the country) in 13 categories. This is a one spot increase from the previous report, where we ranked 34th overall. Indiana is in the bottom 10 of all states for its urban and rural interstate pavement conditions. Compared to neighboring states, the report finds Indiana's overall highway performance is worse than Kentucky (5), Ohio (18), Illinois (28), and Michigan (30).

□ Indiana's best rankings are found in the overall fatality rate, urban fatality rate, and administrative disbursements per mile. In safety and performance categories, Indiana ranks 14th in overall fatality rate, 18th in urban fatality rate, 21st in structurally deficient bridges, 27th in traffic congestion, 43rd in urban Interstate pavement condition and 43rd in rural Interstate pavement condition. Indiana's worst rankings are in rural Interstate and urban Interstate pavement condition. On spending, Indiana ranks 30th in total spending per mile and 36th in capital and bridge costs per mile.

● Hamilton County residents may soon find themselves subject to some high new fees – direct and indirect. The Carmel City Council is to consider a proposed increase of almost two-thirds in the city's park impact fee – up by 64% from $2,972, imposed upon each dwelling unit built in Carmel to $4,882 per unit, which Current in Carmel observes would render the Carmel rate almost three times those charged by its neighboring cities of Fishers, Noblesville, and Westfield . . . while the Hamilton County Reporter reports that a 10% increase in Hamilton County's local income tax is likely "to become effective January 1 assuming the Carmel and Fishers city councils adopt resolutions favoring it. The tax is designed to cover the costs of the county's Emergency 911 communications operation. The tax will raise about $17 million next year and mean that the county's cities and county government will no longer have to budget for their share of maintaining the communications," and effectively ensuring that the smaller northern communities, which have been largely subsidized by both the cities and the county for the 911 service, will pay a more equitable share of the burden. That also means, according to Fred Swift explaining in the Reporter, that "In the case of the cities, millions of dollars now being paid for 911 will be freed up for other spending, and for the small towns, there will be no contributions needed."

IN the Economy

● The bad agricultural news that the state has endured over the past few months doesn't get any better with word that the Pro Farmer Midwest Crop Tour that concluded August 22 projects Indiana's estimated corn yield at only 161.46 bushels per acre, which is even down from U.S. Department of Agriculture projections of a 166 bushel per acre yield – itself already stepped down by 23 bushels per acre from 2018 numbers.

□ The latest actual USDA numbers for the 18 states that planted 92% of the 2018 corn acreage show that as of the week ended August 25, only 32% of Indiana's corn crop graded out as Good (29%) or Excellent (three percent), while 27% was rated as Poor (19%) or Very Poor (eight percent). Only Ohio (at 30%) saw a smaller percentage of its corn crop evaluated as Good or Excellent (and its 26% of Poor or Very Poor corn was lower than our crop in falling into those silos) among the top 18.

- The August 2019 Purdue Farmland Value Survey finds Hoosier farmland values edging lower. June year-over-year farmland value comparisons indicate top quality farmland declined 5.3%; average quality farmland declined 0.9%; and the poor quality farm-land decline was so small it resulted in what Purdue University researchers decide is effectively no change. Department of Agricultural Economics researchers express concern that current returns on crops remain insufficient to support the current level of farmland values and cash rents.

- The change in top quality Hoosier farmland for June 2018 to December 2018 accounted for the largest part of the farmland value change. Average and poor quality farmland values in this period posted small increases, a 1.0% increase for average quality farmland and a 3.3% increase for poor quality farmland. During the December 2018 to June 2019 period, top quality farmland continued to decline. Declines in value for average and poor quality land were large enough to offset the gains in the first six months, according to the Purdue Ag team. Average quality farmland declined 1.8% and poor quality farmland declined by 3.2% over the period. For the June 2018 to June 2019 period, top quality farmland declined $456 per acre, average quality farmland declined $61 per acre and poor quality farmland declined by a more modest $2 per acre.

- The Purdue researchers find that “The one item that had an increased negative influence was the outlook for agricultural exports. The quick resolution of trade issues with China and others has not occurred and this government policy change is resulting in an increasing negative influence.” This is the third consecutive year in which U.S. agricultural policy has been viewed as having a negative influence on the farmland market. While agricultural policy is viewed a little less negatively than in 2018, the Purdue team observes that noting agricultural policy as a negative influence on farmland values is a sharp departure from the view held over the prior 70 years.

- Survey respondents indicated that farmers purchased 70% of the farmland sold in 2018, making farmers the largest segment of buyers by a significant margin. The next largest group was long-term nonfarm investors (18%) followed by developers at six percent and pension funds at five percent. Other buyers accounted for less than one percent. Almost 60% of the respondents indicated there was less land on the market than in 2018, while just over 40% indicated the amount was the same. For the first time in more than 20 years of survey work, none of the respondents indicated an increase. For all years from 2014, there was only one year in which less than 50% of the respondents indicated less land on the market than the year before (in 2018 when 45% of the respondents indicated less land was on the market).

- The African American Mayors Association releases a new report examining The Future of Work: The Effect of Job Automation on African-American and Latino Workers in Three Cities, which the association touts as the first in-depth study on automation that pairs economic analysis with educational analysis to offer localized solutions to anticipated job loss due to automation. The report examined three local economies: Gary; Long Beach, California; and Columbia, South Carolina. The study found that while jobs lost to automation may range anywhere from nine percent to upwards of 50% for black and Latino workers in the cities studied, localities already have many often underutilized tools to mitigate such losses such as online training programs and apprenticeships.

- That key Hoosier economic metric that we’ve been following for you continues to ominously trend down. The RV Industry Association’s July survey of manufacturers finds that total RV shipments ended the month with 28,044 wholesale shipments, a decrease of 23.2% from the 36,525 units shipped during July 2018. Towable RVs, led by conventional travel trailers, totaled 25,002 units for the month, a decrease of 23.9% compared to the previous July’s total of 32,835 units. Motorhomes finished the month with only 3,042 units, down by 17.6% compared to the July 2018 total of 3,690 units.

- RV shipments, which were on a progressive decline in each month of the second quarter, now start the third quarter headed in the same wrong direction. Through the first seven months of 2019, RV shipments have reached 244,625 units, down by 20.6% from the 308,113 units at the same January - July point last year. No month yet this year has seen shipments surpass levels posted in the same month of 2018. We continue to have no explanation for this beyond economic difficulties.

- U.S. Census Bureau July statewide totals for building permits issued show 1,521 single-family permits were pulled in Indiana, up 2.1% from June 2019, when 1,490 permits were pulled, but by only 1.6% from the 1,497 permits pulled in July 2018. Indiana’s 9,251 single-family permit numbers for January through July 2019 are down by five percent compared to the permits pulled during the first seven months of 2018.

- In a set of reply comments to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission’s Notice of Inquiry regarding the Commission’s electric transmission incentives policy, the Carmel-based Midcontinent Independent System Operator, Inc. (MISO) submits comments focused on continuing the Commission’s policy of “incenting” Regional Transmission Organization (RTO) membership and retention, and in the process attaches a dollar value to its work. “After launching its energy markets in 2005, the value MISO adds to the region became even more apparent. To quantify this value, MISO – in collaboration with its stakeholders – created the MISO Value Proposition. MISO’s Value Proposition study began in 2007 and quantifies the value that MISO provides to the region, including MISO Market Participants and their customers. The Value Proposition breaks MISO’s business model into categories of benefits, such as: improved reliability, market commitment and dispatch (including the dispatch of energy, common footprint regulation, and spinning reserves), wind integration, compliance, and generation investment deferral (including footprint diversity, generator availability, and demand response). MISO’s Value Proposition studies have shown that the MISO region realized an estimated $24.3 billion in cumulative benefits from 2007-2018. Additionally, MISO demonstrates significant qualitative benefits to its members and the region, including price/informational transparency, planning coordination, and seams management. This value has been delivered to members notwithstanding significant industry and regulatory changes in how MISO (and other RTOs) are required to plan, develop, and operate the transmission system.”

- Even as the state edges closer to investing in a fourth port, the Port of Indiana-Burns Harbor expects to invest $20 million over the next four years for what Joseph Pete reports for the Times of Northwest Indiana, will be “a major expansion that will boost its cargo handling capacity,” and includes “five big projects in the coming years,” including two new rail yards to handle unit (block) trains “in which all cars carry the same commodity from the same starting point to the same destination, a truck marshaling yard, and more.

● United Conveyor Corporation in Mishawaka closes with little notice as the parent company looks to consolidate St. Joseph County operations into a Milwaukee facility, affecting some 50 Hoosier jobs . . . two months after workers went on strike at the Valparaiso bearings manufacturing facility operated by Wisconsin-based Regal Beloit Corporation, the company plans to close local operations and, after paring down product lines, transfer remaining work to a sister plant in Monticello, affecting the jobs of some 140 Valpo-based workers . . . U.S. Steel plans to idle its underutilized East Chicago Tin facility (for the second time in just four years) by mid-November, a victim of Section 232 steel tariffs and “high levels of low-priced imported tin” undercutting the domestic tin market. The East Chicago facility, one of the “Big Six” mills in Lake and Porter counties, produces tin-plated metal for such products as food and paint cans. While the facility employs some 300 workers, about 150 are expected to be offered positions at U.S. Steel’s Gary Works and Midwest Plant in Portage, where some of the current work will be consolidated. Layoffs are expected for about 150 employees. The tin mill idling follows a June decision by U.S. Steel to temporarily idle a blast furnace at Gary Works “in response to decreasing steel prices and a softening market. There were no layoffs associated with that move,” the Chicago Tribune notes . . . Indiana Wesleyan University plans to lay off nine faculty members as part of a Marion campus academic restructuring . . . The Mitchel Group, Inc. plans to permanently close its Indianapolis Mitchel & Scott Machine facility that manufactures parts for the automotive and heavy-duty engine industries, by the end of October, eliminating almost 1490 local jobs.

● Carmel-based KAR Auction Services, Inc. which provides sellers and buyers across the global wholesale used-vehicle industry with remarketing platform solutions, plans to invest $3.75 million to establish a separate headquarters for its TradeRev division (which offers a digital platform that facilitates live, dealer-to-dealer vehicle auctions) in 45,000 square feet of the eight-story Century Building in the Wholesale District of downtown Indianapolis. KAR/TradeRev expects to add some 200 new jobs by 2023 . . .

IN Transition

● Former U.S. Rep. Luke Messer (R) joins the board of directors of Higher Learning Advocates, a non-profit organization “working to shift federal policy from higher education to higher learning – education and training beyond high school that leads to a degree, credential, or employment.”

● Sen. Eric Koch (R) is reappointed as a member of the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws by Senate President Pro Tem Rodric Bray (R).

● Thanks to Chris Sikich and Tony Cook of the Indianapolis Star, we now know that highly touted former Boone County prosecutor Todd Meyer (R) resigned from his post as associate director of the Department of Child Services one day after a DCS college intern he recruited reported extensive “creepy” text messages from him to the agency’s human resources staff. He had left his post with no explanation, and state officials remained mum. At an event Thursday, the Governor told print and television reporters that he was “disgusted” and “beyond disappointed” by the incident. As we recently told you, he’s effectively taken a hard-line zero tolerance stance on sexual harassment-type matters.

● Lori Torres will remain the state’s inspector general after she was unsuccessful in being selected as Johnson County prosecutor in a five-candidate Republican county caucus field on Thursday night (although there is some talk about candidates or other filing a challenge to the validity of the selection process after the first caucus was postponed over a myriad of issues blamed on the local party and legal confusion.

● Troy Keith, a 21-year employee of the Indiana Department of Correction, is promoted to director of parole services for IDOC after serving as deputy since the end of 2018, assuming supervision of all 10 state parole districts day-to-day operations.

● As the shake-up at the troubled Indiana Department of Veterans Affairs continues, Michael G. Thompson joins IDVA as its first operations director, a post from which he will oversee daily operations; the controversial Military Family Relief Fund and other veteran services programs; and develop annual operating plans and manage the agency’s budget, as detailed by Kara Kenney of WRTV-TV’s Call 6 Investigates in Indianapolis. Thompson moves to IDVA from the Department of Workforce Development, where he had served as DWD’s state veteran program director, was responsible for developing partnerships between federal, state, and local agencies that assist veterans and their families. Kenney notes that Thompson is a 27-year veteran of the U.S. Army and the Indiana National Guard.

IN the Lobby

● Allison Transmission, Inc., retains the Greenberg Traurig, LLP law firm’s Washington, D.C. office, which files a federal lobby registration for “Administrative and legislative monitoring and outreach on issues related to transmission technologies. Administrative and legislative monitoring and outreach related to the Department of Defense Appropriations Act. Administrative and legislative monitoring and outreach related to the National Defense Authorization Act.”

IN Court

● The cork you hear popping is to celebrate the fact that electronic filing in court cases is now available in all trial courts across the state’s 92 counties and all three appellate courts. Hamilton County was the first to implement the statewide e-filing system in July 2015, and Sullivan County joined just last month, making every Indiana county part of e-filing. More than 500,000 documents are e-filed in courts across Indiana each month.

ANDERSON — In an age of electronic banking where most consumers have the ability to keep track of nearly anything with a few swipes across their smartphone screens, it seems hard to believe that the state of Indiana currently holds property and funds worth more than $530 million that are considered unclaimed.

“People are usually pretty surprised” to hear the number, says Amy Hendrix, the director of Indiana’s Unclaimed Property Division.

The state’s inventory of unclaimed funds is mostly money — in one form or another, Hendrix says.

“Unclaimed property is a confusing term to many people,” she said. “It’s money, with the exception of safe deposit boxes that come to us from banks. Rarely are we giving back physical, tangible items.”

For example, when a tenant moves out of an apartment but forgets to collect his refundable security deposit, the landlord becomes responsible for holding the money and reporting it to the Unclaimed Property Division. Holders must report twice a year — in May and November — on the money they’re holding for people. Dollar amounts can range from pennies on a consumer rebate to thousands of dollars in an inheritance.

The state’s efforts to reunite missing property with its rightful owners is extensive and, in some ways, unique. Indiana is believed to be the only state that tracks unclaimed property through the state’s attorney general’s office.

“With most states, it’s under the treasury department,” Hendrix said. “I do know that we consider unclaimed property under consumer protection, which is under the purview of the attorney general’s office.”

Hendrix says her staff travels around the state extensively in efforts to provide consumers with details on how to access and search the vast database to see if they might find something. Last year, representatives from the Unclaimed Property Division visited all 92 Indiana counties, which helped spur claim payouts amounting to more than $36 million.

The system, which some legislators admit could be more user-friendly, nonetheless sees more than 200 active claims a day.

“Some companies may not understand the unclaimed property laws,” Hendrix said. “We’ve done a good job reaching out to people, and as a result we’ve received more money into the state, so as a result we have more money to return to the owners.”

So far this year, the state has returned more than $47 million in unclaimed property to Hoosiers, including more than 710,000 claims of more than $100.

There has been discussion on what the state should do with funds that go unclaimed over the long term. Currently, the Unclaimed Property Division holds property for 25 years, and then it becomes the property of the state, with the money going into the state’s general fund. Legislators representing Madison County favor eventually returning the money to taxpayers.

“What would probably be a better solution is returning it if it reached a certain threshold,” said state Rep. Melanie Wright, D-Yorktown. “That’s just money that could be going back into Hoosier hands and needs to go back into Hoosier hands.”

For parents who spent this weekend loading up the family car with laundry bags that would knock over Santa Claus, schlepping your son's not-so-mini fridge up cramped dorm staircases or struggling to apply fitted sheets to lofted bunk-beds that sit 3 to 4 inches from the ceiling, I don't need to tell you that sending kids to college is a stressful affair.

Where it hurts the most, however, is not the week of aching knees that follows, but in the four years of endless assault on your bank account.

Since the 1980s, the inflation-adjusted cost of a college degree has nearly tripled, with tuition and room and board increasing at a rate eight times higher than wages. Higher education is now the only sector of the economy whose price balloons at a faster pace than our broken health-care market: not a record that needed beating.

Enter Mitch Daniels. When the former Indiana governor took up the mantle as president of Purdue University, I was curious to see how his track record as an innovative and staunch fiscal hawk – nicknamed “The Blade” by President George W. Bush – would translate to such a bloated and anti-competitive industry.

Six years later, Mitch Daniels has shaped Purdue into the national model for making college affordable, attainable and actually worth it.

Daniels first made headlines in 2013 for freezing tuition across the board for all students at Purdue. Critics doubted he would be able to keep it up for long, but if your son or daughter enrolled at Purdue any semester since Daniels took the helm in 2013, they would have graduated without paying a nickel more per term than when they started.

Purdue has held firm against ballooning tuition costs nationwide because Daniels approached the problem as a businessman would: digging deep in the balance sheet to find waste and lower fixed costs, holding all segments of the enterprise fiscally accountable and tapping into new sources for revenue, such as energizing the university’s alumni network through the Purdue Day of Giving program and even brewing a university-branded beer.

Other universities would do well to emulate Daniels’ success on another critical issue: reducing debt among graduates. One solution Daniels has implemented is income sharing: a program in which the university will pay for a student’s education in exchange for a fixed percentage of the graduate’s income for a fixed time. These agreements align the priorities of students and universities, shift the risk off of new graduates and onto the lender, and incentivize universities to help graduates find gainful employment as soon as possible.

Due to these innovations and holding costs down for students, the average debt owed by a Purdue grad has declined every year since Daniels took the reins, and while the national student loan default rate falls somewhere between 7% and 8%, Purdue’s is a third of that.

As I've crisscrossed Indiana this year, one question that comes up in every town is workforce development. By 2025 Indiana is expected to have 1 million job openings, and nationally there are already over a million more jobs than there are unemployed Americans. Universities must align their priorities with the needs of employers, and President Daniels has met this challenge by investing in workforce development programs throughout Indiana with the Purdue Polytechnic Institute and in online learning.

Daniels' move to acquire Kaplan University and rebrand it Purdue Global last year – the first time a state university has acquired a for-profit college, and for the low price of $1 – conveys his long-term vision for what the modern university can be: a resource for students of all ages and stages of life to learn skills to help them compete in the modern workforce and fill great-paying jobs that are available now for those with the necessary training. This year, Purdue Global counts more than 2,000 Hoosiers as students – predominately women — with an average age of 34.

As someone who is also trying to bring a business mindset to a bloated and arcane system — in my case, the U.S. Senate — I respect what Mitch Daniels has done in post-secondary education all the more.

If the university system fails to heed President Daniels' warnings, it may be at their peril. Already, many small colleges and universities have begun to collapse under the weight of large overhead costs, and if the perceived value of a college degree continues to fall as tuition costs continue to rise, you don't need to be a math whiz to know what might happen next.

However, if universities do follow Mitch Daniels' first-rate example at Purdue, he'll be rightly remembered as a watershed innovator for the industry: the Henry Ford of higher education.

Republican Mike Braun is the junior U.S. senator from Indiana. His op-ed was first published by the Journal & Courier of Lafayette.

MAYOR PETE TO POST $19M: Powered by the grassroots energy of more than 580,000 donors, Pete for America will file an FEC report later this month showing we have raised over $19 million during the 3rd quarter, bringing our total raised to more than $51 million since the beginning of this year, according to campaign manager Mike Schmuhl (Howey Politics Indiana). "This is great news and it positions us to not just go the distance, but win," Schmuhl said. "What we've raised has helped us hire organizers and open offices in states critical to winning the nomination. It's gotten Pete to debate stages. We've run ads and been able to move Pete around the country to rally new supporters day by day, week by week."

BUTTIGIEG MAKING 2 INDIANA APPEARANCES THIS WEEK: Mayor Pete Buttigieg will be making two Indiana campaign appearances this week. He will open up a new campaign headquarters in South Bend at 6 p.m. Thursday. The new office will be at 218 Sycamore Street (Howey Politics Indiana). On Friday, Buttigieg will address the Greater Indianapolis NAACP 50th Freedom Fund Banquet, which begins at 5:30 p.m. Friday, with his remarks scheduled for 7:20 p.m. at the Marriott Downtown on Maryland St. Buttigieg has lagged in polls with African-American voters in early primary states. The mayor has no endorsements from the Indiana General Assembly Black Caucus or from his hometown of South Bend.

MARION COUNTY WON'T PROSECUTE POT CASES UNDER 1 OUNCE: The Marion County Prosecutor's office announced Monday the county will no longer prosecute simple possession of marijuana cases (Howey Politics Indiana). Prosecutor Ryan Mears says cases involving less than an ounce of marijuana won't be prosecuted. The rule is effective today. "This is something that has been on our minds and discussed internally for the last couple of years. We have discussed this issue with different law enforcement partners. We think this is going to have a number of benefits to the community," Mears said. Possessing under one ounce classifies as a class B misdemeanor, which is why that amount was chosen. Possessing an ounce or more classifies for a dealing marijuana charge, which the county will continue to prosecute. Tim Moriarty, who will challenge Mears for the job on Saturday, said he would pursue a similar policy. "If elected Marion County Prosecutor on Saturday, I would keep this change in policy in place and work alongside the community to analyze its effects," Moriarty said Monday morning.

TASK FORCE PROBES COUNTY JAIL OVERCROWDING: A bipartisan task force to address jail overcrowding kicked off the first of three meetings with local law enforcement around the state Monday in French Lick (Pinsker, Indiana Public Media). State Rep. Randy Frye (R-Greensburg) proposed legislation creating the task force earlier this year, after hearing about jail overcrowding problems in each of the seven southeast Indiana counties he represents. "Building a new jail will accommodate more prisoners, but it doesn't solve the problem it's more about treating the symptom," Frye says. Frye says the task force will look at whether overcrowding is linked to prisoners not being able to post bail, longer sentences, and drug problems. Rep. J.D. Ford (D-Indianapolis) says he's worried about having enough people on staff at jails to deal with mental health issues. "I've heard from different folks that our jails are serving as detox centers, I've heard from different folks that mental health is a problem," Ford says. The panel will forward its findings to the state legislature in early 2020.

GOP SUPPORT FOR IMPEACHMENT INQUIRY GROWS: Americans are about evenly split over impeaching President Donald Trump and removing him from office, as support for that move has risen among independents and Republicans, according to a new CNN poll conducted by SSRS after the announcement of a formal impeachment inquiry by House Democrats last week. About half, 47%, support impeaching the President and removing him from office, up from 41% who felt that way in a CNN poll in May. The current level matches the high point for impeaching Trump in previous CNN polling -- 47% said they felt that way in September 2018. And that shift is concentrated on the GOP side. Among Republicans and Republican-leaning independents under age 50, support for impeaching Trump and removing him from office has risen from 9% in May to 22% now, while views among older Republicans and Republican leaners have held about even with just 8% in favor of impeachment and removal from office.

POMPEO LISTENED IN ON TRUMP UKRAINE CALL: Secretary of State Mike Pompeo was among administration officials who listened in on the July 25 phone call between President Trump and Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky, a senior State Department official said Monday, a disclosure that ties the State Department more closely to the House impeachment inquiry (Wall Street Journal). Mr. Pompeo's participation on the call hasn't been previously reported. Last week, a State Department official disputed the contention in a complaint filed under federal whistleblower laws by a Central Intelligence Agency officer that another top State Department official, counselor Ulrich Brechbuhl, listened in on the call. House Democrats have opened a their inquiry focused on Mr. Trump's dealings with Ukraine, and lawmakers are focusing on the whistleblower complaint and a record of the call released by the administration. Mr. Pompeo said last week that he hadn't yet read the whistleblower's complaint in its entirety, but said that to his knowledge, actions by State Department officials had been "entirely appropriate and consistent" with administration efforts to improve relations with Ukraine.

WHISTLEBLOWER UNDER FEDERAL PROTECTION: Lawyers representing the whistleblower behind the explosive complaint involving President Trump's efforts to persuade Ukraine's president to investigate former Vice President Joe Biden and his son Hunter Biden expressed concern for their client's safety in a letter to lawmakers released Sunday (The Hill). In a letter to Senate Intelligence Committee Chairman Richard Burr (R-N.C.), House Intelligence Committee Chairman Adam Schiff (D-Calif.) and others, lawyers representing the whistleblower said they had "serious concerns for our client's personal safety, as well as for others connected to this matter." They called on lawmakers "to speak out in favor of whistleblower protection and reiterate that this is a protected system where retaliation is not permitted, whether direct or implied." The lawyers also attached correspondence with acting Director of National Intelligence Joseph Maguire thanking him for his supportive words during his testimony and expressing concerns for their client. "60 Minutes," which first obtained the letter, originally reported that the contents suggested the whistleblower was under federal protection. However, lawyer Mark Zaid said in a statement to The Hill that the news outlet "completely misinterpreted the contents of our letter."

McCONNELL COMPELLED TO TAKE UP IMPEACHMENT CASE: Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) on Monday said that the Senate would have "no choice" but to take up impeachment if the House passes articles against President Trump (The Hill). "Well under the Senate rules we're required to take it up if the House does go down that path and we'll follow the Senate rules," McConnell said during an interview with CNBC. Pressed on if he was saying the Senate would take action on impeachment, he added: "I would have no choice but to take it up, based on a Senate rule on impeachment."

CORN PRICES PLUNGE: American corn farmers hit by historic spring floods are now facing the biggest quarterly price decline in five years on upbeat U.S. government crop estimates. Growers and analysts alike have scoffed at the U.S. Department of Agriculture's outlook for U.S. corn, which has been consistently more upbeat than private estimates (Bloomberg). The relatively rosy projections have corn futures in Chicago on track for a quarterly decline of about 14%, which would be the biggest since 2014. Still, money managers trimmed their bets on a price decline for the first time in more than two months, according to data from the U.S. Commodity Futures Trading Commission, as the market gears up for harvest data and corn inventory figures. "USDA has factored in a sizable corn crop," Brian Hoops, senior market analyst at Midwest Market Solutions in Springfield, Missouri, said by telephone. "It's going to come down to yields at harvest -- how good or bad they are." As of this week, only 7% of the corn crop was harvested, compared with the five-year average of 11%. Even with a smaller harvest, farmers are facing reduced demand. The ethanol sector that consumes more than a third of the crop has seen its margins squeezed, while Brazilian and Ukrainian corn are usurping U.S. grain in export markets.

VIGIL FOR KHASHOGGI AT ISU WEDNESDAY: Slain Washington Post journalist and Indiana State University alumnus Jamal Khashoggi will be memorialized with a candlelight vigil at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday at Dede Plaza, near the fountain on ISU's campus (Terre Haute Tribune-Star). Wednesday marks the one-year anniversary of Khashoggi's death. A critic of the Saudi government, he was assassinated in early October 2018 after visiting the Saudi embassy in Turkey to obtain marriage documents. His death prompted an international outcry. Khashoggi attended Indiana State as an undergraduate from 1977 to 1982 and received a business administration degree on May 7, 1983. The vigil is being conducted by the ISU chapter of the Society of Professional Journalists, said Lori Henson, chapter adviser. "We thought it was important to remember him on the anniversary of his death. There is still a lot that his life and death can teach us about the importance of a free press and protection of the First Amendment in the United States," she said.

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: This is what happens when the governor and legislators lag behind public sentiments on issues. The decision by the Marion County prosecutor to stop pressing charges on marijuana possession will likely set off a new trend, and will divide the state. Marion County is not the only jurisdiction taking this approach. Vigo County Sheriff John Plasse told the Tribune-Star this past summer that possession of recreational amounts of marijuana would likely result only in a ticket. Most Hoosiers know that marijuana should not be on the same schedule as heroin or morphine. Local officials have overcrowded jails, so their priorities are shifting. The 2016 HPI/WTNR-TV Poll revealed support for medicinal marijuana was north of 70% and by the end of the year recreational marijuana will likely be legal in Illinois, Michigan and Ohio, while support appears to be growing in Kentucky. Now we are seeing these elements beginning to be reflected at the local level. - Brian A. Howey

NEW HOGSETT TV AD: In the first 60-second ad of the cycle, the Hogsett campaign focuses on telling the story of Donita Royal, a mother who tragically lost her son to gun violence. The newest campaign ad, "Mothers Against Violence" follows the story of a mother who responded to unimaginable heartbreak with incredible strength and a desire to support others experiencing loss (Howey Politics Indiana). "My life changed forever. But I decided to take my pain and turn it into something positive -- a way to keep his memory alive by helping other mothers," Donita explains in the ad. Donita founded the Mothers Against Violence Healing Ministry, an organization that helps grieving families who have lost loved ones to gun violence. In partnership with Mayor Hogsett and his efforts to support grassroots organizations that aim to address the cycle of community violence, Mothers Against Violence has received grant funding in order to help families navigate trauma. Donita was able to provide direct help to families experiencing the loss of a child due to gun violence. "What I love about Mayor Hogsett – he's a man of faith. And my spirit connects with that."

INDY CHAMBER ENDORSES HOGSETT: The Indy Chamber's Business Advocacy Committee (BAC) – the political arm of the region's largest business organization – announced its endorsements of Mayor Joe Hogsett (Howey Politics Indiana). The BAC also a bipartisan group of City-County Council candidates who share a common-sense commitment to issues like economic and workforce development, investing in infrastructure (including mass transit), neighborhood redevelopment and public safety. "Our city's economy is stronger when more of our citizens are able to contribute to it," said Indy Chamber President and CEO Michael Huber. "Mayor Hogsett is committed to this ideal of inclusive growth, restructuring local economic incentives to upgrade our job market and launching initiatives like 'Indy Achieves' to upskill our workforce, while supporting improved transit to connect people and employers." "Elections are competitions of ideas, and our BAC faced a difficult decision – Jim Merritt has offered thoughtful plans on a range of important issues, like focusing on substance abuse treatment as a preemptive strategy to address crime and poverty," noted Indy Chamber Chief Policy Officer Mark Fisher.

ZODY QUESTIONS HOLCOMB ON MANUFACTURING: Indiana is just one of four states that lost manufacturing jobs in the past 12 months. New data from Holcomb's Department of Workforce Development painted a grim picture. Indiana lost 1,500 manufacturing jobs between August and September 2019 and 3,000 in the past 12 months (Howey Politics Indiana). Chairman John Zody pointed out that Governor Eric Holcomb, who never runs from an opportunity to spotlight positive economic news, has been silent at what could be a critical inflection point. "Indiana appears on the leading edge of a manufacturing sell off, does Gov. Holcomb have a plan?" said Zody. "The red lights are flashing. Is Holcomb even paying attention?"

REP. MAC THORNBERRY KEEPS 'TEXODUS' ROLLING: Rep. Mac Thornberry (R-Texas) announced on Monday that he won't seek reelection in 2020, marking yet another high-profile retirement for House Republicans (Politico). As the top Republican on the House Armed Services Committee, Thornberry was a vocal supporter of efforts to boost military spending and helped win major increases in the defense budget under President Donald Trump. "It has been a great honor to serve the people of the 13th District of Texas as their congressman for the last 25 years," Thornberry said in a statement. "They have given me opportunities to serve the nation in ways I could have never imagined, including as Chairman of the House Armed Services Committee. "We are reminded, however, that 'for everything there is a season,' and I believe that the time has come for a change," he added. "Therefore, I will not be a candidate for reelection in the 2020 election."

SANDERS TO POST $25M: Senator Bernie Sanders raised $25.3 million in the past three months, his campaign said on Tuesday, a total that continues to demonstrate his strength with small donors as he fights to maintain support in key early-voting states (New York Times). The financial haul, among the first that a candidate has announced for the third-quarter, will almost certainly place Mr. Sanders in the top of the field for fund-raising. It is also a much-needed boost for his campaign, as it looks to move past a summer slump that coincided with staff shake-ups in New Hampshire and Iowa and a slip in some polls in early-voting states. And it will perhaps help quell the narrative that his campaign is in decline.

QUINNIPIAC POLL SHOWS 47% BACK IMPEACHMENT: American voters are divided on impeaching and removing President Trump from office, 47 - 47 percent - closing a 20 point gap from less than a week ago, according to a Quinnipiac University Poll released today. In the poll released on September 25th, voters said that the president should not be impeached and removed 57 - 37 percent. Among the political party subgroups, Democrats showed the greatest change from the last poll. Today, they show a virtual consensus on impeaching Trump, 90 - 5 percent, while last week they said Trump should be impeached 73 - 21 percent. The gap also closed among independents, who clearly said that the president should not be impeached last week 58 - 34 percent, and today are only slightly opposed to impeachment at 50 - 42 percent. Republicans feel much the same today as they did last week about impeachment; today, they say Trump should not be impeached 92 - 7 percent, and last week, they were opposed 95 - 4 percent. While voters are split on impeaching and removing President Trump from office, a slim majority of registered voters do approve of the impeachment inquiry opened by the U.S. House of Representatives 52 - 45 percent. Approval includes half of independents, who are split 50 - 45 percent on the inquiry.

45% BACK IMPEACHMENT IN REUTERS POLL: The number of Americans who believe President Donald Trump should be impeached rose by 8 percentage points over the past week as more people learned about allegations that Trump pressured Ukraine to smear his top Democratic political rival Joe Biden, according to a Reuters/Ipsos poll released on Monday (Reuters). "The Sept. 26-30 opinion poll found that 45% of adults believe Republican Trump 'should be impeached,' compared with 37% in a similar poll that ran last week. Another 41% said that Trump should not be impeached and 15% said they 'don't know.'"

FLAKE URGES GOP NOT TO RENOMINATE TRUMP: Former GOP Sen. Jeff Flake called on Republicans to not support President Donald Trump's reelection campaign and argued that his latest scandal involving Ukraine warrants impeachment (Politico). "Whether you believe the president deserves impeachment, you know he does not deserve reelection," Flake, a vocal critic of Trump, wrote in a Washington Post op-ed published Monday.

ONLY 33% APPROVE OF TRUMP ON RACE RELATIONS: Large majorities of black and Latino Americans think Donald Trump's actions as president have made things worse for people like them, and about two-thirds of Americans overall disapprove of how he's handling race relations, according to a new poll conducted by The Associated Press-NORC Center for Public Affairs Research. About half of all Americans think Trump's actions have been bad for African Americans, Muslims and women, and slightly more than half say they've been bad for Hispanics. Trump's 33% approval rating on handling race relations makes that one of his worst issues in recent AP-NORC polls. That stands in stark contrast to his handling of the economy: About half say they approve of his handling of that issue, while views of current economic conditions continue to be rosy amid robust employment numbers and a strong stock market.

TRUMP FACEBOOK ADS FEATURE IMPEACHMENT: More than 1,800 ads on Trump's Facebook page mentioning 'impeachment' have run in the past seven days (CNN). The ads have been viewed between 16 and 18 million times on Facebook and the campaign has spent between $600,000 and $2,000,000 on the effort, according to data analyzed by Laura Edelson, a researcher at New York University's Tandon School of Engineering. The President is using ads to enlist people in what his campaign is calling the "Official Impeachment Defense Task Force."

TRUMP RAISES $8M IN 2 DAYS: Donald Trump's campaign aides expected months ago that Democrats would try to impeach the president — and he needed a way to exploit it. So this summer, Trump 2020 officials spliced news clips of Democrats discussing impeachment into a 90-second video montage, punctuated by the president imploring supporters to help him 'stop this nonsense' (Politico). Aides quietly filed the spot away until last week, when it was released it as part of an online counteroffensive to the impeachment push that brought in 50,000-plus new donors and raked in $8.5 million in two days — the campaign's biggest digital haul since its June launch.

MAYOR PETE'S MOM READS CAMPAIGN LETTERS: Several times a week, Anne Montgomery makes her way a few miles from her home to a fifth-floor office in downtown South Bend that teems with young adults working to elect her son president. She reads letters that bring back anxieties about being the mother of Pete Buttigieg, the first gay man to become a leading presidential candidate (AP). The ones that touch her most are testimonials of people who have come out as gay, or from their parents, praising Pete. "To read them, I realize the terrible time some people have," she said. "The cruelty. The ignorance." In her own quiet way, the lively, 74-year-old retired Notre Dame linguistics professor, with bouncing white curls and a devilish grin, is clear-eyed about the ugliness that persists in the country her son hopes to lead. She's been primarily in the background, answering about 40 letters a week and attending an occasional rally. But she also finds herself becoming a more public person as she starts to help tell the story of her son in his quest for the Democratic presidential nomination.

BRAUN, YOUNG PUSH NEW FETAL REMAINS LAW: Indiana's U.S. senators want to extend across the nation an Indiana law requiring the burial or cremation of aborted fetal tissue. Republican Sens. Mike Braun and Todd Young have introduced the Dignity for Aborted Children Act, which is co-sponsored by 10 other GOP senators. Braun's office said the legislation mirrors a 2016 Indiana statute upheld in May by the U.S. Supreme Court (Francisco, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). The bill comes in the wake of the recent discovery of 2,246 preserved fetal remains at the Illinois home of the late Dr. Ulrich "George" Klopfer, who had performed abortions for many years at clinics in Fort Wayne, South Bend and Gary. The Braun-Young proposal would require abortion providers to dispose of fetal remains by way of burial or creation. A provider who fails to do so would face a fine and a prison term of up to five years. The bill also would require women who have abortions to choose whether to retain possession of the fetal remains or allow abortion providers to bury or cremate them. A provider who does not provide a consent form would face a civil penalty.

HOUSE SUBPOENAS GIULIANI, ENVOYS: The House committees plan to depose former U.S. ambassador to Ukraine Marie Yovanovitch ; U.S. special envoy to Ukraine Kurt Volker ; Deputy Assistant Secretary for European and Eurasian Affairs George Kent; Mr. Brechbuhl; and U.S. Ambassador to the EU Gordon Sondland (Wall Street Journal). Mr. Volker resigned his post last week. A representative for Mr. Sondland said Monday that he planned to cooperate with the congressional inquiry. House committees on Monday also subpoenaed Rudy Giuliani, Mr. Trump's private lawyer, for documents related to his efforts to pressure Ukraine to undertake an investigation into former Vice President Joe Biden, the president's political rival. The panels are seeking documents related to his communications with Trump administration officials about his efforts in Ukraine, as well as any other documents related to that effort. Mr. Giuliani has given mixed messages on whether he would testify before a House committee. Speaking on ABC News on Sunday, he said he wouldn't cooperate with House Intelligence Committee chairman Rep. Adam Schiff (D., Calif.) but then said "I will consider it."

'THE WOMAN' SCHEDULED TO TESTIFY: In President Trump's rough parlance, she was "the woman." That's how Trump described Marie Louise Yovanovitch, the widely respected former U.S. ambassador to Ukraine, in his July 25 telephone call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky (Los Angeles Times). Now the 60-year-old envoy, who spent more than three decades in the diplomatic service, could prove key to illuminating murky events central to the House impeachment inquiry against Trump. The veteran diplomat was abruptly ordered back to Washington in May, ending her three-year tour two months early. By then, the events that ultimately would set the stage for the impeachment saga were already in play. Yovanovitch is one of five current or former State Department employees summoned to provide depositions to investigators from the House committees on intelligence, foreign affairs and oversight. Her closed-door appearance is scheduled Wednesday.

DEMOCRATS BELIEVE TRUMP LIED TO MUELLER: Lawyers for the House of Representatives revealed on Monday that they have reason to believe that the grand-jury redactions in special counsel Robert Mueller's report show that President Donald Trump lied about his knowledge of his campaign's contacts with WikiLeaks (Politico). The attorneys made the stunning suggestion in a court filing as part of the House Judiciary Committee's bid for Mueller's grand-jury materials, which have remained secret by law. "Not only could those materials demonstrate the president's motives for obstructing the special counsel's investigation, they also could reveal that Trump was aware of his campaign's contacts with WikiLeaks," the lawyers wrote in the filing, which was in response to the Justice Department's opposition to the disclosure of the grand-jury information.

YOUNG BACKS GENETICALLY RAISED SALMON: In an op-ed for The Star Press, U.S. Senator Todd Young (R-Ind.) argues for protecting jobs and the production of genetically engineered salmon in Albany, Indiana (Howey Politics Indiana). Young recently led a letter to the Senate Appropriations Committee voicing concern over a provision in an agriculture appropriations bill that would prohibit the commercialization of genetically engineered salmon. If enacted, this provision would cause AquaBounty Technologies in Albany to have to cease production immediately and put Hoosiers out of work. "The results would be this: 160,000 fish currently maturing in Albany would be euthanized. Dozens of Hoosiers would be out of a job. The operation would be moved to another country — likely China — which sees the incredible value in dominating agriculture innovation," Senator Young writes.

REP. COLLINS RESIGNS AHEAD OF GUILTY PLEA: U.S. Rep. Christopher Collins of New York resigned Monday ahead of his expected guilty plea to charges related to an insider-trading case involving his son and an Australian biotechnology company (Wall Street Journal). "I hereby submit my resignation effective immediately, September 30, 2019," Mr. Collins, a Republican, wrote in a letter to New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo. A spokesman for House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D., Calif.) said her office had received Mr. Collins's letter of resignation, which would become effective Tuesday during a House session.

TALLIAN PRAISES MARION COUNTY POT CHANGE: State Senator Karen Tallian (D-Ogden Dunes) released the following comments after Interim Marion County Prosecutor Ryan Mears announced that Marion County cases involving an individual who was in possession of less than one ounce of marijuana would not be prosecuted (Howey Politics Indiana). "Dropping these charges is a tremendous step made by Marion County's interim prosecutor in accomplishing what ultimately needs to be done: decriminalizing possession of marijuana in Indiana. According to the Indiana prosecuting Attorney's information, there were more than 22,000 arrests for marijuana possession last year. Let's stop branding our citizens with a criminal record for doing what is increasingly viewed as normal behavior."

MACER CALLS FOR HOLCOMB TO END TRANSPORTATION PROGRAM: An Indiana lawmaker is calling on the Governor to scrap a statewide transportation program amid complaints that there are not enough drivers to meet demand. Too often the scheduled rides for Medicaid patients just don't show up (Chapman, WTHR-TV). For over a year now, Indiana's Family and Social Services Administration has promised to fix problems getting Medicaid patients to and from doctor appointments. But system failures are ongoing in all 92 counties leaving some patients stranded. "I believe it is up to the Governor of the State of Indiana to really show leadership and cancel this contract," said State Representative Karlee Macer, (D) Indianapolis. Macer saw WTHR's story two weeks ago when 13 Investigates asked the agency for a breakdown of the "no shows" as a result of the new system. Macer wanted to see the outcomes too. Now for the first time numbers obtained by 13 Investigates reveal just how bad the problem is.

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB RENEWS CHINESE SISTER STATE PARTNERSHIP - The Hoosier State will continue partnering with China's Zhejiang Province to promote economic, cultural and educational connections between Indiana and its 6.7 million residents and the eastern Chinese state south of Shanghai that's home to 57.4 million people (Carden, NWI Times). While in China last week on an economic development trade mission, Gov. Eric Holcomb signed an agreement with Zhejiang Party Secretary Che Jun renewing the sister-state relationship between Indiana and Zhejiang that was established in 1987 by Gov. Robert Orr. "Our 32-year-old partnership has blossomed into a transpacific friendship that's fueling business, academic, government and cultural exchanges on both sides of the Pacific," Holcomb said. "We look forward to what the future brings both our states in the decades ahead." According to the Indiana Economic Development Corp., the partnership already has led to numerous cultural and educational exchanges between Indiana and Zhejiang, and the IEDC last year opened a business development office in Hangzhou, the capital city of Zhejiang, to further increase economic ties.

GOVERNOR: PACERS FEEL LIKE PIONEERS - The Indiana Pacers will be part of NBA history this week as the team participates in the league's first games ever in India. The Pacers and Sacramento Kings will play preseason games Friday and Saturday at the NSCI Dome in Mumbai (Dick, Inside Indiana Business). The team will embark on the 20-hour flight Tuesday. "We kind of feel like we're pioneers," said Pacers President Kevin Pritchard. "We're going to go over there and put on two great games...we're super excited about it."

STATEHOUSE: HILL SEEKS PURDUE PHARMA SETTLEMENT - Indiana is one of 29 states that are attempting to reach a settlement agreement pertaining to opioid abuse. Indiana Attorney General Curtis Hill was in Anderson on Saturday and said that despite some reports, there is not a full settlement. "There are 29 attorney generals that have signed an agreement on a framework toward a settlement," he said (de la Bastide, Anderson Herald-Bulletin). "There is no settlement. The attorney generals have agreed to a framework toward a settlement in anticipation that Purdue Pharma was going to file for bankruptcy protection." Purdue Pharma has filed for bankruptcy protection in recent weeks. "The alternative was a free-fall bankruptcy where there is nothing or getting into a framework where we may be able to secure billions of dollars from the bankruptcy proceedings," Hill said. "It could disintegrate. There are lots of things that have to be worked out before it becomes an actual settlement." Indiana has its own lawsuit filed against Purdue Pharma. "We feel confident we have a good case," he said. "But when a company goes into bankruptcy, everything else goes up in the air," he said. "At this point we're looking to work within that framework agreement."

STATEHOUSE: HILL STATEMENT ON MARION COUNTY MARIJUANA - Attorney General Curtis Hill made the following statement regarding a declaration by Marion County's acting prosecutor that he will not file charges against anyone accused solely of possessing one ounce or less of marijuana (Howey Politics Indiana): "I respect and support the fact that prosecutors have absolute discretion in deciding when to file criminal charges and how to allocate their resources. Typically, though, prosecutors carefully exercise this discretion on a case-by-case basis rather than proclaiming that in all cases they will ignore a particular state law not to their liking. I am concerned that this proclamation in Marion County will attract to Indianapolis people with a particular interest in communities where drug enforcement is lax. It seems to me a curious strategy to put out a welcome mat for lawbreakers in a community already facing challenges related to crime, homelessness and other social problems stemming from drug abuse."

JUSTICE: ORAL ARGUMENTS THURSDAY ON RFRA FIX - Oral arguments are set for Thursday, October 3, in the legal challenge by pro-traditional-marriage groups to the "fix" to Indiana's Religious Freedom Restoration Act (RFRA) and four "gay-rights" ordinances (Howey Politics Indiana). The plaintiff groups are Indiana Family Institute (IFI), Indiana Family Action (IFA), and American Family Association of Indiana (AFA). The hearing is set for 8:15 to 1:00 o'clock in Hamilton County Superior Court 1 and should result in a final judgment in the case. Plaintiffs challenge the RFRA "fix" on state and federal constitutional grounds. For example, they challenge the stripping from some RFRA "persons" (such as Plaintiffs) the strong RFRA protection for religious free-exercise, originally afforded to all RFRA "persons," as a violation of equal protection. They also challenge the "fix" under First Amendment free-expression and free-expressive-association guarantees because groups advocating a pro-traditional-marriage message may not be stripped of protection against being forced to include persons who advocate, by word or deed, a different message than Plaintiffs' own religiously motivated message.

AGRICULTURE: KINGERY TAKES HELM OF CORN, SOYBEAN ALLIANCE - About a month and a half ago the result of a farmer-led search committee was announced, and now the new chief executive officer of the Indiana Soybean Alliance, Indiana Corn Marketing Council and the Indiana Corn Growers Association is on the job for the first time (Eubank, Hoosier Ag Today). "It's great to be joining the team," CEO Courtney Kingery told HAT. "I'm an Indiana girl and my family has a farm in White County, Indiana. It's the 6th generation it's been on that land, so we have deep roots here in Indiana agriculture. For my past 20-25 years I've been working in the ag food supply chain, so working with some big food ag processors out there really looking to bring value to Indiana corn and soybeans throughout the world."

AUTOS: RANSOMWARE ATTACK CANCELS SUBARU SHIFTS - Another shift at Subaru of Indiana Automotive has been cancelled, according to the plant's status line. The company stopped work Monday night as the FBI investigates a large ransomware attack affecting several local companies (WLFJ-TV). According to the status line, A-line and B-line production is cancelled for Tuesday. However, IPC assembly, maintenance, reprocess trim and surface groups, Trim A and B door lines and administrative associates should report. The company said Tuesday's second shift is on standby. SIA and Heartland Automotive stopped work Monday night. News 18 is still working to confirm if Tuesday operations are affected at Heartland Automotive. However, employees have reached out and said Tuesday's first shift is cancelled. In an email to News 18, SIA spokesperson Craig Koven said, "Due to a supplier issue, first shift production has been canceled today [Tuesday]."

CRIME: 4 SEXUAL ASSAULTS AT IUPUI - Students are concerned after a fourth sexual assault was reported Sunday at Indiana University Purdue University — Indianapolis campus (WRTV). All of the incidents have reportedly happened at University Boulevard and West North Street. The area around University Tower has become well known for being the place where these sexual assaults are happening. Students are saying they want to know more about what the university is doing to make sure it doesn't happen again.

HEALTH: BSU STUDY SEES RISING HOSPITAL COSTS - Indiana health care prices are much higher than in many other states and a new analysis points to even higher prices in some areas (Sheridan, Indiana Public Media). The new report finds prices in areas including Fort Wayne and Evansville are higher than in areas where Hoosiers have more options. Michael Hicks is the director of the Center for Business and Economic Research at Ball State University. He points to mergers and consolidation. "The fewness of hospitals, the more monopolized they are, the higher the prices and the higher the profitability," says Hicks. Indiana nonprofit hospital systems made nearly $1.5 billion in profit in 2017. Hicks says Hoosiers are already paying more than people in other states. "The average Hoosier is paying about $819 more than the average American," says Hicks. "At the same time our health outcomes are slipping a bit."

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP STILL SEEKING WHISTLEBLOWER ID - President Trump said Monday that the White House is "trying to find out" the identity of the intelligence community whistleblower who filed a complaint about the president's interactions with Ukraine (The Hill). "We're trying to find out about a whistleblower," Trump told reporters in the Oval Office when asked if he knows the person's identity, alleging that they reported "things that are incorrect." The president's remarks came one day after he demanded to meet the whistleblower and cast doubt on the individual's complaint on Twitter. Trump on Monday again defended his phone call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky that is at the center of the whistleblower complaint, calling it "perfect" and accusing the whistleblower of misrepresenting it in the complaint — a redacted version of which was released publicly last week. "The whistleblower reported a totally different statement," Trump told reporters during a swearing-in ceremony for new Labor Secretary Eugene Scalia. "When the whistleblower reported it, he made it sound terrible."

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP TEAM STRUGGLES WITH STRATEGY - A week after House Democrats jump-started their impeachment inquiry, the White House has yet to converge on any single plan, strategy or even unified messaging to fight back (Politico). All the talk about setting up a so-called war room inside the West Wing, similar to the approach of the Clinton White House, has gone nowhere. Acting White House chief of staff Mick Mulvaney, other top aides, lawyers and Trump advisers have been jockeying among their own internal factions for control of the approach or messaging. And President Donald Trump has expressed little interest in responding to House Democrats in such a conventional manner, preferring to deploy his own messaging on Twitter.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP PRESSED AUSSIES FOR DIRT ON MUELLER - President Trump pushed the Australian prime minister during a recent telephone call to help Attorney General William P. Barr gather information for a Justice Department inquiry that Mr. Trump hopes will discredit the Mueller investigation, according to two American officials with knowledge of the call (New York Times). The White House restricted access to the call's transcript to a small group of the president's aides, one of the officials said, an unusual decision that is similar to the handling of a July call with the Ukrainian president that is at the heart of House Democrats' impeachment inquiry into Mr. Trump. Like that call, the discussion with Prime Minister Scott Morrison of Australia shows the extent to which Mr. Trump sees the attorney general as a critical partner in his goal to show that the Mueller investigation had corrupt and partisan origins, and the extent that Mr. Trump sees the Justice Department inquiry as a potential way to gain leverage over America's closest allies.

WHITE HOUSE: MULVANEY ON SHAKY GROUND WITH TRUMP - Acting White House chief of staff Mick Mulvaney is on shaky ground in the wake of a bad week for President Trump, according to multiple sources with knowledge of discussions surrounding the whistleblower fallout (CNN). The sources say the President is not upset with Mulvaney for the White House releasing the summary of his July 25 call with Ukraine's leader or the whistleblower complaint because he had been convinced that it was necessary. What Trump and other aides are frustrated with, according to the sources, is that Mulvaney did not have a strategy for defending and explaining the contents of those documents as soon as they were publicly released.

WHITE HOUSE: NUKE TALKS WITH NORTH KOREA TO RESUME - North Korea said it would reconvene working-level talks with the U.S. on Saturday, reviving a denuclearization process that has been stalled since a February summit in Vietnam ended without a deal (Wall Street Journal). The two sides plan a preliminary meeting on Friday followed by official talks the next day, state media quoted First Vice Minister of Foreign Affairs Choe Son Hui as saying. Ms. Choe is one of leader Kim Jong Un's most prominent interlocutors with the U.S. The state-media report on Tuesday didn't specify where the negotiations would take place.

WHITE HOUSE: BOLTON WARNS OF NORTH KOREA - In his first public comments since leaving the White House, John R. Bolton, the former national security adviser, delivered a stark warning Monday about President Trump's approach to North Korea, undercutting the president's yearslong insistence that North Korea wanted to make a denuclearization deal with him (New York Times). Without mentioning Mr. Trump by name, Mr. Bolton, a longtime critic of the North Korean regime, made it clear he thought the president's courtship approach to diplomacy with Kim Jong-un, the North Korean leader, was only increasing North Korea's power. And while Mr. Trump has made a deal with North Korea one of his signature foreign policy goals, Mr. Bolton asserted that there had been no gains under this charm offensive approach. "The strategic decision Kim Jong-un is operating through is that he will do whatever he can to keep a deliverable nuclear weapons capability and to develop and enhance it further," Mr. Bolton said Monday during a speech in Washington. "Under current circumstances, he will never give up the nuclear weapons voluntarily."

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SCHEDULE - President Trump will meet with Defense Secretary Mike Esper at 4 p.m. today in the Oval Office.

JUSTICE: BARR SOUGHT FOREIGN HELP FOR MUELLER PROBE - Attorney General William P. Barr has held private meetings overseas with foreign intelligence officials seeking their help in a Justice Department inquiry that President Trump hopes will discredit U.S. intelligence agencies' examination of possible connections between Russia and members of the Trump campaign during the 2016 election, according to people familiar with the matter (Washington Post). Barr's personal involvement is likely to stoke further criticism from Democrats pursuing impeachment that he is helping the Trump administration use executive branch powers to augment investigations aimed primarily at the president's adversaries.

STATE: POMPEO ANNOUNCES RUSSIA SANCTIONS - The Trump administration has issued new sanctions against Russia over attempted interference in the 2018 midterm elections, a move that comes as the president faces increased pressure from an impeachment inquiry over his call with Ukraine's president. The new sanctions are the first imposed under an executive order the president signed a year ago warning countries against interfering in elections (CBS News). Specifically, the sanctions by the Treasury Department apply to four entities and seven individuals, including the "private planes, yacht, and associated front companies of Yevgeniy Prigozhin, the Russian financier behind the Internet Research Agency and its attempts to subvert American democratic processes," Treasury Secretary Steve Mnuchin said in a statement. The Internet Research Agency was the entity behind the Russian government's disinformation campaign in the 2016 campaign, according to the U.S. intelligence community. "We have been clear: We will not tolerate foreign interference in our elections," Secretary of State Mike Pompeo said in his own statement. "The United States will continue to push back against malign actors who seek to subvert our democratic processes and we will not hesitate to impose further costs on Russia for its destabilizing and unacceptable activities."

CALIFORNIA: NEWSOM SIGNS ATHLETE ENDORSEMENT MONEY BILL - California Gov. Gavin Newsom signed a bill allowing college athletes in the state to earn endorsement and sponsorship money, ending weeks of suspense over whether he would go head-to-head with the National Collegiate Athletic Association and its vow to fight the law in court and possibly bar state schools from its competitions (Wall Street Journal). "Colleges and universities reap billions from these student athletes' sacrifices and success but block them from earning a single dollar. That's a bankrupt model—one that puts institutions ahead of the students they are supposed to serve," said Mr. Newsom, a Democrat, on Monday soon after he signed the bill.

SPORTS: CUBAN WORRIED NCAA COULD IMplode - Dallas Mavericks owner and billionaire investor Mark Cuban warned against a new California law that would allow athletes to profit from their likeness and sign endorsement deals (Fox News). California Gov. Gavin Newsom signed the bill Monday. Currently, student-athletes are not allowed to earn compensation while playing college sports. The only exceptions are scholarship money from the institution, a modest housing allowance or on-campus housing and a per diem for travel days when on team-sanctioned road trips. "You have to ask yourself, 'What happens if they got fired?'" Cuban told FOX Business' Neil Cavuto. "'What happens if you want to fire him? Do we want to start firing student athletes?'"

CITIES: 16 LAWRENCE STUDENTS HOSPITALIZED FOR WRONG SHOT - More than a dozen students were sent to area hospitals after being given the wrong shot at a Lawrence Township school Monday (CBS4). The school district said 16 students were undergoing a TB screening at McKenzie Center for Innovation and Technology when medical personnel from Community Health Network administered a small dosage of insulin instead. The students were taken to area hospitals for observation, according to the school district, and were accompanied by McKenzie staff and school personnel. Parents have been notified. "We are working closely with Community Health Network to determine the cause of the error; and to evaluate processes as needed," the school said in a statement.

CITIES: INDY POSTPONES WATERSIDE DESIGN COMPETITION - A competition designed to transform key components of the former GM Stamping Plant in downtown Indianapolis is on hold. Indianapolis-based Ambrose Property Group and the Central Indiana Community Foundation are postponing the Waterside Design Competition after the commercial real estate firm announced plans to sell the Waterside project (Brown, Inside Indiana Business). The three finalists for the project were announced in May. They were tasked with designing an adaptive reuse of the area known as "Crane Bay" on the former GM site. The competition was meant to serve as the kickoff of the $1.4 billion redevelopment of the former GM Stamping Plant. The finalists - Hood Design Studio, SCAPE, and Snøhetta - were slated to give their final public presentations this week, with a winner being decided by a jury of community stakeholders and national experts.

CITIES: JEFFERSONVILLE UNVEILS NEW DOWNTOWN VENUE - The vision for a new downtown entertainment venue is becoming more clear now that the proprietors have released their plans. At Tuesday's Jeffersonville Board of Zoning Appeals and Plan Commission meeting, developers Steve Resch and Chad Sprigler revealed plans for a project that will sit near the corner of Pearl and West Chestnut streets, directly adjacent to Parlour (Boyle, News & Tribune). "What we're bringing to the table is an asset to Jeff," Resch said. "It's going to be a destination to bring people downtown. You can tell by the drawings that we've put a lot of thought, time and effort into it. We're going to throw the right amount of money at it to make it a good project." The sprawling layout for Union Restaurant & GameYard will comprise two houses sitting on West Chestnut St., the parking lot that separates them and an empty yard behind one of the houses. The parking lot will be transformed into a green space that will be lined with astroturf. In place of the grassy void will be a 3,922 square foot structure, which will serve as the main dining and gaming area for the venture.

CITIES: TIPTON SOLAR PARK OPENS - State and local officials Monday celebrated the opening of a new solar park in Tipton after working for five years to bring one to the city (Kokomo Tribune). The new park went on the grid in July, producing enough electricity for more than 850 homes in Tipton. The project is located on 31 acres on the far west side of the city along Indiana 28. The facility was constructed by the Indiana Municipal Power Agency (IMPA), an energy co-op made up of 61 communities in Indiana, including Tipton, Peru, Gas City and Anderson.

CITIES: SOUTH BEND CHARTERS TO OLD SCHOOL BUILDINGS - The South Bend Career Academy, citing a growing demand for its charter schools, has notified the city school district that it wants to lease or buy two buildings the district shuttered two years ago (South Bend Tribune). The Career Academy, which runs three charter schools in South Bend, is interested in the former Brown Intermediate Center, on West Beale Street, and the former Eggleston Center, on Adams Road. Under Indiana law, charter schools have a chance to lease shuttered school buildings for $1 per year or buy them for $1, unless a district successfully applies for waivers with the Indiana Department of Education. Charter schools are responsible for all direct expenses of leased buildings, including utilities, maintenance, insurance and repairs.

CITIES: GARY NAMED 'MOST MISERABLE CITY' IN U.S. - Gary was named the most miserable city in the country by Business Insider, which is the largest business news site on the internet in the United States (Pete, NWI Times). "Gary has 75,000 residents but lost 6% from 2010 to 2018. Just over half of the population works, and 36% live in poverty. The most miserable city in the US was once a manufacturing mecca, but those days are over," James Pasley and Angela Wang wrote in their story, "The 50 most miserable cities in America."

CITIES: COPS REVIEW GARY COUNCILMAN'S 'BODYBAG' THREAT - Detectives are expanding the scope of possible charges against Gary City Council President Ron Brewer, who was allegedly overheard on a 911 call threatening a teenager found in the politician's stolen Lexus Sept. 22 (Cross, NWI Times). Brewer allegedly told a 14-year-old boy that the teen's mom would be getting him back "in a (expletive) body bag," according to 911 audio obtained by the Times. East Chicago Deputy Police Chief Jose Rivera said detectives are reviewing the entirety of the 43-minute 911 call Brewer made to police and may pursue additional charges, including intimidation.

CITIES: PLAINFIELD BREAKS GROUND ON $22M PROJECT - The Town of Plainfield will break ground Tuesday on a $22 million mixed-used complex that launches a long-term redevelopment plan for the community (Mills, Inside Indiana Business). Town leaders and developers, Fishers-based Rebar Development and Carmel-based Hageman Group, will take part in the ceremony to officially start construction on The Barlow project. The Plainfield Town Council approved architectural plans last fall for the project which will create an iconic gateway to downtown Plainfield along Main Street. The Barlow includes a four-story building with 116 apartment homes, 3,000 square feet. of commercial space, and a 154-space parking lot.

COUNTIES: LaPORTE PROSECUTOR VOWS TO PRESS POT CHARGES - La Porte County Prosecutor John Lake said his office "will continue to enforce marijuana laws as written until they are changed by the legislature (Michigan City News-

Dispatch). "We are not adopting any stance at this point different than state law. ... Obviously, before any changes to our policy, I would reach out and speak to all of the police chiefs and the attorney general, and would never make a unilateral decision without their full support."

COUNTIES: WHITLEY NOW BROADBAND READY - Unincorporated areas of Whitley County are now considered a broadband ready community, which could help clear the way if a telecommunications firm wants to establish high-speed internet in rural areas of the county (Mills, Inside Indiana Business). The Whitley County Economic Development Corp. says the State of Indiana has certified the county with that designation. The town of Larwill is included in the certification. According to Whitley County EDC, the designation means the county is committed to taking necessary steps, such as easement approval, in a timely manner to help telecom companies. The state statute requires all permit applications for a broadband project in the designated zone to be approved or denied within 10 business days after they are filed. "This certification sends a signal to the telecommunication industry that Whitley County is ready for broadband infrastructure investment," said Kennedy St. George, Whitley County EDC director of marketing. "Broadband is just as important for economic success in the rural county areas as it is in the city and towns."

Police Crack Down on Vaping, Surfacing Stockpiles of Illicit Cartridges

THC vaping cartridges have been found in disparate places, by varying numbers, suggesting a sprawling black market.

By Julie Bosman and Mitch Smith

Oct. 1, 2019 Updated 8:10 a.m. ET

The tip came to Minnesota police officers in July via a confidential informant: In a suburb in Anoka County, the informant said, a man had been quietly selling thousands of vaping cartridges laced with marijuana from his home.

When authorities entered the man's condominium last week, they found a staggeringly large stash of vaping cartridges, believed to be one of the biggest busts in the country. Close to 29,000 cartridges were tucked away inside a Cadillac Escalade. Another 30,000 were stacked in a garage. Some were packaged in black boxes with colorful lettering, cheerful images of Fred Flintstone and descriptions of candy-like flavors like mai tai, strawberry shortcake and Fruity Pebbles.

They were the sorts of vaping products that have been identified as possible culprits in a perplexing lung illness that has sickened at least 800 people across the country and killed at least 14.

As health officials grapple with a public health crisis they are struggling to understand, police departments are in the midst of a swift crackdown on vaping products containing THC, the psychoactive ingredient in marijuana. In the Phoenix area, the authorities recently raided three homes over eight days, seizing hundreds of THC cartridges at each. In Wisconsin, detectives arrested two young brothers accused of running a large-scale THC cartridge assembly operation inside a condo. And in Nebraska, sheriff's deputies found a stash of cartridges in a car parked at a truck stop.

Until recently, some police departments busy fighting a national opioid epidemic had considered illegal vaping products a nuisance, but not a lethal threat. Police departments had taken small steps to root out illegal cartridges, but as more teenagers and young adults have begun vaping THC, sometimes with deadly consequences, authorities say they are now paying close attention.

"It's become an absolute priority," said Sheriff Paul Penzone of Maricopa County, Ariz., where deputies have made undercover purchases from vaping cartridge dealers and tried to disrupt a sprawling supply chain.

The effort to crack down on illicit vaping products has been laden with complications. The police say they have been stunned by the growth in popularity and variety of vaping devices. Enforcement can be difficult because vaping THC is not accompanied by the distinctive — and often incriminating — smell of marijuana. And police officers have had to learn the difference between vaping cartridges for THC, which are illegal for recreational use in most states, and devices for vaping nicotine, which are legally sold at many drugstores and gas stations.

Authorities are also still tracing a vast and shadowy distribution network in which empty cartridges are filled with THC-laced liquid in "pen factories," packaged with boxes available online and often shipped across state lines in trucks or rental cars.

"It is something we're trying to get our hands around," said L.J. Fusaro, the chief of police in Groton, Conn., where officers confiscated 435 THC cartridges in a bust this year. "As of late, it's really become of interest to law enforcement because of the harm that's come to folks, particularly our youth."

In August, Illinois health officials announced the first vaping-related death in the nation. In the weeks after, more deaths in Kansas, California and Indiana were tied to the ailment, and that number has continued to grow. Illicit THC-filled vaping cartridges with labels like "Dank Vapes" could be culprits, according to health officials, but it is still unknown what is making people ill.

In police circles, efforts have turned to trying to get a handle on the universe of vaping products — a wide, disparate array of sources of cartridges and a murky and fragmented distribution network for them.

Law enforcement officials have found a flourishing black market of vaping cartridges that are made in small operations, often in a house or apartment. The cartridges are filled with THC oil and often diluted with substances that are dangerous to inhale, like vitamin E acetate, one of the products that health officials suspect has caused lung damage. Then they are sold on the street or online for roughly $20 each.

In recent years, the police have sometimes struggled to classify vaping materials in official reports and to decide which criminal charges should apply to them.

“We started recognizing it as commanders from across the state were calling us, trying to figure out how to report them to us, because they didn’t fit into a category,” said Brian Marquart, the statewide gang and drug coordinator at the Minnesota Department of Public Safety.

Some 77,000 THC cartridges were found in Minnesota in one of the largest busts in the nation. New Hope Police Department Authorities have tracked down illegal vaping operations through elaborate police investigation — but also fortuitous traffic stops.

In Indiana, 50,000 cartridges worth $1 million were found on a box truck traveling from California to Indianapolis after the driver was pulled over in March for following another vehicle too closely. In Nebraska, the State Patrol has netted three seizures of illegal vaping products in recent weeks, including the discovery of thousands of THC cartridges in the bed of a white pickup truck that made an improper lane change west of Lincoln.

Some boxes of cartridges have been found in plain sight — a reflection, perhaps, of the relative newness of efforts to crack down on THC cartridges and of states’ differing laws on marijuana.

“It’s not like it’s unmarked and heat-sealed and hidden in a false compartment,” Capt. Jason Scott of the Nebraska State Patrol said. “It’s usually just right out in the open.”

Other cases have involved lengthy and intense investigations. In the Minnesota case, an undercover officer from a drug task force bought vaping products from Valentin V. Andonii, 22, then followed him to his home, leading to the discovery of nearly 77,000 cartridges.

Alyssa Jones, a lawyer for Mr. Andonii, declined to comment on two felony drug charges her client faces, each of which could carry a 30-year prison term if he is convicted.

Federal officials have also targeted illegal vaping, though local and state law enforcement agencies said they have mostly been operating on their own. In Ohio, three people were indicted in May after Drug Enforcement Administration agents found thousands of THC vaping cartridges. And last year in North Carolina, federal agents arrested a man accused of selling a synthetic marijuana vaping product.

The threat of THC-laced vaping cartridges still pales in comparison to the pervasive presence of opioids, which killed more than 47,000 people in overdoses in 2017. Some police departments may have been so busy battling heroin, fentanyl and other drugs that they did not view THC vaping as a threat until very recently.

“Honestly, I think we kind of missed the boat a little bit because we’ve been dealing with opioids,” said Chief Fusaro of the Groton, Conn., police. “In some respects, we didn’t see this coming.”

In places like Phoenix, where Sheriff Penzone's deputies recently confiscated 1,100 cartridges, there is a growing sense of just how pervasive illegal vaping has become and just how hard it will be to choke off the supply.

"Through e-cartridges, we now have a pathway where our children can ingest literally any drug," Sheriff Penzone said. "That creates a whole new challenge for us that we've never seen in the past."

Marion County halts prosecutions for simple marijuana possession

September 30, 2019 | Olivia Covington, Indiana Lawyer

KEYWORDS LAW

Simple possession of marijuana will no longer be prosecuted in Indianapolis courts, the Marion County Prosecutor's Office has announced.

Acting Prosecutor Ryan Mears said Monday the MCPO will no longer file charges against defendants accused of possessing 30 grams or less, or roughly 1 ounce, of marijuana. The policy shift is meant to free up resources to focus on violent crime in Indianapolis, Mears said.

"Too often, an arrest for marijuana possession puts individuals into the system who otherwise would not be. That is not a win for our community," Mears said. "The enforcement of marijuana policy has disproportionately impacted people of color, and this is a first step to addressing that."

Mears, who was named acting prosecutor last week after Terry Curry stepped down to focus on ongoing treatment for prostate cancer, said the decision not to prosecute marijuana possession came after about two years of discussion. There is no nexus between possession and violent crime, he said, so the Class B misdemeanor offense is not a threat to public safety.

The prosecutor's office has slowly been working toward the policy shift, Mears said. In 2018, 74% of marijuana possession cases were dismissed in Marion County, and that number rose to 81% in 2019.

The 30-gram threshold came from a "fine line" in Indiana law between possession and dealing, Mears said. More serious marijuana offenses involving more than one ounce will still be prosecuted.

The hope is that declining to prosecute simple possession charges will help build and restore trust between Marion County residents and law enforcement, the acting prosecutor said. If residents believe they can trust police officers and sheriff's deputies, then law enforcement may have more sources willing to help solve the city's rash of violent crime.

The policy shift is about "doing the right thing," Mears said.

"This will not cause Armageddon," he said, noting that similar policies have recently been enacted in Louisville and Cincinnati. The Marion County Prosecutor's Office is the first in Indiana to take this step, he said.

HOW A 'PRESIDENT PENCE' COULD BLOW UP 2020: If the Senate were to remove President Donald Trump from office—which could happen only on a bipartisan vote—the 2016 election results wouldn't be overturned. Democrats wouldn't control the White House. America's reward for convicting Trump would be President Michael Richard Pence (Scher, Politico Magazine). Nine out of every 10 Republican respondents said in a Quinnipiac poll released Monday that Trump should not be impeached and removed from office. But President Pence would likely be harder for Democrats to dispatch in the 2020 general election than an impeached but still in office President Trump. Pence's net favorability, while underwater, is better than Trump's. Upon entering the Oval Office, the low-key Midwesterner might prove willing and able to turn the page, restore calm and soothe an exhausted electorate. He could even tap one of the best-liked, least tainted Republicans left standing—former South Carolina Governor and Ambassador to the United Nations Nikki Haley—to diversify the ticket. If Senate Republicans were to actually listen to that voice in their heads that sounds like Jeff Flake, Trump could be out, and Pence in, before the Iowa caucuses in early February. The Democratic presidential candidates would have to tear up their talking points for how they provide the best chance of beating Trump, and come up with fresh ones for Pence.

McDERMOTT URGES CENSURE OF TRUMP: Hammond Mayor Thomas McDermott Jr. wants Congress to censure President Donald Trump for his alleged misdeeds in connection with Ukraine, rather than embarking on a months-long impeachment process that's unlikely to result in Trump's removal from office (Carden, NWI Times). The Democratic leader of Lake County's most populous city said he's in no way excusing Trump's actions. But McDermott believes a quick censure resolution is the only hope for Congress getting anything else done over the next year, including funding for the $1.2 billion expansions of the South Shore Line. "I think what the president did is horrible," McDermott said. "It's quid pro quo. He freezes the money, he waits a few days, he talks to them and brings up a political issue that he wants them to follow up on for him." "People in Lake County would go to jail for similar conduct." At the same time, McDermott said even if the Democratic-controlled House eventually approves one or more articles of impeachment, there is no way Trump foes in the Republican-controlled Senate will achieve the two-thirds supermajority required to remove the Republican president from office. "I don't think the country, as badly divided as we are, is ready to go through a year of impeachment and a removal trial," McDermott said. "I think we're going to beat him in 2020 anyway. Let's embarrass the guy, censure him and then kick his butt in 2020."

TRUMP WANTED TO 'SHOOT THEM IN THE LEGS': The Oval Office meeting this past March began, as so many had, with President Trump fuming about migrants. But this time he had a solution. As White House advisers listened astonished, he ordered them to shut down the entire 2,000-mile border with Mexico — by noon the next day (New York Times). The advisers feared the president's edict would trap American tourists in Mexico, strand children at schools on both sides of the border and create an economic meltdown in two countries. Yet they also knew how much the president's zeal to stop immigration had sent him lurching for solutions, one more extreme than the next. Privately, the president had often talked about fortifying a border wall with a water-filled trench, stocked with snakes or alligators, prompting aides to seek a cost estimate. He wanted the wall electrified, with spikes on top that could pierce human flesh. After publicly suggesting that soldiers shoot migrants if they threw rocks, the president backed off when his staff told him that was illegal. But later in a meeting, aides recalled, he suggested that they shoot migrants in the legs to slow them down. That's not allowed either, they told him. "The president was frustrated and I think he took that moment to hit the reset button," said Thomas D. Homan, who had served as Mr. Trump's acting director of Immigration and Customs Enforcement, recalling that week in March. "The president wanted it to be fixed quickly." Mr. Trump's order to close the border was a decision point that touched off a frenzied week of presidential rages, round-the-clock staff panic and far more White House turmoil than was known at the time. By the end of the week, the seat-of-the-pants president had backed off his threat but had retaliated with the beginning of a purge of the aides who had tried to contain him.

TRUMP WANTS TO 'INTERVIEW' WHISTLEBLOWER: President Trump on Tuesday kept his focus on an anonymous whistle-blower, asking why he was not "entitled to interview" the person, a day after he said the White House was trying to find out the person's identity, despite institutional directives and confidentiality protections (New York Times). In addition to interviewing the "so-called 'Whistleblower,'" Mr. Trump wrote on Twitter on Tuesday, he would also like to interview "the person who gave all of the false information to him." On Sunday, Mr. Trump tweeted, "Like every American, I deserve to meet my accuser." Mr. Trump's focus on the whistle-blower is one of several ways the White House has addressed the complaint — which alleged that Mr. Trump was using his office for personal gain — and the phone call at the center of it between Mr. Trump and President Volodymyr Zelensky of Ukraine. Mr. Trump has repeatedly defended his conversation with Mr. Zelensky as "perfect."

SEN. GRASSLEY MOVES TO PROTECT WHISTLEBLOWER: As President Donald Trump and his allies attack the whistleblower that kicked off the House's impeachment inquiry, the still unidentified person gained a powerful ally on Tuesday: Republican Sen. Chuck Grassley (Politico). The most senior GOP senator has fashioned a career on protecting whistleblowers during presidencies of both parties. And in the middle of one of the most tempestuous political storms in two decades, the seventh-term Iowan is sticking to his position even if it's at odds with the president himself. In a Tuesday statement, Grassley moved to stave off attacks and the unmasking of the federal whistleblower who first divulged Trump's call with Ukraine's president. Trump and many of his allies in Congress and outside have been working to chip away at the whistleblower's credibility, calling his complaint "hearsay" and playing down its validity. "This person appears to have followed the whistleblower protection laws and ought to be heard out and protected. We should always work to respect whistleblowers," Grassley said.

POMPEO BLOCKS STATE OFFICIALS TO TESTIFY: Secretary of State Mike Pompeo said it wasn't feasible for current and former State Department officials to comply with a request from House lawmakers to attend depositions starting this week, drawing a sharp response from House committee chairmen (Wall Street Journal). In a letter published on Twitter Tuesday, Mr. Pompeo denounced House lawmakers investigating Mr. Trump's July phone call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky, accusing them of trying to bully State Department staff into appearing before the committees. Officials weren't given enough time to prepare, including consulting with the department's legal counsel, and several of the officials have requested more time, Mr. Pompeo said in the letter, addressed to House Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Rep. Eliot Engel (D., N.Y.). "Any effort to intimidate witnesses or prevent them from talking with Congress—including State Department employees—is illegal and will constitute evidence of obstruction of the impeachment inquiry," said a joint statement by Reps. Eliot Engel (D., N.Y.) of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Adam Schiff (D., Calif.) of the Intelligence Committee and Elijah Cummings (D., Md.) of the Oversight Committee.

CARSON SUGGESTS TREATING TRUMP LIKE A 'GANGSTER': Rep. André Carson, a Democrat on the House Intelligence Committee, condemned President Donald Trump for his threat to expose the whistleblower in an appearance on CNN Monday night (Mediaite). The Indiana Democrat was asked by CNN anchor Poppy Harlow about Trump's statement to reporters earlier Monday that the White House is "trying to find out about a whistleblower" — whose identity remains unknown. "Well, we're going to do whatever we can to make sure that the identity of the whistleblower is protected," Carson said. "I would hope that this president does not act in a way that is reminiscent of a mob figure. If he sees himself as such, he will be dealt with as such." "What does that mean?" Harlow asked. "If he wants to be a gangster then we're going to have to uphold the law and treat him like a gangster," Carson replied. "He's already shown that he's a tyrant."

IMPD WILL STILL ENFORCE MARIJUANA LAWS: You'll no longer go to court for marijuana possession -- but you could still go to jail. Police Chief Bryan Roach says police will continue making arrests for marijuana possession, despite acting prosecutor Ryan Mears' announcement the office will no longer take those cases to court (Berman, WIBC). Roach and Mayor Joe Hogsett say they were caught off guard by the policy change and need time to study it, just like prosecutors had before pulling the trigger on the change. But Roach says the law is on the books, and police have a duty to enforce it. Roach says being able to hold someone on a marijuana charge can give police more time to continue an investigation that could lead to charges in violent crimes. He challenges Mears' argument that there's no connection between pot and violent crime. Roach says the connection is there and increasing, as dealers carry weapons to protect themselves. Hogsett says he supports Mears' declared goal of smoothing out imbalances in who goes to jail, but says he's not ready to take a position one way or the other on the policy.

UAW REJECTS GM OFFER: The United Auto Workers union said on Tuesday it rejected a new comprehensive offer from General Motors Co to end a two-week-old strike, saying the automaker came up short on several fronts including wages, healthcare and temporary workers (Reuters). The union said it made a counterproposal and warned "there are still many important issues that remain unresolved." Also on Tuesday, GM said the strike by U.S. workers forced it to halt production at its pickup and transmission plants in Silao, Mexico, resulting in temporary layoffs of 6,000 workers. About 48,000 UAW members went on strike on Sept. 16 seeking higher pay, greater job security, a bigger share of the leading U.S. automaker's profit and protection of healthcare benefits.

7 YEAR AUTO LOANS SIGN OF SICK MIDDLE CLASS: Walk into an auto dealership these days and you might walk out with a seven-year car loan (Wall Street Journal). That means monthly payments that last well past when the brake pads give out and potentially beyond when the car gets traded in for a new one. About a third of auto loans for new vehicles taken in the first half of 2019 had terms of longer than six years, according to credit-reporting firm Experian PLC. A decade ago, that number was less than 10%. Car loans that are increasingly stretched out are a pronounced sign that some American middle class buyers can't afford a middle-class lifestyle. Incomes have risen at a sluggish pace in the past decade, but car prices have grown rapidly.

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: Mr. President, let me explain this whistleblower thing to you. Whistleblowers are protected by the federal government - you, in fact, ultimately - because they are to be encouraged to speak up when they see something wrong like waste, graft or extortion attempts. Or, in this case, urgently wrong. - Brian A. Howey

STANDING ROOM ONLY FOR TERRE HAUTE MAYORAL DEBATE: It was standing room only at the Vigo County Public Library on Tuesday as three candidates for Terre Haute mayor outlined their positions on a host of topics. But as a baseline from which to start, the candidates were asked to define the what they see as the role of mayor and the office's most important function in city governance (Modesitt, Terre Haute Tribune-Star). Republican candidate and incumbent mayor Duke Bennett said, as he has maintained across numerous forums in the past month, that a mayor's number one priority is ensuring the safety of the city. "Public safety is number one. No matter what anybody says, that is the most important thing that we can deliver to keep people safe and respond when they have an urgent need," Bennett said. Independent candidate Pat Goodwin said the role of mayor is being the face of the city and ensuring that everything undertaken with taxpayer money is something that will benefit the city and its residents in the long run. Democrat candidate and City Council member Karrum Nasser said he views the mayor's job as one of customer service and that he is open to borrowing successful strategies from neighboring communities and tapping into the talent graduating from local universities and colleges to help implement them. "People need to trust their government. Often times we hear that something is too complicated or that it's how we've always done it. I think the citizens deserve to have a better answer than that when it comes to some of the challenges in our community."

EVANSVILLE MAYORAL CANDIDATES TALK AT ROTARY: Tuesday, all three candidates for the Evansville Mayoral Race were together under one roof (WFIE-TV). Mayor Lloyd Winnecke, Bart Gadau, and Steve Ary took the stage at luncheon hosted by the Evansville Rotary Club. With a little over a month until election day, this was an opportunity for these three candidates to address the community. Each candidate was given eight minutes at the podium to speak on whatever they would like. Steve Ary, running independently, spoke about how he wants to help those in small communities. "Now it is time to help our community feel better on the inside by investing in them," said Ary. Republican and Incumbent Mayor Lloyd Winnecke spoke on continuing the progress he believes has been made in his eight years as office. "I think if you look back over what's happened in eight years, you see what collaborative leadership can do for a community," said Mayor Winnecke. Libertarian candidate Bart Gadau emphasized his commitment to the poor and middle class. "I care a lot about my community, and I know the mayor does as well, said Gadau. "I've talked to him several times."

MUELLER, HAAS DEBATE IN SOUTH BEND: If you think politicians are all the same, you haven't seen Democrat James Mueller and Republican Sean Haas debate. Although they're both 37, wore gray suits with white shirts and ties, and grew up on the city's east side, attending St. Anthony de Padua Catholic grade school together, they contrasted sharply Tuesday night at Indiana University South Bend's Wiekamp Hall in their only debate before the Nov. 5 South Bend mayoral election (Parrott, South Bend Tribune). Haas criticized Mayor Pete Buttigieg, under whom Mueller served as chief of staff and executive director of community investment, for saying after the shooting that, "All police work and all of American life takes place in the shadow of racism..." Haas said officer morale has tanked because police believe O'Neill, who has since quit, has been prejudged without due process. "I don't believe in systemic racism. I believe there are bad actors in every single profession, whether it's police officers, teachers, lawyers, but to blanketly call an entire force racist based on the action of a few, I believe, is irresponsible and frankly a lie." Mueller said racism can be more nuanced and "is not always explicit, not always necessarily explicitly hateful. It comes about in implicit ways. You're less likely to get a bank loan approved... you go to the doctor and they're less likely to take your pain seriously because you're a certain race. So the idea there's not this issue that's confronting our country is a problem because we have to admit there's a problem before we can even have a chance of fixing it."

REP. BORDERS GETS PRIMARY OPPONENT: Indiana House District 45 will have primary competition next May as a Republican challenger to incumbent Bruce Borders has announced his candidacy. Jeff Gormong, 52, announced Monday night his intent to run as a Republican in Indiana House District 45 (Modesitt, Terre Haute Tribune-Star). The run will pit him next spring against incumbent Borders, who has served the district for 13 of the last 15 years. Gormong, a farmer in southern Vigo County, said his decision to run in not an indictment on the job he thinks Borders has done, but is borne of a passion to serve the people of west central Indiana. "This is something I'm passionate about and something I think I can do well," Gormong said. "I talked to Mr. Borders before making this announcement to let him know I'd be running and that I'm not upset with him but just wanted to give this a shot. "I think it's time for some change," Gormong said. Gormong, manager of Gormong Family Farms, has served on the Indiana Farm Bureau state board of directors since 2008.

OWENS FACES UPHILL GOV RUN: Josh Owens, the gay 34-year-old CEO of the retail support site SupplyKick, has announced his 2020 campaign for the governorship of Indiana. He's the first out gay man to run for the office and he'll likely face Indiana's current Governor Eric Holcomb in the race, a man who during the 2016 election said LGBTQ issues weren't important (LGBTQNation). In his first election ad (below), Owens says, "I believe in an Indiana where teachers are paid what they deserve, where healthcare is affordable for all Indiana families, where the economy works for all of us, where Hoosiers feel safe no matter where they are, and I believe in an Indiana where all are welcomed, respected and protected — and I believe together, we can do it." According to WBIC, "He also wants to end discrimination of Hoosiers in the workplace and housing, including discrimination based on sexual orientation and gender identity." Our sister publication Queerty points out, "Before stepping into the office of CEO of SupplyKick, he served as a professor of economics at Butler University. He also held the chair of the Indiana Charter School Board, after then-governor Mike Pence appointed him to the position." Like his 2016 predecessor, Owens may find his race an uphill climb. Trump's landslide win in the state and Republican victories in the U.S. Senate race and other statewide races made it difficult for Holcomb's Democratic challenger John Gregg to win in the state — Holcomb defeated him 52% to 45%.

LEWANDOWSKI BACKS OFF SENATE RUN: Corey Lewandowski told a local radio host Tuesday "it's fair" to say he is reconsidering a Senate run in order to defend President Donald Trump from impeachment and help him get reelected (Politico). "As much as I think I would be a great fighter for the people of New Hampshire, and one U.S. senator can make a difference, it is my priority to make sure the president of United States is reelected," Lewandowski said on the radio show, "New Hampshire Today with Jack Heath." "That's a top priority."

MORNING CONSULT POLL FINDS LITTLE DAMAGE TO BIDEN: Republicans hoping that the Trump-Biden-Ukraine imbroglio would hurt Joe Biden's candidacy may be sorely mistaken. A new POLITICO/Morning Consult poll found that 40% of likely Democratic voters still believe he has the best chance of beating President Trump. In the POLITICO/Morning Consult poll, 46 percent of voters said Congress should begin impeachment proceedings vs. 43 percent who said they should not. Eleven percent had no opinion. That support represented a 3-point bump from last week, when voters were evenly split.

BIDEN PROPOSES GUN REFORMS: Joe Biden's campaign on Wednesday outlined a proposal to put new restrictions on gun sales and combat gun violence, packaging a series of ideas that he has spoken about on the campaign trail over the past several months (Washington Post). Biden's 11-page plan includes support for universal background checks and reinstating the assault weapons ban, which have widespread support from the Democratic presidential field. His proposal calls for a voluntary buyback program of assault weapons, stopping short of candidates and advocates who are calling for a mandatory gun buyback.

TRUMP, RNC RAISE $125M: President Donald Trump's reelection campaign and the Republican National Committee raised a combined $125 million over the last three months, Trump's campaign announced Tuesday — a massive total highlighting Trump's head start in the 2020 election while Democrats compete in a slow-moving, expensive primary (Politico). The two committees ended September with more than $156 million cash on hand, they announced. They did not disclose individual totals for the Trump campaign or the Republican National Committee, which will be reported later this month.

HARRIS RAISES $11M; BOOKER $6M: California Senator Kamala Harris raised $11.6 million in the third quarter of 2019. She had nearly $10 million in cash on hand, according to the campaign (CBS News). The average contribution was $34, while the average online contribution was $20. Harris has raised $35.5 million overall in this campaign, from more than 850,000 individual contributions, according to her campaign. After a last-minute push to raise $1.7 million before September 30, New Jersey Senator Cory Booker's campaign reported raising over $6 million in the third quarter. The 10-day push raised over $2.1 million from more than 46,000 donations, according to the campaign.

WARREN GAINS WITH BLACK VOTERS: One element of Elizabeth Warren's surge in the polls is likely to strike fear in her top Democratic rivals — her rising support among African-Americans (Politico). After struggling to win over black voters in the early stages of the primary, the Massachusetts senator appears to be gaining ground with a demographic that will play a pivotal role in determining the nomination. A Quinnipiac University national poll last week showed Warren winning 19% of the African-American vote — a nine-point jump over the poll's August results. In the latest Morning Consult poll, released Wednesday, she's up by five percentage points with black voters since August.

STATE DEPARTMENT I.G. TO GIVE 'URGENT' BRIEFING: The State Department's inspector general is expected to give an "urgent" briefing to staffers from several House and Senate committees on Wednesday afternoon about documents obtained from the department's Office of the Legal Adviser related to the State Department and Ukraine, sources familiar with the planned briefing told ABC News. Details of the briefing, requested by Steve Linick, the inspector general at State, remain unknown. Linick is expected to meet with congressional staff in a secure location on Capitol Hill. The unusual nature and timing of the briefing — during a congressional recess — suggests it may be connected to a recent intelligence community whistleblower allegation which describes, in part, the State Department's role in coordinating interactions between Rudy Giuliani, the president's personal attorney, and Ukrainian officials.

BANKS, WALORSKI CALL FOR DOJ PROBE ON FETAL REMAINS: U.S. Reps. Jackie Walorski (R-Ind.) and Jim Banks (R-Ind.), along with 65 of their House Republican colleagues, called on the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ) to provide any assistance requested by state authorities in investigating the discovery of human fetal remains on the property of Indiana abortionist Ulrich "George" Klopfer, and to open a separate inquiry if any federal laws were violated (Howey Politics Indiana). In a letter to U.S. Attorney General William Barr, the members also requested a DOJ review of state laws pertaining to the disposition of human fetal remains. "The discovery of more than 2,200 preserved human fetal remains on the property of a man infamously known as Indiana's most prolific abortionist reveals a callous disregard for the sanctity of human life," the members wrote.

LUCAS PRAISES MEARS DECISION ON MARIJUANA: Prosecutors in Marion County are no longer planning to litigate cases in which people are arrested for less than an ounce of marijuana. In light of that decision by new acting Marion County prosecutor Ryan Mears, State Sen. Jim Lucas (R-Seymour) and Karen Tallian (D-Portage) both agree that now Indiana has its best chance to legalize some sort of marijuana statewide than ever before (Darling, WIBC). "God bless that man," Lucas said of Mears to WISH-TV. "I want to buy him a steak dinner. Anything he wants at St. Elmo's or whatever restaurant in Indianapolis. What he did, he is going to force the conversation at the Statehouse that should've been had years ago." Lucas has spearheaded the effort to legalize medical cannabis in Indiana for the last few years. "There are just a whole spectrum of benefits that this brings to people," the Lucas told WISH-TV Tuesday. "A better quality of life and, not just that, but significantly less side-effects than many of the prescription medications they're taking now."

NIEZGODSKI CONGRATULATES NEW FIRE MARSHAL: State Senator David Niezgodski (D-South Bend) made the following comments after the governor announced the state's next fire marshal (Howey Politics Indiana). "Congratulations to South Bend Fire Chief Stephen Cox on being selected to serve as the Indiana state fire marshal by Governor Holcomb. This is a tremendous honor and responsibility that I know Chief Cox will fulfill well as he has dutifully served the City of South Bend for many years. I wish him all the best in this new endeavor and thank him for his service."

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB APPOINTS COX AS FIRE MARSHAL - Gov. Eric J. Holcomb announced he has selected South Bend Fire Chief Stephen Cox to serve as the Indiana state fire marshal (Howey Politics Indiana). "Chief Cox brings great experience, leadership and vision to the Indiana Department of Homeland Security," Gov. Holcomb said. "I know that as the state's fire marshal he will enhance public safety in the state of Indiana and continue to build partnerships with first responders and all Hoosiers." Cox has served with the South Bend Fire Department for 26 years, with 12 years in executive leadership. With the South Bend Fire Department, he served as a paramedic, firefighter, EMS instructor, and EMS chief of the fire department, before being promoted to fire chief in 2012. As fire chief, Cox created a fire training center which has enabled the department to build a robust training program to support the South Bend department as well as other departments in the state. He also collaborated with the Indiana National Guard to form a Helicopter Aquatic Rescue Team, an important asset for Indiana's disaster preparedness.

JUSTICE: BERHMAN KILLER ORDERED RELEASED - A federal judge has ordered the man convicted of killing Bloomington resident Jill Behrman to be released. U.S. District Court Judge James R. Sweeney of the Southern District of Indiana wrote in his ruling Monday that John Myers received ineffective counsel from attorney Patrick Baker at his trial (Wittmeyer & Zaltsberg, Indiana Public Media). In the 147-page ruling, Sweeney writes, "Most notably, Mr. Myers' counsel made false statements to the jury during opening arguments which counsel admitted to the Indiana Supreme Court in a subsequent attorney disciplinary proceeding. He also failed to object to two significant categories of evidence that should not have been presented to the jury. In the end, these serious errors all but destroyed the defense that trial counsel presented to the jury and tainted the entire trial" Myers is being held in Michigan City at the Indiana State Prison. Morgan County prosecutor Steve Sonnega has 120 days to decide whether to appeal Judge Sweeney's ruling. In a statement Sonnega says he plans to meet with the victims and the investigator before making that decision.

EDUCATION: IU MED LANDS $36M GRANT - The National Institutes of Health has awarded a $36 million grant to the IU School of Medicine to launch a drug discovery center focused on accelerating the development of treatments for Alzheimer's disease (Brown, Inside Indiana Business). The center is part of a strategic partnership with the Purdue Institute for Drug Discovery, and IU says the partnership is one of only two multi-institution teams in the country selected for a new federal program designed to grow the drug development pipeline for the disease. The center is being led by Alan Palkowitz, a senior research professor at IU School of Medicine and a nearly 30-year veteran of Indianapolis-based Eli Lilly and Co. (NYSE: LLY). In an interview with Inside INdiana Business Reporter Mary-Rachel Redman, Palkowitz said there are two main goals with the center. "One is to be able to create more understanding of the disease through our research with the companion goal of hopefully identifying potential molecules that could be developed further that would eventually result in therapies for patients," said Palkowitz.

EDUCATION: VU ENTERS WORKFORCE EFFORT - Vincennes University is partnering with four major Indiana employers to launch a training program to prepare students for careers in advanced manufacturing, and help companies find skilled technical talent (Inside Indiana Business). The Indiana Federation for Advanced Manufacturing Education initiative provides select students with training in automation, robotics, and other aspects of advanced manufacturing, while also earning an associate degree from Vincennes. This is VU's second INFAME program. The university also has the program at its main campus. This new program will be based at the VU's Aviation Technology Center at Indianapolis International Airport. The partner companies are Eli Lilly, Major Tool & Machine, Steel Dynamics, Inc., and 3M.

MEDIA: ALLEN BUYS INDIANA TV STATIONS - Los Angeles-based Entertainment Studios Inc. has reached an agreement to acquire 11 broadcast television stations, including three in Indiana. The company's subsidiary, Allen Media Broadcasting, says the deal with USA Television Holdings LLC and USA Television MidAmerica Holdings LLC is valued at $290 million (Inside Indiana Business). The Indiana stations involved in the sale include WFFT-TV in Fort Wayne, WTHI-TV in Terre Haute, and WLFI-TV in Lafayette. In a news release, Entertainment Studios Chairman and Chief Executive Officer Byron Allen called the deal another milestone for the company. "I have known Byron Allen for decades and we are delighted that these stations will now be part of his dynamic company, and that Heartland management will continue to guide them," said USA Television CEO Robert S. Prather, Jr. "These stations are dedicated to their local communities and this transaction will enable them to become even stronger on both their broadcast and digital platforms." Allen also acquired two Evansville stations, WEEV-TV and WEVV-TV, in August as part of a $165 million deal.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP WARNS OF 'COUP' - President Trump, around 7:40 p.m. Tuesday, tweeted: "As I learn more and more each day, I am coming to the conclusion that what is taking place is not an impeachment, it is a COUP, intended to take away the Power of the.....People, their VOTE, their Freedoms, their Second Amendment, Religion, Military, Border Wall, and their God-given rights as a Citizen of The United States of America!"

WHITE HOUSE: JUDGE BLOCKS TRUMP TAX REFORM RELEASE - A U.S. judge has temporarily blocked a California law aimed at forcing President Trump to release his personal income tax returns in order to appear on the 2020 primary ballot. U.S. District Judge Morrison C. England Jr. issued a written opinion Tuesday saying the law likely violates the U.S. Constitution (CBS News). England said in September that he would temporarily block the law that requires candidates for president or governor to file copies of their personal income tax returns with the California secretary of state's office. England wrote that the state's concerns about seeing elected officials' tax returns are "legitimate and understandable."

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SCHEDULE - President Trump will participate in the arrival of Finnish President Sauli Niinistö at noon. The two will meet followed by an expanded working lunch at 12:45 p.m. in the Cabinet Room. Trump will participate in a joint press conference at 2 p.m. in the East Room.

WHITE HOUSE: PRESIDENT CARTER TURNS 95 - Jimmy Carter, the 39th president of the United States, has celebrated multiple record-breaking milestones in recent years: The 40th anniversary of his inauguration was in 2017; he joined George H.W. Bush as the only other president to reach the age of 94; and in March, at 94 years and 172 days, he became the longest-living former president in U.S. history (Washington Post). Now, Carter is 95. To help the low-key former chief executive celebrate his birthday on Tuesday, the Carter Center is inviting people all over the world to send him birthday messages. Carter has reached yet another milestone despite thinking he was on the verge of death just a few years earlier, after doctors discovered that cancer had spread to his brain.

WHITE HOUSE: HILLARY SAYS 'GUTSIEST' THING WAS STAYING IN MARRIAGE - Hillary Clinton said Tuesday that she believes the "gutsiest" thing she ever did outside of public life was deciding to stay married to former President Bill Clinton. The candid remark from the former secretary of State and 2016 Democratic presidential nominee came during an appearance on ABC's "Good Morning America" with her daughter, Chelsea Clinton, to promote their new book, "The Book of Gutsy Women." "Can I ask you, what's the gutsiest thing you've ever done?" ABC News' Amy Robach asked Hillary Clinton at the conclusion of the joint interview. "Ah, boy, I think the gutsiest thing I've ever done — well, personally, make the decision to stay in my marriage," she replied. "Publicly, politically, run for president. And keep going. Just get up every day and keep going."

FCC: MIXED RULING ON NET NEUTRALITY - A federal appeals court on Tuesday delivered a mixed ruling for net neutrality supporters and opponents alike, allowing the Federal Communications Commission's (FCC) 2017 repeal to stand but striking down a key provision blocking states from implementing their own open internet rules (The Hill). The D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals also sent the repeal order back to the FCC, ordering the agency to revise it to take into consideration other issues, like the effect that it will have on public safety, broadband subsidies and the regulation of cable pole attachments. Though the ruling was mixed for both sides of the issue, it's still unclear whether any of the parties involved in the lawsuit plan on appealing the decision. The FCC decided to repeal the Obama-era net neutrality rules in 2017, with Republicans on the commission carrying the 3-2 vote along party lines. The rules classified internet service providers like Comcast and Verizon as common carriers, subjecting them to tougher regulations and oversight, and prohibited them from blocking or discriminating against certain websites.

OHIO: JOHNSON & JOHNSON TO SETTLE SUIT FOR $20M - Johnson & Johnson on Tuesday said it has agreed to a $20.4 million deal to avoid a coming trial accusing the company of helping spark an opioid-addiction crisis in two Ohio counties (Wall Street Journal). The settlement makes J&J the fourth drugmaker to reach such a deal ahead of the trial, slated to begin later this month in federal court in Cleveland. The trial is considered a bellwether for thousands of opioid-related lawsuits that municipalities and states have filed against drugmakers.

GEORGIA: JUDGE BLOCKS ABORTION LAW - A federal judge on Tuesday temporarily blocked Georgia's restrictive new abortion law from taking effect, following the lead of other judges who have blocked similar measures in other states (ABC News). The law signed in May by Republican Gov. Brian Kemp bans abortions once a fetal heartbeat is detected, which can happen as early as six weeks into a pregnancy, before many women realize they're expecting. It allows for limited exceptions. It had been scheduled to become enforceable on Jan. 1. Lawyers with the American Civil Liberties Union, Planned Parenthood and the Center for Reproductive Rights in June filed a constitutional challenge to the law on behalf of Georgia abortion providers and an advocacy group. U.S. District Judge Steve Jones wrote in an order Tuesday that the current laws governing abortion in the state shall remain in effect for the time being.

CITIES: GARY PRESIDENT BREWER THANKS SUPPORTERS AFTER ARREST - Common Council President Ronald Brewer thanked his supporters and defended his decision to track down teens in his stolen vehicle Sept. 22, resulting in his arrest by East Chicago police (Cross, NWI Times). "As a husband, father, I would never knowingly subject my family to public humiliation. As an elected official, I would never intentionally bring shame to my community," Brewer said in a statement near the beginning of Tuesday night's Common Council meeting. Brewer was allegedly overheard during a 911 call Sept. 22 threatening one of the teenagers, age 14, found in the politician's stolen Lexus the day after he reported his car stolen, saying the teen's mom would be getting him back "in a (expletive) body bag." The council president said he stands by his innocence, arguing he reported the car stolen immediately to Gary police.

CITIES: SBA AUDIT FINDS $250K IN OVERRUNS - The state's latest audit of Muncie city government found issues with city accounts being overdrawn by hundreds of thousands of dollars and repeated improper use of city credit cards (Ohlenkamp, Muncie Star Press). The Indiana State Board of Accounts, in a report issued on Sept. 11, drove home that the city has a handful of overdrawn accounts, most of which are likely from bad accounting by city department heads for 2018. The report noted that the local road and street account was overdrawn by $430,895, the city's Hardest Hit Fund was overdrawn by $283,698 and several community development office funds were overdrawn by nearly $70,000 in total. City controller Kevin Nemyer said that most of the time it is department heads attempting to pay claims out of a line item, but they've used all the money. A majority of the time it doesn't indicate serious issues, but instead accounting errors that can be corrected. "We usually process those claims as they are turned in," Nemyer said.

CITIES: SBA RAISES MORE QUESTIONS ON MARTINSVILLE PD CHIEF - A newly released audit criticizes the former Martinsville police chief's role in the overpayment of two police department employees (WRTV). Matthew Long was appointed as police chief in 2016 and is currently on unpaid leave status with the Martinsville Police Department pending criminal charges of theft and official misconduct. According to the audit, Kirsten Clayton was hired in June 2017 to work at the police department and then became administrative assistant to the mayor in October 2017. Time sheets showed Clayton did not receive pay for 37.5 hours. In November 2017, then Chief Matthew Long made an entry in the software application to post 80 hours of compensatory or "comp" time for Clayton. The State Board of Accounts said in 2018, Clayton took comp time off totaling 86 hours, however, the city only had documentation that she earned 37.5 hours. The State Board of Accounts asked Clayton and Long to reimburse the city $1,075.73.

CITIES: ELKHART FD CHIEF RESIGNS - Elkhart Fire Chief Chad Carey is resigning. That was confirmed Tuesday evening by the mayor's Chief of Staff, Bradley Tracy. The resignation will be officially announced by the mayor this week (Elkhart Truth). Tracy said the chief has notified Mayor Tim Neese that he will leave the position before the end of the year in order to take advantage of another opportunity, which Tracy could not name. He did not disclose the exact time of Carey's departure. Neese's term will come to an end on Dec. 31, meaning that Carey would not be certain to keep his current job when a new mayor takes office.

CITIES: CARMEL SEEKS TO BAN SCOOTERS - The city known for having over 125 roundabouts is now trying to ban some modes of transportation (Fox59). Tonight, Carmel city councilors will consider a ban on skateboards and electric scooters in Midtown, the Arts & Design district, city-owned parking garages and in the city's parks. This proposal would expand on an ordinance that already prohibits scooters and skateboards in Carmel's City Center. In the past, city councilors say skateboarders have been known to go down ramps in parking garages, putting residents and drivers at risk. "We do have skateboarders who are enjoying using the ramps in our parking garages. That's an unsafe situation not only for our skateboarders, but also our drivers," said Carmel City-Council President Jeff Worrell.

COUNTIES: ELKHART, LaGRANGE, NOBLE, TO SPRAY FOR MOSQUITOS - Three northern Indiana counties will conduct aerial spraying to combat a rare mosquito-borne virus that's been found in several local horses. Elkhart, Noble and LaGrange counties' commissioners authorized the spraying Monday in separate meetings (AP). The decisions by the adjoining counties comes after eight horses in Elkhart County and two in LaGrange County tested positive for eastern equine encephalitis. The Goshen News reports human cases of the virus in adjacent Michigan counties factored in the Indiana counties' decisions to begin spraying.

Creative Works, which makes props and attractions for the entertainment industry, announced Wednesday that it will invest $1.1 million into renovating and expanding its Mooresville headquarters and plans to add up to 70 jobs by 2022.

The company, which has 67 full-time employees, plans to hire for sales and marketing associates, project managers, 3D modeling and graphic designers, fabricators and attraction installers.

“This expansion will ensure Creative Works’ long-term success in Morgan County, allowing the company to grow and increase its client base around the world,” Elaine Bedel, president of the Indiana Economic Development Corp., said in a written statement.

Founded in 1997, the company creates about 300 projects a year for entertainment venues, including escape rooms, virtual reality and esports venues and indoor miniature golf courses.

It has grown explosively in recent years, with 2018 revenue reaching $20 million, up from less than $7 million in 2016.

Creative Works, which operates out of a four-building, 33,000-square-foot campus, has not finalized its construction plans. But the firm said the upgrades will include installation of new 3D modeling equipment and fabrication machines.

The IEDC offered Creative Works up to $575,000 in tax credits based on the company’s job-creation plans. It also offered up to $100,000 in tax credits from the Hoosier Business Investment tax credit program based on the planned capital investment.

The Mooresville Town Council and Redevelopment Commission will consider additional incentives. Details on those were not immediately available.

Consolidation up for consideration for state education agencies

October 1, 2019 | Emma Kate Fittes, Chalkbeat Indiana

KEYWORDS EDUCATION & WORKFORCE DEVELOPMENT / GOVERNMENT & ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT / STATE GOVERNMENT

Indiana lawmakers are considering consolidating the State Board of Education with two other largely governor-appointed agencies, a move that might become easier when the state changes to a governor-appointed superintendent of public instruction in 2021.

On Tuesday, an interim committee of lawmakers discussed potentially consolidating the state board of education, governor's workforce cabinet, and Commission for Higher Education.

The discussion seems to signal an expectation of smoother relationships between the governor's office and superintendent, who heads the education department and sits on the state board.

Rep. Bob Behning, an Indianapolis Republican who chairs the House Education Committee, suggested the state turn each into smaller subcommittees, which would make recommendations to an overarching "Commission for Lifelong Learning." The commission, which would include the state superintendent, would take authority over state policy from the state board.

Currently, the three groups function separately from each other and the department of education. The governor's workforce cabinet was established last year to review career and technical education and oversee new grant programs. The 14-member higher education commission, created in 1971, administers state financial aid, collects secondary education data and reviews colleges' appropriation requests.

The state board, which has existed since 1852, authorizes billions of dollars in state education funds to local K-12 schools, assigns school letter grades, and intervenes into failing schools, among other things. Most of its members—eight of the 11—are appointed by the governor.

Although the Behning's proposal wouldn't truly combine the groups because they would remain in subcommittees, Behning said the additional commission would help ensure that all groups are working in alignment.

"We need to do something to change the government so we have a total focus instead of these silos," he told lawmakers on Tuesday.

Historically, the state superintendent has been an elected position. The decision to move to an appointed superintendent is controversial because it puts the power in the governor's hands.

A year ago, Superintendent Jennifer McCormick said she experienced “toxic politics” between the education department and governor's office. Her comments were surprising to some, who expected the Republican to find better success in a state where the governor is a Republican and the legislature has a Republican supermajority.

Behning's idea is a far cry from Democrat Rep. Ed DeLaney's bill earlier this year that would have scrapped the state board of education and transferred its responsibilities to the state education department. Instead, his model is similar to the former Indiana Education Roundtable, which was co-chaired by the governor and state superintendent. The roundtable was dissolved in 2015 under then-Gov. Mike Pence, who frequently clashed with then-superintendent and Democrat Glenda Ritz.

The interim committee of lawmakers didn't make any decisions on Tuesday for how to move forward. Representatives from each of the three groups involved said they didn't have enough time to prepare a response to the suggestion.

The Indiana State Teachers Association, the state's largest union, said during the meeting Tuesday that they would support a model similar to the roundtable, but asked for some members to be elected to balance the appointed state superintendent.

“It had a model that worked well and brought together a diverse host of interest,” said ISTA lobbyist John O'Neal. “Recreating this is doable.”

TRUMP CALLS ON CHINA TO INVESTIGATE THE BIDENS: Ensnarled in an impeachment investigation over his request for Ukraine to investigate a chief political rival, President Donald Trump on Thursday called on another nation to probe former Vice President Joe Biden: China (AP). "China should start an investigation into the Bidens," Trump said in remarks to reporters outside the White House. Trump said he hadn't directly asked Chinese President Xi Jinping to investigate Biden and his son Hunter but said it's "certainly something we could start thinking about." Trump and personal lawyer Rudy Giuliani have also tried to raise suspicions about Hunter Biden's business dealings in China, leaning on the writings of conservative author Peter Schweizer. But there is no evidence that the former vice president benefited financially from his son's business relationships. "I have a lot of options on China, but if they don't do what we want, we have tremendous, tremendous power," Trump said. He later alleged without evidence that China had a "sweetheart deal" on trade with the U.S. because of the Bidens. "You know what they call that," Trump said. "They call that a payoff."

TRUMP TOSSES STINK BOMB INTO CHINA TRADE TALKS: President Donald Trump just tossed his most pressing economic issue into the morass of impeachment politics (Politico). Trump's suggestion Thursday that Beijing should investigate a political rival, moments after threatening America's "tremendous power" in the ongoing trade talks with China, exposes his long-running negotiations with the world's No. 2 economy to new scrutiny and could cast a political shadow over the results. Trump's characteristic conflation of issues comes just a week before Chinese officials are due to arrive for a 13th round of trade talks in Washington. Even if Trump's comments don't shift the dynamic at the negotiating table, people who have been tracking every twist in the trade talks say the president's statement will cloud how any outcome from the talks is received by Trump's Democratic opponents and other U.S. policymakers. "This is a gift to anyone who doesn't like the deal," said Derek Scissors, a China scholar at the American Enterprise Institute who has advised the administration on China issues. "It will be very easy to say, the U.S. could have gotten more but the president wanted China to investigate Biden and gave up something that would have helped American workers," he added.

TRUMP TO DARE PELOSI TO IMPEACH: The White House will send House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., a letter on Friday "daring" her to hold a vote on Democrats' impeachment inquiry into President Trump, Fox News has confirmed (Fox News). The letter will say the White House won't comply with the Democrats' investigation because Pelosi hasn't codified the probe with a formal vote on the House floor. Its tone will be consistent with that of the letter House Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy, R-Calif., sent to the speaker on Thursday, Fox learned. In his letter, McCarthy called on Pelosi to end the impeachment inquiry until "equitable rules and procedures" are set up.

TRUMP'S RED WALL INCLUDES SENS. BRAUN, YOUNG: Every time President Trump seems to tempt fate — like inviting China on-camera yesterday to investigate the Bidens — remember that he's counting on a red wall in the Senate to save him even if he's impeached, Axios' David Nather and Jim VandeHei write. This visual shows just how strong that wall is: 51 Republican senators from states Trump won in 2016, including Indiana's U.S. Sens. Todd Young and Mike Braun. He only needs 34 to save him from being convicted and removed from office if the House impeaches him. So if Mitt Romney or Ben Sasse feel like voting to convict, they can and it wouldn't make a difference. The red wall doesn't include Susan Collins or Cory Gardner, the two Republican senators from states that voted for Hillary Clinton (Maine and Colorado). Both are up for re-election next year. They could vote to convict too, and it still wouldn't matter. Remember that impeachment, which only takes a majority vote in the House, doesn't end Trump's presidency. That only happens if two-thirds of the Senate votes to convict and remove him — 67 senators if they all show up. 36 Republican senators represent Trump states where he's still popular. 15 of them are up for re-election. 15 Republican senators represent Trump states where his approval ratings are underwater, but only 4 of them are up for re-election.

NAPOLITANO SEES TRUMP 'IMPEACHABLE OFFENSE': Fox News senior judicial analyst Andrew Napolitano argued in a column and video published on FoxNews.com Thursday morning that President Donald Trump's "criminal behavior" with regard to Ukraine is impeachable, and that his threats against the whistleblower are dangerous (Mediaite). The column opens by noting that "the criminal behavior to which Trump has admitted is much more grave than anything alleged or unearthed by Special Counsel Robert Mueller, and much of what Mueller revealed was impeachable," before outlining the specifics of the Ukraine scandal currently presenting an existential threat to his administration. He later calls out the specific language used by Trump towards the unnamed whistleblower: Trump has also admitted to accusing the as-yet publicly unnamed whistleblower of treason, and suggesting that the whistleblower and those who have helped him are spies and ought to be treated as spies were in "the old days" (Trump's phrase) — that is, by hanging. The president's allusions to violence are palpably dangerous. They will give cover to crazies who crave violence, as other intemperate words of his have done."

GIULIANI PUSHED FOR UKRAINE AMBASSADOR DISMISSAL: President Trump ordered the removal of the ambassador to Ukraine after months of complaints from allies outside the administration, including his personal lawyer Rudy Giuliani, that she was undermining him abroad and obstructing efforts to persuade Kyiv to investigate former Vice President

Joe Biden, according to people familiar with the matter (Wall Street Journal). The recall of Marie Yovanovitch in the spring has become a key point of interest in the House impeachment inquiry. A whistleblower complaint by a CIA officer alleges the president solicited foreign interference in the 2020 elections by pressing Ukraine's president in a July 25 call to pursue investigations, including into the activities of Mr. Biden, a Democrat who is running for president. The complaint cites Ms. Yovanovitch's ouster as one of a series of events that paved the way for what the whistleblower alleges was an abuse of power by the president. Mr. Trump has described the call with his Ukrainian counterpart as "perfect" and the House inquiry as a "hoax."

INDIANA GOP OFFERING 'IMPEACH THIS' T-SHIRT: The Indiana Republican Party is offering an "Impeach This" T-shirt (Howey Politics Indiana). The Republicans said, "In just the last week, radical Democrats have escalated their attacks on President Donald Trump. And while Democrats have recklessly called for impeachment, President Trump has been fully transparent with the American people. Get Your 'Impeach This' shirt now & stand with President Trump. As Democrats try to distract from the real results President Trump is delivering the American people, we have an important question: How does the radical left think they can get away with impeachment when they're facing a country this red?"

PUTIN JOKES ABOUT ELECTION MEDDLING: Russian President Vladimir Putin joked about Russia meddling in the 2020 presidential elections, telling reporters "don't tell anyone" (Epoch Times). During an appearance at an event in Moscow, Putin was asked by an NBC reporter about whether Russia was going to meddle in the upcoming U.S. election. "I'll tell you a secret: Yes, we'll definitely do it," Putin replied, according to CNN. "Just don't tell anyone," he added. "You know, we have enough of our own problems," CNN quoted Putin as saying. "We are engaged in resolving internal problems and are primarily focused on this." Bloomberg News also reported on Putin's response. In the same conference, Putin also said he never had a close relationship with President Donald Trump. "In my opinion, we have good, businesslike relations, and a relatively stable level of trust," Putin said, Bloomberg reported. "We've never been close, and aren't now."

NEW SCRUTINY FOR OLD DEM FRONTRUNNERS: Bernie Sanders' hospitalization with a blocked artery this week finally forced the Democratic Party to confront a lingering fact: All three of its presidential front-runners are septuagenarians, and two are older than Donald Trump — himself the oldest person ever to take office (Politico). For Sanders, the immediate effect of the incident — a blockage requiring two stents — was to sideline the 78-year-old senator until further notice, with rest for what an adviser called "the next few days." But the broader implications were also thrust into plain view: In a Democratic primary that was once expected to break along generational lines, a whole crop of younger contenders has fallen so far back that — even with an aging, top-tier contender laid up — it would take an upset for the party to mount a generational argument against Trump next year. Biden, Sanders and Sen. Elizabeth Warren — the youngest of the three at 70 — are pulling nearly three-quarters of the primary electorate's support in national polling. And even if Sanders stumbles, no younger alternative is likely to benefit.

BILL LANDSKE SENTENCED TO 55 YEARS: The 84-year-old widower of a state senator was sentenced Thursday to 55 years in prison for killing a prominent attorney who was a friend of his wife for more than 30 years (Reese, NWI Times). William "Bill" Landske, of Cedar Lake, was convicted of murder in August for shooting Tracy Edward Page multiple times in August 2018 after leading Page away from members of both of their families under the guise of having a talk outside Page's Hobart home. Page's brother and sister-in-law, Paul and Sally Page, said Page's death left a hole in the fabric of the community. "He never met a person he couldn't win over," Sally Page said of her brother-in-law. Tracy Page was a pillar of every community he was part of, and his death continues to reverberate. Kevin Swanson, Tracy Page's spouse and partner of more than 30 years, witnessed the ambush killing and remains so grief-stricken he could not attend Thursday's sentencing hearing, they said. Swanson also may not attend the Page family's holiday gatherings again this year as he attempts to find a "new normal." "It's too painful for him to be with the rest of us," Sally Page said.

BIDEN POSTS JUST $15M: Former Vice President Joe Biden said he raised $15.2 million for his presidential campaign during the past three months, a drop-off from his initial fundraising foray that could put him at a disadvantage against some of his Democratic rivals (Wall Street Journal). Mr. Biden told donors at a Palo Alto, Calif., event Thursday about his fundraising totals in the three-month period that ended Sept. 30. The amount compares to his $22 million haul during the first two months of his campaign through the end of June. Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders, who has been hospitalized following a heart ailment, reported earlier this week that he had raised $25.3 million, while South Bend, Ind., Mayor Pete Buttigieg said he had collected $19.1 million during the period. Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren, who has been vying with Mr. Biden for the top position in primary polling, hasn't yet announced her fundraising amount for the quarter.

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: Democratic frontrunner just reported a $15 million, which is an underwhelming number, compared to the $25 million for Bernie Sanders and $19 million for Pete Buttigieg. It underscores Biden's vulnerability, which is now under assault from President Trump, and under influence by Sanders health scare. The question is whether Buttigieg can use his robust funding to join the top tier. He lacks African-American support and addresses the Indianapolis NAACP tonight. - Brian A. Howey

Campaigns

CRAWFORD'S WIFE IN TV AD FOR MAYOR HENRY: The wife of Republican Fort Wayne City Councilman John Crawford has been featured in an advertisement supporting Democratic Mayor Tom Henry's reelection campaign. The campaign video, which aired on TV and was posted to the Henry campaign Facebook page, is titled "Republicans for Mayor Tom Henry" and features two Republicans and an independent. One of the Republicans is Marcia Crawford (Gong, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). In the video, Crawford states that she is supporting Henry "because he works for all parties, making sure the neighborhoods are thriving, businesses are investing and our young people are staying in Fort Wayne, living, working and raising their families here." Henry is running against Republican Tim Smith in the Nov. 5 general election. The other two featured in the video are Ryan Neumeister and independent John Dortch, who said Henry is "positive and has a real plan for moving our city forward." John Crawford said his wife's appearance in the ad was her choice. "You don't tell modern women what to do. They tell you what they are going to do," he said in an interview Tuesday. "I gave her no direction one way or another; it was her decision."

HUPFER CALLS ON BUTTIGIEG TO ADDRESS SOUTH BEND CRIME: Ahead of Mayor Pete Buttigieg's stop in South Bend Thursday night to open a new presidential campaign office, Indiana Republican Party Chairman Kyle Hupfer released a statement calling on Buttigieg to stick around South Bend a little longer and to address the city's rising crime (Howey Politics Indiana). "As homicides and aggravated assaults continue to rise in South Bend, the city needs a leader," said Hupfer. "And sadly right now, it's clear that Mayor Pete Buttigieg is dodging the responsibilities of being that leader. "The people of South Bend care about the safety of their own neighborhoods – not baseless impeachment inquiries, and certainly not Buttigieg's latest celebrity endorsement. They need someone who will work toward real solutions for their city on crime, and Buttigieg's priorities are clearly elsewhere." According to reporting by the South Bend Tribune, so far this year (as of August, the latest month with full statistics) South Bend has seen 10 homicides.

DIETZEN ENTERS GOP 5TH CD RACE: Chuck Dietzen is the fifth Republican to launch a campaign for the 5th CD. "I want to serve the community that has given me extraordinary opportunities to make a difference in the lives of people here and all over the world," said Dietzen (Howey Politics Indiana). "I want to make sure we make healthcare work for patients, and socialized medicine does not work. I want to ensure our families and communities thrive – to do that we must protect our constitutional freedoms." Dietzen retired from as chief of Pediatric Rehabilitation Medicine at Riley Hospital for Children at Indiana University Health. He is the founder of, and a volunteer for, Timmy Global Health, an Indianapolis based nonprofit that has worked to expand healthcare access in developing countries.

BUTTIGIEG OPENS NEW SOUTH BEND HQ: Mayor Pete Buttigieg opened his new presidential campaign office Thursday night in South Bend (Caruso, Indiana Public Media). A large crowd gathered outside of the new 'Pete For America' campaign office to show their support. Buttigieg said there are several reasons he opened the office - like preparation for the Indiana primary in May. "It is very likely the nomination contest will still be pretty intense and undecided when the primary happens here in Indiana so it's never too soon to be organizing right here." Buttigieg also said South Bend is the heart of his campaign and he wanted to grow his local presence.

DEFIANT BIDEN RESPONDS TO TRUMP: Joe Biden delivered his most forceful response to President Trump's attacks on him in a speech in Reno Wednesday, painting Mr. Trump as "wounded" and "desperate," on a day when Mr. Trump angrily attacked congressional Democrats over the impeachment inquiry and kept up his unsupported accusations of impropriety against Biden and his son Hunter, who was employed by an energy company in Ukraine (CBS News). "Let me make something clear to Trump and his hatchet men and the special interests funding his attacks against me — I'm not going anywhere," Biden said, to applause from the crowd. "You're not going to destroy me. And you're not going to destroy my family. I don't care how much money you spend or how dirty the attacks get."

TRUMP CAMPAIGN TO AIM ADS AT BIDEN: President Donald Trump's reelection campaign is preparing an avalanche of TV ads targeting Joe Biden in early primary states — its most aggressive step yet to meddle in the Democratic nomination contest (Politico). Starting this weekend, the reelection effort will air over $1 million in anti-Biden commercials in Iowa, South Carolina, New Hampshire, and Nevada, according to two people familiar with the move. The spots focus on Trump's claim that the former vice president and his son engaged in corruption in Ukraine.

CNN REFUSES TO RUN TRUMP CAMPAIGN AD: CNN said Thursday that it will not run two Trump campaign ads because they disparage the network's journalists and make "demonstrably false" claims while discussing impeachment and pushing unsubstantiated allegations of corruption against former vice president Joe Biden (Washington Post). The network's decisions come as the Trump administration escalates its attacks on congressional Democrats' impeachment efforts and continues to lash out at media organizations it tries to discredit as “fake news.” CNN’s move brought renewed ire from Trump’s reelection campaign, as Communications Director Tim Murtaugh called the news network a “Democrat public relations firm” that “spends all day protecting Joe Biden.” The first rejected ad, posted last week to YouTube, suggests the president is being unfairly scrutinized for pressing Ukraine to investigate Biden and his son Hunter. The ad accuses Trump’s potential 2020 opponent of corruption, continuing a favorite talking point of the president and his supporters amid an impeachment inquiry and concerns Trump used his office to create trouble for a political rival.

SANDERS EXPECTED TO ATTEND OCTOBER DEBATE: As Sen. Bernie Sanders recovers from a heart procedure to clear a clogged artery, his campaign promises he will be on the debate stage in less than two weeks (ABC News). “Bernie is up and about. Yesterday, he spent much of the day talking with staff about policies, cracking jokes with the nurses and doctors, and speaking with his family on the phone. His doctors are pleased with his progress, and there has been no need for any additional procedures,” Jane Sanders said in a statement Thursday afternoon. “We expect Bernie will be discharged and on a plane back to Burlington before the end of the weekend. He’ll take a few days to rest, but he’s ready to get back out there and is looking forward to the October debate.”

MAYOR BRODERICK PASSES ON BUTTIGIEG ENDORSEMENT: More than 50 mayors across the country — including nearly a dozen from Indiana — have publicly endorsed Pete Buttigieg in his primary campaign for the Democratic presidential nomination, but two local leaders aren’t among them (Knight, Anderson Herald-Bulletin). Anderson Mayor Tom Broderick said he received an emailed invitation from the United States Conference of Mayors to sign on to the endorsement, but chose not to because he’s focused on his own mayoral campaign this fall. Broderick is seeking to become the first Anderson mayor elected to consecutive terms since J. Mark Lawler in 1999. “I’m focused on my own race right now, but I’m continuing to watch the debates like everyone else and hear what everyone has to say,” Broderick said.

YANG POSTS $10M: Andrew Yang likes to joke about being a math guy, and right now, the numbers are on his side (Politico). The Democratic businessman announced Wednesday that over the past three months he raked in $10 million for his presidential campaign — more than a number of his rivals for the Democratic nomination and just shy of Sen. Kamala Harris, who has won three statewide elections in the nation’s biggest state.

MAYOR PETE STEPS OUT OF 'OUR TOWN': It’s a gorgeous day in the eye-squinting New Hampshire sunshine, a becoming natural setting for a 37-year-old candidate who seeks to embody youthful vigor and hope. Soon enough the Democratic mayor from the Midwest with the tongue-tying surname, Pete Buttigieg, appears before us. He sports snug-fitting blue jeans, a white long-sleeve shirt folded neatly up to the elbows and, for me, a genial decency reminiscent of Thornton Wilder’s “Our Town” (Washington Post). You remember “Our Town,” don’t you? That canonical play from the 1930s that recorded the cycles of life in the unremarkable New England village of Grover’s Corners? Why, come to think of it, “Our Town” takes place in New Hampshire, too! Standing before us on a platform in the middle of rolling farmland, his silhouette framed by a red barn draped with the stars and stripes, the candidate seems as if he could indeed be a figure conjured out of Wilder’s imagination: a pleasant fellow of homespun virtues, the sort who would leap to help a little old lady cross a street. Mayor Pete maintains a gentlemanly facade offstage. He’s preternaturally mild-mannered. In two days of watching him work New Hampshire crowds, from a meet-and-greet in a Veterans of Foreign Wars hall in Manchester to a walking tour of downtown Lebanon and a boisterous college-town rally in Hanover, I never once saw the mask of calm come off. He never seems to get steamed up, rarely even raises his voice. Pete the Imperturbable. “Look, we can throw an elbow if we have to,” he declares at another stop, with the confident reserve of an Atticus Finch.

Congress

WALORSKI WILL HOST A MEDICARE FORUM: U.S. Rep. Jackie Walorski (R-Ind.) today announced her office will host “Medicare 101” educational sessions across the 2nd District to give Hoosiers the opportunity to learn the basics about the Medicare program, including enrollment, and have their questions answered by experts. This year’s “Medicare 101” events will take place in Elkhart, Goshen, La Porte, Mishawaka, Peru, Plymouth, Wabash, and Winamac (Howey Politics Indiana). “Medicare is a sacred commitment we have made to our seniors, and part of keeping that promise is providing Hoosiers the information and assistance they need to secure the benefits they deserve,” Congresswoman Walorski said. “These ‘Medicare 101’ educational sessions are a great way for Hoosier seniors to learn more about Medicare and have their questions answered by experts. I encourage all 2nd District Hoosiers who are at or near retirement age – or who are caregivers for Medicare beneficiaries – to attend one of these incredibly helpful events.”

REP. UPTON BACKS INQUIRY INTO UKRAINE CALL: Michigan Rep. Fred Upton, a moderate Republican who has been critical of President Trump in the past, said Wednesday that he supports an inquiry into the president’s actions pertaining to Trump's controversial July call with the Ukrainian president, but not an impeachment inquiry (Washington Post). "Let's really look at all the details, ask lots of questions and see where it takes us," Upton told NPR's Michigan station. "So you're supportive of the idea that there needs to be this inquiry. You're not questioning that," a reporter clarified. "Yeah, I want the answers to the questions that need to be raised," Upton said.

LEGISLATORS HEAR ABOUT SPEED CAMERAS IN WORK ZONES: Some Indiana lawmakers want to authorize the installation of work zone speed cameras along the state's highways to photograph speeding cars and fine the lead-footed motorists. The NWI Times reports that members of the General Assembly's Interim Study Committee on Transportation advanced a plan Wednesday to authorize using the traffic cameras. The panel will decide later this month whether to officially recommend that Indiana's Republican-controlled Legislature consider making Indiana the sixth state with work zone speed cameras. State Rep. Chuck Moseley, a committee member who proposed a failed automated enforcement bill in the last House Session, says he's determined to get the measure passed in 2020.

SHERIFF TELLS OF BULGING JAIL: From the moment inmates enter the Johnson County jail in Franklin Indiana, they are under constant 24 hour surveillance (Pinsker, Indiana Public Media). A jail deputy sits in front of a bank of TV screens and computer monitors, where he can watch every inmate's movement around the facility. Sheriff Duane Burgess says he's seeing more inmates with mental health issues enter his jail. "Jail should not be a location where you put people with mental health issues, there needs to be other treatment centers where these folks can go," says Burgess. Originally constructed in the 1970's, jail now has a capacity for 322 inmates. "We've been as high as 458 and we've struggled with those numbers for the past few years," says Burgess. On September 30th, the recently formed Jail Overcrowding Task Force convened to tackle many of the concerns brought by the county sheriffs around Indiana. The panel is co-chaired by State Senator J.D. Ford (D-Indianapolis). "I've heard from different folks that our jails are serving as detox centers. I've heard from different folks about how mental health is a huge problem," says Ford.

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB LEADS CALL FOR PELL GRANTS - Gov. Eric J. Holcomb offered the following statement after leading a letter calling on Congress to provide flexibility in the Pell grant program which would support Indiana's Next Level Jobs initiative. Eleven governors joined Gov. Holcomb in the effort (Howey Politics Indiana). "Indiana has never been more focused on helping people obtain the skills they need to secure good jobs that fuel our state's growing economy. Expanding the reach of federal Pell programs will help support education for incarcerated Hoosiers, adult learners and high school students to help them obtain a quality credential beyond a high school diploma. This will go a long way in helping Indiana meet its goal for at least 60 percent of Hoosiers to have education and training beyond high school by 2025 — a goal directly aligned to future workforce need. These federal changes recognize that states need more flexibility to target support to their unique populations, meet current workforce needs, and prepare for a rapidly changing future workforce and economy." The letter is addressed to U.S. Senate Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee Chairman Lamar Alexander and Ranking Member Sen. Patty Murray. Chairman Alexander recently released a bipartisan package of legislation to reform higher education that included reform of the Pell program.

STATEHOUSE: HILL SAYS FETAL REMAINS BACK IN INDIANA - Attorney General Curtis Hill announced today that he has overseen the transportation of 2,246 aborted fetuses back to Indiana after they were discovered in September at the Illinois home of the late Dr. Ulrich Klopfer. An investigation has revealed that the fetuses were aborted by Dr. Klopfer at Indiana clinics located in Fort Wayne, Gary and South Bend (Howey Politics Indiana). The St. Joseph County Coroner's Office assisted the Office of the Indiana Attorney General in bringing the remains back to Indiana, Attorney General Hill said at a South Bend press conference. "This investigation has been a team effort involving multiple offices and agencies since the day it began, and it remains a team effort as we proceed forward," Attorney General Hill said. "Our priority throughout this process is to give proper respect to the remains of these unborn children and to the women and families associated with them. We are still working through the decision-making process in regard to ultimate disposition of these remains, and we will continue to proceed with appropriate care and consideration at each step of the way. For now, we can simply let everyone know that these remains are back home in Indiana."

JUDICIARY: ARGUMENTS IN RFRA FIX LAW - Indiana's infamous religious freedom law came back into focus today as a Hamilton County judge heard almost three hours of arguments about whether the so-called fix to the controversial statute is unconstitutional (Kelly, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). Also at issue was whether four cities' anti-discrimination ordinances discriminate against several Christian nonprofits. Terre Haute attorney Jim Bopp, who is seeking to invalidate the law, said the case is unprecedented because no state has ever granted legal protection for religious freedom and then within days stripped that protection away. "We know that limiting the exercise of a person's religious freedom only to the four corners of their church or home is patently unconstitutional but that is what we are faced with," he said. But the Indiana Attorney General's Office and lawyers for the cities of Indianapolis, Carmel, Bloomington and Columbus argued the organizations that sued don't have standing because they haven't been harmed.

AGRICULTURE: FARMERS GET $600M IN BAILOUT - Indiana farmers received nearly $600 million from the United States Department of Agriculture during the first round of payments from the Market Facilitation Program that seeks to minimize the impact of retaliatory tariffs from the Chinese government (Indiana Public Media). More than 35,000 farmers applied for the program last year.

AGRICULTURE: DIFFICULT HARVEST AHEAD - Just about every part of this year's growing season has been a challenge from planting to weed control. Harvest will be no different. The 2019 harvest slowly which is getting underway in some parts of the state is going to be a difficult one for many reasons but primary because of the extreme variability in crop development (Truitt, Hoosier Ag Today). Lance Shepherd, with Pioneer, says, "We are definitely going to be harvesting different moisture levels in corn and even in soybeans. Early yield numbers in SE Indiana have been very disappointing. Shepherd feels yields in NE Indiana will be better, "I still think we are going to be in the 160bpa to 180bpa on corn. I don't think we will be breaking any records in 2019." He added that harvest activity in the NE has been spotty but is expected to ramp up this weekend and into next week.

ISU VIGIL FOR KHASHOGGI: As the sun set and a crescent moon shone in the southwest sky, about a dozen people gathered at Indiana State University's Dede Plaza to remember Washington Post journalist and ISU alumnus Jamal Khashoggi on the one year anniversary of his death (Loughlin, Terre Haute Tribune-Star). The ISU chapter of the Society of Professional Journalists conducted a candlelight vigil in memory of Khashoggi, a critic of the Saudi government who was murdered on Oct. 2, 2018, after visiting the Saudi embassy in Turkey to obtain marriage documents. His death prompted an international outcry. Khashoggi attended Indiana State as an undergraduate from 1977 to 1982 and received a business administration degree on May 7, 1983. Alexa Imperial, ISU SPJ secretary, and Lori Henson, ISU journalism instructor and SPJ adviser, read from a prepared text and also called for a moment of silence. According to the Committee to Protect Journalists, at least 53 journalists around the world were killed in 2018, Imperial read. At least 34 were singled out to be murdered, including Khashoggi, "a columnist for the Washington Post, a 1983 graduate of ISU, a father, a fiancé, and a fierce advocate for press freedom, democracy and human rights." Imperial continued, "We gather to remember him today because he was one of countless journalists around the world who risk everything they have — even their lives — to defend freedom of expression, freedom of the press, and freedom to debate ideas peacefully in a complex world."

WHITE HOUSE: IRS WHISTLEBLOWER EMERGES ON TRUMP, PENCE TAXES - An Internal Revenue Service official has filed a whistleblower complaint reporting that he was told that at least one Treasury Department political appointee attempted to improperly interfere with the annual audit of the president's or vice president's tax returns, according to multiple people familiar with the document (Washington Post). Trump administration officials dismissed the whistleblower's complaint as flimsy because it is based on conversations with other government officials. But congressional Democrats were alarmed by the complaint, now circulating on Capitol Hill, and flagged it in a federal court filing. They are also discussing whether to make it public. The details of the IRS complaint follow news of a separate, explosive whistleblower complaint filed in August by a member of the intelligence community. That complaint revealed Trump's request of Ukrainian leaders to investigate former vice president Joe Biden, a political rival. It has spurred an impeachment probe on Capitol Hill.

WHITE HOUSE: VOLKER THOUGHT TRUMP UKRAINE PLAN 'CRAZY' - A top American diplomat in Ukraine repeatedly raised concerns with colleagues about the White House's decision to withhold $391 million in security aid from Ukraine, describing it as a "crazy" plan to withhold security assistance "for help with a political campaign," according to texts released Thursday as part of the impeachment inquiry into President Trump (New York Times). The texts, which were turned over to Congress by Kurt D. Volker, the State Department's former special envoy for Ukraine, come from a series of early September exchanges. They appear to show a dispute among American diplomats over whether the president was trying to use security aid or a White House meeting with the country's new leader as leverage to pressure Ukraine to dig up dirt on a leading political rival — a charge at the heart of the impeachment investigation. One message, written by William B. Taylor Jr., the top American diplomat in Ukraine, suggested that Mr. Trump was holding back the package of military aid to Ukraine as a bargaining chip to influence the country's president to do his political bidding. "As I said on the phone, I think it's crazy to withhold security assistance for help with a political campaign," Mr. Taylor wrote on Sept. 9 to Mr. Volker and Gordon D. Sondland, the United States ambassador to the European Union.

WHITE HOUSE: TEXTS SHOW TRUMP PRESSED UKRAINE - The Trump administration sought to use a potential meeting between the president and his Ukrainian counterpart as leverage to press Kyiv to investigate Joe Biden, newly released text messages showed, as President Trump called on China to also investigate his political rival (Wall Street Journal). The president's efforts to persuade Ukraine in a July phone call to investigate Mr. Biden have already set off an impeachment inquiry by House Democrats, who are looking at whether the president abused the power of his office for political gain. Text messages released by House committees late Thursday revealed that Trump administration officials sought to use a White House meeting between Mr. Trump and his Ukrainian counterpart as leverage to press the Ukrainian government to pursue an investigation into Mr. Biden and other matters. The messages show that U.S. officials coordinated with aides to the Ukrainian president and Rudy Giuliani, Mr. Trump's private lawyer, on a draft statement in which Kyiv would announce an investigation into Mr. Biden and the 2016 U.S. election—at the same time as announcing a visit by the Ukrainian president to the White House.

WHITE HOUSE: PENCE GOES TO BAT FOR TRUMP - Vice President Mike Pence went to bat for President Donald Trump on Thursday, then he went to bat for himself. In case you missed it, Pence told the press earlier in the day that the Trump-Ukraine July 25 phone call raised issues that were "appropriate" and that were of "genuine interest" to the American people (Law&Crime). "The American people have the right to know whether or not the vice president of the United States or his family profited from his position," Pence said. In case you weren't sure who he was talking about, it was Joe Biden and Hunter Biden. Pence made these comments after it was reported that an aide of his listened in on the phone call that sparked a whistleblower complaint and sparked Speaker of the House Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) to back an impeachment inquiry against the president. During that call, President Trump asked Ukraine President Volodymyr Zelensky to investigate the Bidens.

WHITE HOUSE: E.U. TARIFFS EXPECTED TO HIKE FOOD PRICES - New 25% U.S. tariffs on Italian cheese, French wine, Scotch whisky, British biscuits, Spanish olives and thousands of other European food products will lead to higher prices ahead of the holiday season and cost American jobs, trade groups said on Thursday (Reuters). The U.S. Trade Representative's Office said on Wednesday it was imposing tariffs on hundreds of European products after the World Trade Organization gave the green light to the action in response to EU subsidies on large aircraft. The Specialty Food Association said in a statement the tariffs would decrease sales and adversely impact U.S. employment at 14,000 specialty food retailers and 20,000 other food retailers across the United States. The impact would be "dramatic," the trade group said.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SCHEDULE - President Trump will leave the White House at 10:30 a.m. for Walter Reed, where he will meet with wounded warriors. He will leave at 11:50 a.m. to return to the White House. At 4:30 p.m., he'll deliver remarks at the Young Black Leadership Summit 2019 in the East Room.

ENERGY: PERRY EXPECTED TO RESIGN - Energy Secretary Rick Perry is expected to announce his resignation next month, according to three people familiar with his plans (Politico). The former Texas governor largely avoided the controversies that pushed other Cabinet members out of the administration, but his contacts with Ukraine have drawn him into the impeachment inquiry engulfing President Donald Trump and his inner circle. However, the three people said the Ukraine affair is unrelated to Perry's departure. Deputy Energy Secretary Dan Brouillette is expected to replace Perry, at least temporarily.

CITIES: SOUTH BEND MINORITY CONTRACTS BELOW POPULATION - A study of minority- and women- owned business participation in South Bend contracting found those businesses get a disproportionately small share of jobs, suggesting the city could have legal grounds for considering race and gender when awarding work (Parrott, South Bend Tribune). Of more than $100 million in contracts awarded by the city between 2015 and 2017, businesses owned by minorities and women accounted for 12% of the companies that won the contracts, according to the study by Colette Holt & Associates, a California-based consulting firm. That's despite the fact minority- and women-owned businesses made up almost 15% of the contractors that were available in the city's market area to do the types of work awarded by the city over that time frame, the study found. The study also calculated the "disparity ratio" for minority- and women-owned businesses, which showed the dollar amount paid to those companies was low compared with their availability to contract with the city. The disparity ratio for minority businesses was just more than 72%. The ratio for minority- and women-owned businesses together was about 80%. The further below 100%, the greater the disparity.

CITIES: HOBART FIREFIGHTERS GET 1ST CONTRACT IN 53 YEARS - The Hobart City Council has unanimously approved a collective bargaining contract with Hobart Professional Firefighters Local 1641, the first time in 53 years the union has had a contract (Lavery, NWI Times). "This is a landmark case for the fire department," City Councilman Matt Claussen said. Fellow firefighters, who filled the council chamber Wednesday night in a show of support, applauded the council's decision and the nearly yearlong negotiations between union president Enrique Lopez and a council subcommittee comprised of Claussen, City Councilman Dan Waldrop and City Councilman John Brezik. Mayor Brian Snedecor, who also took part in the negotiations that began in November, praised Lopez and fellow union members for their efforts. "It shows that the union and city leaders can come together and give and take," Snedecor said. Hobart Fire Chief Randy Smith described it as an "opportune time to make this happen."

CITIES: ELECTRIC WORKS DEVELOPER ASKS FOR EXTENSION - Key deadlines in the economic development agreement between the city of Fort Wayne and the developers of the $248 million Electric Works project could be extended once again (Gong, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). The proposal, which was requested by RTM Ventures – the firm developing the site – sets new leasing and private financing deadlines at Feb. 1 for financing commitments and April 30 for final closing on the transaction. The original deadlines set in 2018 have been revised several times and were most recently set at Nov. 1.

CITIES: TERRE HAUTE COUNCIL PASSES $96M BUDGET - The Terre Haute City Council on Thursday approved a $96.5 million budget for 2020 in an 8 to 1 vote (Modesitt, Terre Haute Tribune-Star). The $3.3 million increase in spending over 2019 totals represents a 3.5% increase in total spending. Terre Haute Mayor Duke Bennett said the budget is projected to produce a $1.8 million surplus by the end of 2020. Bennett said he feels good about the budget overall and it being the fourth consecutive balanced budget. "It's a balanced budget with excess revenues going to reserves and just exactly what we've been following the plan to do," Bennett said. "This is the best budget of the last four. I'm really excited about where we're at now and couldn't be happier they passed it tonight."

CITIES: KAMP NAMED ELKHART FD CHIEF - Mayor Tim Neese announced Thursday that Steve Kamp will be appointed Elkhart fire chief following Chad Carey's transition to the private sector (Elkhart Truth). Kamp has served as Carey's assistant fire chief since Jan. 1, 2016.

COUNTIES: BROWN SAYS HE'LL SHOW UP TO WORK - Lake County Recorder Michael B. Brown pledged, in person, to the Lake County Council on Thursday that he will begin regularly showing up for work. This promise came after admitting he stayed away from the county government center for much of the past three years (Carden, NWI Times). In a candid statement, Brown apologized for his rampant absenteeism and attributed his failure to come to work to health issues he said originated in 2017 after he was sued by a former subordinate for sexual harassment. The county paid $185,000 to settle that lawsuit one year ago. "Through that experience and just through that whole process, I've honestly developed a very embarrassing file, I'd say, of mental anxiety and mental health issues in relation to my safety in my workplace, co-workers, mentors, politicians, friends, family," Brown said.

Indiana legislators mull installing work zone traffic cameras

Some Indiana lawmakers want to authorize the installation of work zone speed cameras along the state's highways to photograph speeding cars and fine lead-footed motorists.

Members of the General Assembly's Interim Study Committee on Transportation advanced a plan Wednesday to permit using the traffic cameras, The Times of Northwest Indiana reported.

The panel will decide later this month whether to officially recommend that Indiana's Republican-controlled Legislature consider making the state the sixth with work zone speed cameras.

State Rep. Chuck Moseley, a committee member who proposed a failed automated enforcement bill in the last House session, said he's determined to get the measure passed in 2020.

"This is not a speed enforcement issue for me. This is a safety enforcement issue for me," Moseley said.

Leaders of Indiana Constructors Inc., a statewide construction trade group, emphasized to the committee the need for enhanced work zone safety, underscoring state records that show work zone crashes jumped to 6,370 in 2017 from 2,878 in 2013.

Though the construction trade committee acknowledged Indiana has more work zones after legislators increased fuel taxes and vehicle dues in 2017 to subsidize infrastructure projects, they also noted motorists appear to be driving more recklessly because of speed and technological distractions.

"We want to get the work done, but we want to do it safely," said Dan Brown, ICI board chairman.

Judge hears arguments in lawsuit that claims RFRA fix is unconstitutional

October 3, 2019 | Lindsey Erdody

KEYWORDS COURTS / HAMILTON COUNTY / LAWSUITS / LEGAL ISSUES / REGIONAL NEWS

After years of delays—and nearly five years since the legislation passed—a Hamilton County judge heard arguments Thursday morning in a legal challenge to the so-called “fix” given to Indiana’s controversial Religious Freedom Restoration Act.

The Indiana Family Institute and the American Family Association of Indiana initially filed the lawsuit in 2015, claiming the clarifying language state lawmakers added to RFRA to quell discrimination concerns was unconstitutional and infringes upon their First Amendment rights to freedom of religion and speech.

The suit makes the same claims against four anti-discrimination municipal ordinances—those from Indianapolis, Carmel, Columbus and Bloomington.

The RFRA statute, which passed in 2015, said that religious views could be raised as a defense in court and would require a governmental entity to demonstrate that its rules were either not violating religious freedoms or were doing so to achieve a “compelling governmental interest” and doing so in the least burdensome way possible.

The RFRA fix, which legislators quickly approved after a widespread uproar that the law would allow discrimination of LGBTQ individuals, clarified that RFRA could not be used as a defense to protect against discrimination by various service providers.

The fix exempted churches, clergy members in their official capacities, and organizations connected to a church. But the Indiana Family Institute and the American Family Institute, while organized around religious views, argue the exemptions in the fix do not apply to them because they are not specifically connected to any church.

Both groups—which were strong supporters of the original law—marriage and believe they have the constitutional right to prevent couples from attending their events, participating in their program them.

Jim Bopp, a Terre Haute attorney representing the groups, said the protection for religious freedom, but the fix stripped it from a select unconstitutional.

“It flies in the face of well-established constitutional rights of people to have their religious freedom protected and not infringed upon,” Bopp said.

But Jefferson Garn, an attorney with the Indiana Attorney General’s Office, said the objective of the “fix” was to clarify how to apply RFRA.

“It wasn’t to strip anybody’s rights,” Garn said.

Garn and lawyers representing the four cities named in the lawsuit argued that neither of the groups have suffered any harm, because they haven’t actually done anything to violate state or local statutes—they haven’t denied anyone access to their events or programs, nor have they denied employment to anyone because of their sexual orientation or gender identity.

“They simply haven’t shown that our ordinance is going to be triggered,” Larry Allen, assistant city attorney for Bloomington, said. “There is no credible threat of prosecution.”

Daniyal Moazzam Habib, assistant corporation counsel for Indianapolis, said the American Family Association of Indiana in particular has been having events in the city of Indianapolis for 13 years without being the subject of any complaint, investigation or threat.

“AFA can keep doing what it does without bothering the ordinance,” Habib said.

Libby Goodknight, an attorney with Krieg DeVault representing Carmel, said the groups haven’t faced any enforcement in that city, either.

“In four years, these predictions have never come to fruition,” Goodknight said.

Bopp said the cities haven’t enforced the statutes because of this lawsuit.

“They never try to enforce these ordinances after you sue them,” Bopp said. “Yeah, our suit has prevented them from enforcing it against us, and that’s exactly what our intention is—we don’t want these ordinances enforced against us.”

Even if the organizations did violate a statute, lawyers for the state and cities said both are exempt from the regulations because of their religious status.

But Bopp said the two organizations, while they are registered as not-for-profits and have religious beliefs, are not considered religious organizations under Indiana law because engaging in religious activity is not their primary purpose.

Goodknight also mentioned that both organizations would be exempt from the ordinance because they do not have six or more employees.

“Plaintiffs can’t sue to have a law overturned just because they don’t like it,” said.

Bopp said the groups don't want to strike down the local ordinances, but they don't want to be forced to follow government mandates that go against their religious beliefs.

"We do agree that the government has a general interest in protecting people from discrimination," Bopp said.

Hamilton County Superior Court Judge Michael Casati did not issue a ruling immediately following the hearing.

High cost of insulin endangers lives, diabetics tell legislative panel

INDIANAPOLIS—A legislative study committee heard from Type 1 diabetics who described their daily struggles with pharmaceutical companies, insurance agencies and the healthcare system to get the insulin they need to stay alive.

Sa’Ra Skipper testified that she lived off samples and donations of insulin that she shared with her younger sister, also a Type 1 diabetic, for years.

Sa’Ra Skipper speaks about her struggles to afford insulin for her Type 1 diabetes while Taya Keeler listened nearby during the Interim Study Committee on Public Health, Behavioral Health, and Human Services meeting Tuesday. Photo by Brandon Barger, TheStatehouseFile.com

“It’s so frustrating to me the person who is actually working a full-time job with insurance and I am not able to afford what I need because it’s a thousand dollars and I know it’s not my fault,” Skipper said. “I feel like I am being failed.”

Skipper was among the witnesses who testified Wednesday before the Interim Study Committee on Public Health, Behavioral Health and Human Services, which is examining rising prescription drug costs and what lawmakers can do about it.

The committee also heard from lobbyists, pharmaceutical companies and doctors as well as patients who shared testimony and data to explain the rise in prescription medication prices, who gets that money and how it affects the people who need the drugs.

Executives from Indiana-based Eli Lilly and Company, a leading producer of insulin, talked about how they have programs designed to reduce overall costs of diabetes medications for their consumers.

The company has offered different programs such as automatic discounts, rebates and an out-of-pocket cap for Medicaid Part D consumers.

"This is an incredibly important topic for all of us," said John Steel, senior director of Lilly Diabetes Corporate Affairs. "We want to make sure that everyone who needs insulin has it."

But these programs don't reach as many consumers as Hope Charters would like. She is a Type 1 diabetic.

"We appreciate what Lilly is trying to do but it's almost like too little too late and it feels like such a PR move," Charters said. "Like it takes five to seven dollars to manufacture and provide insulin why are they still charging like $135 for a half-priced vial."

Charters has struggled with Type 1 diabetes since she was 15. Soon after she was diagnosed, her father lost his job and his insurance coverage. He had been injured on the job and could have fought for disability payments, but instead settled with the company so his daughter could get six more months of insurance coverage.

"For years, we had to beg clinics for free samples of two different types of insulins," she wrote in a statement to the committee. "We did not qualify for any patient assistance programs through the pharmaceutical manufacturers. My mom had to ignore utility bills and rent occasionally in order to pay for my insulin when no free samples were available."

Harry Rybolt is not only a Type 1 diabetic who struggles every day, but he lost his 39-year-old son, also a diabetic, in August because he was taking a "cheaper" option which put him into a diabetic coma which ultimately led to his death.

"This stuff has got to stop," Rybolt said. "Something has got to be done where people who need it can get it no matter the cost because it is a fatal choice."

The committee also heard from Colleen Becker, a policy specialist for the National Conference of State Legislatures, who gave examples of how other states are tackling the problem. Bills passed in 2019 in Louisiana, Maine and Minnesota have transparency requirements and language to ensure the best interest of clients is considered.

Also in attendance was Antonio Ciaccia, of 3 Axis Advisors, who conducted a study through the 46Brooklyn project to figure out why prescription medication prices were so high. 3 Axis Advisors is an Ohio consulting company that advises government and businesses on many issues, including prescription drug prices.

He also spoke about the issue of Pharmacy Benefit Managers (PBMs) and how the problem has resulted, in part, because from 75 percent of those enterprises are handled by three companies.

The lack of competition allows for them to raise prices and underpay pharmacies, Ciaccia said.

Rep. Robin Shackleford, D-Indianapolis, said in a news release after the meeting that she plans to push for legislation to control the cost of prescription medications, noting that drug costs rose nearly 58 percent in Indiana from 2012 to 2017.

"This is not a one-sided problem and we have to take into account the consumers, manufacturing companies, insurance plans, pharmacists, and pharmacy benefit managers when crafting policy changes," she said.

Mobile sports wagering begins in Indiana

INDIANAPOLIS—Sports betting in Indiana officially expanded Thursday to mobile devices, allowing gamblers to wager on their favorite teams on their cells phones.

The Indiana Gaming Commission put rules in place that allow casinos running sports bookmaking operations to accept wagers via mobile devices.

The U.S. Supreme Court cleared the way for states like Indiana to allow betting on college and professional sports when, in May 2018, it struck down a 1992 law that had barred sports wagering in most states. After that ruling, individual states began legalizing betting on sports.

Indiana legalized sports wagering in the 2019 legislative session and Gov. Eric Holcomb signed House Enrolled Act 1015 into law in May. Thirteen casinos began to operate their own sports books on or after Sept. 1. Now, Hoosiers can bet on the Fighting Irish at Notre Dame or the Indianapolis Colts on their phones and desktops as mobile betting apps are becoming more widely available.

Mobile betting operations will be run through apps that are linked to Indiana's casinos. Currently, only two are active—DraftKings Sportsbook licensed with Ameristar East Chicago and BetRivers licensed by French Lick Casino.

Indiana is currently the only state in the region to have a mobile sports betting operation. Dustin Gouker, the lead analyst for PlayIndiana.com, said that while Illinois has legalized sports wagering, there are no mobile options. Michigan, Kentucky and Ohio are exploring betting options.

PlayIndiana.com, in a news release, said Thursday that Indiana could generate substantial profits if neighboring states don't expand their sports betting options.

"The state's best-case scenario is to generate nearly $400 million in annual revenue from a handle of close to $6 billion if neighboring states such as Ohio and Kentucky do not legalize sports betting," PlayIndiana.com reported.

But the Indiana Gaming Commission is more cautious, citing a study by Eilers and Krejcie Gaming which estimated that with mobile wagering, the state could see $256.1 million in revenue by year five of all wagering on sports.

Gouker said many bets, whether made at casinos or on mobile devices, will be placed on National Football League teams.

"Football is number one in the United States in terms of how much is bet," he said.

Jennifer Roberts, associate director at the University of Nevada-Las Vegas's International Gaming Institute, has seen how sports betting has worked in her state.

"When you look at what happened in Nevada for the several decades we've had sports betting," Roberts said. "It's always been an amenity to other forms of betting."

She said that sports betting in Nevada is not as profitable as other forms of gambling, like blackjack or roulette, because it is a low margin way of betting, which means that although it brings in a lot of money, it also pays out a lot to people who bet.

Local production bakery plans $25M expansion, 50 new hires

An Indianapolis-based commercial bakery plans to spend $25 million to expand operations and hire 50 employees for its facility near Indianapolis International Airport.

CraftMark Bakery LLC, 5202 Exploration Drive, expects to spend about $5 million to convert a warehouse into production space and another $20 million on new equipment, the company says in a tax-abatement request to the city's Metropolitan Development Commission.

CraftMark is the baked goods supplier for more than 70,000 restaurants in North America, including Subway, one of its largest clients. Its products include frozen cookie and bread doughs, premade frozen batters and ready-to-eat flatbread.

Founded in 2014, CraftMark employs about 300 people at its nearly 340,000-square-foot facility at the AmeriPlex business park, adjacent to the airport.

Craftmark is seeking two separate seven-year tax abatements as it looks to create a 20,000-square-foot addition to its pre-baked cookie production area as it looks to take on a larger chunk of the national market.

Both abatements would be phased, starting with a 100-percent abatement in the first year and diminishing in subsequent years.

The abatement for the personal property—new equipment—would allow the company to save 31%, or $528,946. It would pay about $1.2 million in personal property taxes on the new equipment over the seven-year term of the abatement, in addition to the $255,349 it already pays annually. After the personal property abatement ends, it would see an increase of $195,756 to its annual taxes.

Separately, Craftmark is looking to save about 9%, or $47,450, with an abatement on its real property improvements. The company would still pay $523,505 during the seven-year abatement, along with the existing annual total of $415,913. When the abatement expires, the firm would pay an additional $81,565 each year on the improvements.

The incentive requests aren't the first CraftMark has made to the city. In 2017, the company reached an abatement agreement on $32 million in investment. That was part of a massive \$56 million project that included a 118,000-square-foot expansion to the building and a commitment to employ at least 396 people by the end of 2020.

The company said the incentives will help it hire 50 workers making average pay of $19.06 per hour and retain 396 workers making average pay of $24.90 per hour.

The 50 hires CraftMark plans to make through the new expansion would put the company at 446 employees by the end of 2022.

The company also received abatements in 2014 tied to a $75 million initial investment to construct a building and start operations.

The abatements received preliminary approval from the MDC on Wednesday and are expected to be heard for confirmation by the same group before the end of the month.

CraftMark representatives did not immediately respond to a call requesting comment Thursday.

INDIANA LEGISLATIVE INSIGHT

Industry sees forest through trees

Hurt from China tariffs also poses opportunity for the hardwoods trade

A new Indiana hardwoods industry strategic plan released in February aimed at expanding timber production has taken a major hit from the trade war and attendant tariffs.

An economic development strategy commissioned by the Department of Natural Resources, the Indiana Hardwood Lumbermen's Association and the Indiana State Department of Agriculture and assembled by DJ Case & Associates, Purdue Center for Regional Development, Purdue University Department of Forestry and Natural Resources, and Purdue Extension called for increasing efficiency in timber production, expanding current production, and attracting new facilities to Indiana.

Indiana has an advantage in hardwood and plywood manufacturing, engineered wood manufacturing, truss manufacturing, and almost all wood furniture compared to the rest of the nation, according to testimony Wednesday by Jeff Cummins of the Indiana State Department of Agriculture to the Interim Study Committee on Agriculture and Natural Resources.

However, the Hoosier hardwood product industry - which has an annual overall economic impact of $10.4 billion and supports more than 70,000 jobs through the 3,000+ Hoosier businesses connected to the hardwoods and forest products sectors, according to ISDA and the new strategy - is hurting as a result of China tariffs, upending plans for an import substitution strategy to meet what had been excess demand and re-capture some supply chain leakage.

Indiana exported $268 million worth of hardwood products in 2017, the highest amount since 2004, and China was the principal player. In 2017, China purchased 75% of Indiana's exported logs, and more than two-thirds of the value. The destination of logs exported remained dominated by China at 84% in 2018 according to DNR data. Indiana shipped logs to 29 different countries in 2018 and China accounted for 60% of those exports in total value (next was Vietnam at just seven percent). Almost 45% of the value of Hoosier lumber exports in 2017 was derived from sales to China, rising to 49% in 2018 (Canada was second with 17% of total lumber export value).

Indiana Log Exports by Country Destination in U.S.

Country	2015	2016	2017
World Total	$25,582,120	$32,158,310	$37,355,618
China	$15,014,522	$21,850,169	$25,413,877

Indiana Lumber Exports by Country Destination in U.S.

Country	2015	2016	2017
World total	$55,071,923	$57,130,909	$57,315,561
China	$16,178,568	$18,508,123	$25,484,595

As the Wall Street Journal noted last week, "The big bet that U.S. hardwood lumber companies placed on China over the past two decades is collapsing. China was a savior of sorts for the industry after the financial crisis last decade. Customers there kept buying oak and ash boards in large quantities, while construction and furniture production fell in the U.S. Now, after Beijing placed retaliatory tariffs of up to 25% on imports of lumber and other U.S. wood products, exports of hardwood lumber to China have fallen 40% this year."

An ounce of protection

AG questions Mears pot prosecution policy

Ryan Mears (D), Marion County's interim prosecutor, announced that his office will, as a matter of policy, no longer prosecute simple possession cases involving less than one ounce of marijuana (what you could mail for the cost of a forever stamp), and his caucus opponent for a full term says if he wins, he will not immediately undo the policy.

Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) was not pleased. "I respect and support the fact that prosecutors have absolute discretion in deciding when to file criminal charges and how to allocate their resources," the former Elkhart County prosecutor began a statement. "Typically, though, prosecutors carefully exercise this discretion on a case-by-case basis rather than proclaiming that in all cases they will ignore a particular state law not to their liking. I am concerned that this proclamation in Marion County will attract to Indianapolis people with a particular interest in communities where drug enforcement is lax. It seems to me a curious strategy to put out a welcome mat for lawbreakers in a community already facing challenges related to crime, homelessness and other social problems stemming from drug abuse."

Sen. Karen Tallian (D), an AG hopeful, called the Mears move "an issue of criminal justice and racial equality." We told you last week she plans 2020 decriminalization legislation.

Indeed, a July report from the Department of Natural Resources, 2019 Indiana Forest Products Price Report and Trend Analysis, highlights the problem, which only included several weeks of experience after the President raised the tariff on some Chinese goods to 25% on May 10 and China retaliated.

“Indiana’s export of hardwood products continue to be an important part of overall hardwood sales. According to data from the U.S. Census Bureau, log exports declined, primarily to Asia and China specifically, likely due to tariffs imposed as part of U.S.-China trade dispute.”

The DNR mid-year report on the hardwood market finds it “unsettled” for “ash, cherry, walnut, and, most importantly, red oak. By no coincidence, these are the species that had become most dependent on Chinese business, with sales volumes contracting by more than 50% from the peak levels of 2017 and early 2018. Exporters to China are trying, in effect, to push large volumes of these species into a market that does not need much of these species. As a result, reports of highly distressed pricing are now commonplace for orders destined for China,” and this comes at a time when “Domestic demand for grade lumber is flat, overall”

The DNR report also finds that “China’s appetite for red oak is greatly diminished White oak lumber exports fell in May and were down 15% year-to-date, due mostly to lower Chinese purchasing At present, Chinese demand for U.S. hardwoods – including ash – is low. Combined ash shipments to the next 10 largest export destinations were up 19% on the year through May, but China still consumes nearly three times as much as all of those countries combined. Ash lumber exports were down 20% year-over-year through May, thanks to a 31% decline from China Trends in ash sales tend to parallel China’s market performance because China is the leading market destination for the species Hickory exports have trended higher in 2019, reaching an 18-month high in May after trending lower much of last year. Year-over-year shipments to Mexico and China, the two largest markets, were down year-over-year through May 2019”

With export trade to our largest hardwood partner, China, stymied by the trade war, it’s important to look back at the new strategy’s domestic component. Indiana exported $268 million worth of hardwood products in 2017, the highest amount since 2004, yet Hoosier businesses imported more than $230 million of hardwood products from outside Indiana, and the plan for growth looked toward recapturing some of that local market. However, even that potential area for growth has seen recent contraction as the Indiana (and Midwestern) economy has slowed, making it less likely in the short-term that a refocused domestic focus can compensate for the Chinese export shortfall ... and an industry assessment had also suggested that boosting exports to other markets, would require support from an additional intermodal terminal between Indianapolis and the Ohio River, something that has not apparently made it onto the drawing board.

While public accounts of the impact of the trade war on Indiana’s economy have largely been centered upon the hard-goods manufacturing and agricultural sectors, the tariffs on China in particular have hit the Indiana hardwoods industry as it was at a crossroads, looking to expand upon its success with the help of a closer partnership with the State.

Rather than working to expand its impact and boost exports, the industry, which was likely to hit almost $400 million in annual state and local taxes paid by the end of this decade, now finds itself struggling to survive due to policy circumstances beyond its control, exacerbated by a strange 2019 weather system that negatively impacted growth of certain forest species.

Ray Moistner, executive director of the Indiana Hardwood Lumbermen’s Association, acknowledges that this issue is complex, explaining that while his industry is resilient and accustomed to market fluctuations, “The difference here is that most of those fluctuations are driven by economic swings. He reminds us that around 2009-11, for example, his members were pummeled by simultaneous hits to two of their biggest drivers – housing and furniture – with housing collapsing while furniture companies moved offshore. “At that time, the huge appetite from China saved us from disaster, and companies began exporting and cultivating customers over there. We were addressing growing concerns with fair trade, but they kept buying and buying hardwoods, mostly to serve their own rapidly growing consumer base,” recalls Moistner, who draws upon three decades industry experience for his comparisons.

This time around, Moistner notes, “although we were still working through those trade concerns, the U.S. hardwood industry enjoyed a $2.5 billion trade surplus with China when the tariffs went into effect. That makes it tough to swallow when the market interruption is tariff-driven and not market-driven. By and large, we supported the efforts to force China to comply with fair trade practices, but the length of this dispute is now forcing companies to find new markets and fight for survival.”

However, the industry veteran also sees opportunity, suggesting that circumstances open the door for more domestic manufacturing to return to Indiana, “where hardwoods enjoy the benefits of vertical integration. We grow some of the best trees in the world here; we harvest them here; we mill them into lumber and veneer here and most importantly, we add a layer of secondary manufacturing here that makes the economic impact of hardwoods go through the roof. Indiana has a huge base of cabinet, flooring, caskets, recreational vehicles and furniture manufacturing right here in our state.” Moistner suggests that “That’s why we are Indiana’s largest agricultural industry and one of the largest manufacturing sectors. Replacing $2 billion in annual sales with new customers doesn’t happen overnight,” he concedes, “but we have the manufacturing infrastructure and we are open for business. 70,000 jobs depend on it.”

Keep an eye on what steps the State might take to help this industry move forward under changed circumstances ... and how it might leverage the situation to promote reshoring – presumably one of the matters addressed by the Governor and the Indiana Economic Development Corporation in last month’s economic development mission to – yes – China.

IN Politics

Federal Office Races . . .

● Joe Mackey (D) of Lafayette, a retired Caterpillar worker who finished third in a seven-candidate field in the 2018 CD 04 Democratic primary for what was then an open seat, becomes the first candidate to seek the nod to oppose U.S. Rep. Jim Baird (R).

● In a last-minute end of quarter fundraising appeal in CD 06, the campaign of U.S. Rep. Greg Pence (R) tells supporters, “As Democrats become increasingly radicalized ahead of 2020, Greg is holding the line for our shared priorities. Major Democratic presidential candidates are pushing a socialist agenda that includes trillion-dollar plans to ‘save the environment,’ a government takeover of healthcare, and calls for mandatory gun buybacks that amount to the end of the Second Amendment in America. Needless to say, Greg is prepared to fight harder than ever before to preserve American values against these dangerous attacks from leftist politicians in Washington.”

● Nai Collymore-Henry moves from Massachusetts where she has been working for several business and civic associations to join the open seat CD 05 campaign of former Rep. Christina Hale (D) as finance director – the same post she held for now-U.S. Rep. Ayanna Pressley (D-MA) when she was a member of the Boston City Council three years ago . . . Team Hale touts her “first big endorsement of the campaign,” from BOLD PAC, “an organization dedicated to increasing Hispanic representation and leadership in Congress. As a Cuban-American, Christina is proud and honored to have received their early endorsement” . . . as Beth Henderson (R) edges closer to being the Hoosier Henderson more likely to make the CD 05 race, we’re hearing that her interest may be more in the nature of testing the waters for a 2022 open state senate seat run . . . Dr. Chuck Dietzen (R) finally opted to reveal himself to the CD 05 world as a candidate Thursday afternoon, and he’s said to have been picking up a lot of big-name social conservative support before he jumped in, and some of the names – including one top former state party and another former high-ranking national party name – happen to be part of the Pence camp. While Dr. Chuck would seem to be able to raise cash from a disparate set of sectors (especially with the help of some of the names we’ve heard and consultants we’ve mentioned), there are also signs pointing to him self-funding the jump-start (perhaps to allow him to control how his candidacy launches and is defined, which has worked for him to date, save in the pages of your favorite newsletter) . . . the Trump drama probably means more in the CD 05 GOP primary than in any other district in the state, and the longer that some (we’re looking at you, Dr. Chuck) can avoid weighing in, the better for them, because they won’t antagonize wither pro-Trump voters or anti-Trumpers, and if they wait long enough, it may be clear which side is the best to perch upon politically for both the primary and general election (or it may be a moot point).

● Former Sen. Brent Waltz (R) files his October Quarterly campaign finance report with the Federal Election Commission disclosing that he continues to owe himself $120,844 from loans that he made to his unsuccessful 2016 CD 09 primary campaign . . . and the October quarterly report filed by Jonathan Lamb (R) in CD 06 shows that he continues to carry a $250,000 balance on loans that he made to his own unsuccessful 2018 primary campaign.

IN the Presidential Race . . .

● South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D) rolls out the big guns, turning to his mother Back Home in South Bend for an end-of-quarter email fundraising solicitation, and she helped him raise more than $19.1 million during the third quarter, down from the eye-popping $24.9 million he raked in during the second quarter of 2019 (but an increase of some 182,000 new contributors since Q2, bringing his total individual unique donor pool to more than 580,000 individual supporters who can keep being tapped), and below the $25.3 million brought in by U.S. Sen. Bernie Sanders (D-VT) during the quarter. Ironically, the youngest and oldest candidates have topped the Q3 cash contest among those who have released numbers, but they both have also seemed to lose ground in polls. the Buttigieg bucks top the $15.2 million raised by former vice president Joe Biden (D); more than double the prowess of U.S. Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA), who raised $11.6 million during the quarter; bests the $10 million of Andrew Yang (D); more than triples the $6 million posted by U.S. Sen. Cory Booker (D-NJ), who made a special end-of-quarter appeal for funds to keep his candidacy alive; and is more than five times the $3.1 million haul of Marianne Williamson (D), sans the help of crystals. The Buttigieg booty tallies $51 million+ since the start of 2019, a number no one would have predicted entering the year, particularly given that, unlike most of his top-tier opponents, he had no active federal campaign account from which to transfer cash from other federal office runs. There was no indication from the campaign as to cash on hand, which would tell us about the burn rate . . . Bloomberg sees hizzoner “positioning himself to be the standard-bearer for moderate Democrats if the front-runner fades,” now “pitching himself as an alternative to moderate Democrats who might not be sold on Joe Biden.” On his current Iowa bus tour, Mayor Pete seems to reframe his case, “emphasizing the need to ‘re-center our politics’ and recapture the notion of freedom and faith from conservatives who he says use those terms to ‘club people over the head.’ That message could find a new audience as Biden, the leading moderate, is tangled in the impeachment inquiry of Trump” . . . St. Joseph County Election Administrator Arielle Brandy is the new Buttigieg Indiana state director. A South Bend native and Indiana State University alum, the Afro-Latina activist and community organizer was the CD 02 regional field director for the Indiana Democratic Party’s 2016 coordinated campaign. Indiana’s 2016 May primary was still relevant on both sides. As for that first state on the list, Team Pete picks up ex-Gillibrand Iowa caucus director Casey Clemmons, and taps him for the role of deputy state director for Iowa as the cash-flush Buttigieg campaign launches what the New York Times describes as “a massive ground game” in the Hawkeye State . . . ahead of a Thursday Buttigieg South Bend stop to open his local HQ and introduce Brandy, Indiana Republican Party Chair Kyle Hupfer called on Buttigieg “to stick around South Bend a little longer and to address the city’s rising crime,” as the state GOP phrases it. “As homicides and aggravated assaults continue to rise in South Bend, the city needs a leader,” said Hupfer. “And sadly right now, it’s clear that [he] is dodging the responsibilities of being that leader. The people of South Bend care about the safety of their own neighborhoods – not baseless impeachment inquiries, and certainly not Buttigieg’s latest celebrity endorsement. They need someone who will work toward real solutions for their city on crime, and Buttigieg’s priorities are clearly elsewhere.”

□ Mayor Pete remains in fifth place with five percent, unchanged in rank and percentage – for a third consecutive week – in the latest Morning Consult poll of all Democratic primary and caucus voters nationally, and is up one point, breaking a three-way tie for fourth from one week earlier with U.S. Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) and Need to Impeach leader Tom Steyer (D) among Democratic primary and caucus voters in Iowa, New Hampshire, South Carolina, and Nevada. Mayor Pete grabs sole possession of fourth with seven percent . . . a late September College Reaction/Axios presidential poll among “a representative sample of 586 college students,” – that includes President Donald Trump (R) as a choice – with a margin of error of four percentage points finds Mayor Pete, the candidate closest to college-age, in sixth place with 6.5% (fifth among Democratic hopefuls), trailing the President, Sens. Warren and Sanders, Biden, and Yang, and down by 3.9 points from July . . . a new Winthrop University poll of Democratic RVs in South Carolina finds Buttigieg running fifth with four percent, largely due to zero percent backing (sixth place) from SC’s African American Demo voters offsetting his third place 10% prowess among white Palmetto State Demo RVs . . . the latest Monmouth University Poll shows Buttigieg tied for fourth with five percent among early-state Democrats (up from four percent in June and August), and in sole possession of fourth place among Democrats in other states with six percent,

● Last week may have featured the first “official” Democratic acknowledgment of the possibility that the opposition party nominee may not end up running against President Donald Trump (R). In a New Hampshire stump speech, U.S. Sen. Bernie Sanders (D-VT) told a First State crowd that, “[G]iven the impeachment process that is now taking place, if it’s not Trump (who is the nominee), we’re gonna beat Mike Pence more – even worse. So I don’t know who the Republicans will bring forth, but whoever it is, we’re gonna beat them.”

IN Other Political News . . .

● Playing the role of former vice president Joe Biden (D) in the season premiere Saturday Night Live Democratic debate skit on September 27: actor Woody Harrelson. The irony: Harrelson and Vice President Mike Pence (R) – whom Pence succeeded in office, had two years of overlapped tenure at their alma mater, Hanover College (Harrelson said years ago that the two were friends back in their college days in the early 1980s).

● Circle City Republicans are shaking their respective heads over Marion County’s interim prosecutor, a few days before he faces a tough challenge in a Democratic caucus selecting who will fill the remaining three years of the term, effectively decriminalizing the possession of a joint, a big issue in the county’s African American community . . . and an announcement by IndyGo that new Red Line commuter bus service will remain free for almost six weeks beyond the initial free trial, through a period ending just a few days after election day (without an attendant announcement about what IndyGo is doing to pursue damages from the contractor late in providing workable ticket-vending technology).

● Hoosier Republicans at the state and local levels are fighting back against the impeachment inquiry using social media, and references to coups, socialism, and overturning election results have popped up.

□ An Indiana Republican Party “Presidential Harassment” Facebook post tells Hoosiers that “Nancy Pelosi and her socialist-leaning Democrat allies have noticed the positive trajectory of the our country – more than 6.3 million new jobs, unemployment at historic lows, strong wage growth and lower taxes – and they need a distraction. And so they’re trying to impeach President Donald Trump.”

□ The Vanderburgh County Republican Party cautions voters in Southwestern Indiana to “Think National Act Local. The Socialist Democrats are at it again. Impeach Trump screams the liberal media. Cries for impeachment would normally be concerning. However we’ve heard the same gnashing of teeth day after day, year after year, since Hillary lost to the ‘basket of deplorables’ in 2016. The Socialist Democrats have been trying desperately to orchestrate a ‘soft’ coup for three years. They’ve tried everything from Russian collusion to Stormy Daniels, to Trump hangs his toilet paper in the wrong direction. The latest allegations that call for ‘Impeachment?’ will once again prove to be nothing more than Socialist Democrats in congress and their comrades in the media trying to overturn YOUR decision in the last Presidential Election. Impeachment is also their only option for beating Trump in 2020. All politics is local so they say, yet the local parties are the foundation for what we see on the national stage. It does matter that Republicans control local offices. It’s about more than local budgets, projects, roads, etc... It is also about the national conversation. To vote Democrat in the upcoming election is to give a wink and a nod to the charade taking place in Washington.”

● The Montana Department of Commerce issued a warning about “surveys” sent by the Republican National Committee that carry the livery of official census forms, but are designed to raise money for the President’s reelection campaign . . . and similar oversized “2019 Congressional District Census” missives landed in mailboxes across Indiana in late September as well, with multiple (capitalized and sometimes boldface) references to the “Census” and “Census Document.” At least one Indiana mailer we saw included a cover letter signed by RNC Chair Ronna McDaniel, informing the recipient that “President Trump has requested that a Census of every congressional district be conducted immediately.”

□ The Washington Post notes “The potentially misleading mailings come as the U.S. Census Bureau is preparing for what’s expected to be one of the most challenging federal counts in decades. The bureau is grappling with factors like a switch to digital and the fallout from the Trump administration’s efforts to add a citizenship question to the survey.”

IN Brief

IN Federal Circles . . .

● U.S. Sens. Todd Young (R) and Mike Braun (R), joined by nine of their Republican colleagues, file S.2950, a measure to enforce guidelines for the dignified handling of aborted fetal remains and impose penalties for failing to respect the sanctity of human life. The “Dignity for Aborted Children Act” is based upon Indiana’s 2016 law to protect the dignity of fetal remains, upheld this year by the Supreme Court of the United States.

□ The bill was prompted by the discovery of more than 2,200 aborted fetal remains on the Illinois property of a deceased Indiana abortion doctor. S.2950 would require abortion providers dispose of the remains of unborn children just as any other human being. Failure to do so would be punishable by a fine and up to five years in prison. A consent form would also be required so the mother can choose to retain possession of her unborn child or allow the provider to cremate or inter the unborn child. Failure of the provider to execute these forms is punishable by civil penalty.

□ “I will always fight to protect innocent life and ensure all children are treated with dignity,” said Sen. Young. “The recent discovery of over 2,200 fetal remains in the home of an Indiana abortionist proves there is a deeply disturbing problem with our current system. That’s why I joined a group of Senators to introduce the Dignity for Aborted Children Act to ensure the bodies of the unborn are treated with respect.” “The discovery of thousands of fetal remains in an Indiana abortionist’s home horrified every American who respects the sanctity of life, and highlighted a disturbing trend that Indiana has taken the lead in rectifying,” adds Sen. Braun. “All human remains, regardless of stage of life, deserve to be treated with dignity and respect, and I’m proud to introduce the Dignity for Aborted Children Act to ensure that grotesque collections like Dr. Klopfer’s can’t be allowed to happen ever again.”

● U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) takes to the editorial pages of the Muncie Star Press to author an op-ed defending Albany’s AquaBounty Technologies, a producer of genetically engineered salmon from a provision in an agriculture appropriations bill that would prohibit the commercialization of genetically engineered salmon and cause the company to cease production immediately, euthanize 160,000 fish currently maturing in Albany, and put Hoosiers out of work after a major capital investment in Indiana by the company. While he blames “the federal government – for no discernable reason other than to protect the current market leaders” for the move, we’ve told you that the provision in question is being aggressively advanced by one of Sen. Young’s majority colleagues, U.S. Sen. Lisa Murkowski (R-AK) to help the Alaskan salmon industry which “wants to shut down competition, though, and has fought back” (thinking back to the 1996 Indiana gubernatorial race, we can envision the TV spot now: “Lisa Murkowski: Bad for Fish, Bad for Indiana.”). Sen. Young says that if the measure passes, “Dozens of Hoosiers would be out of a job. The operation would be moved to another country – likely China – which sees the incredible value in dominating agriculture innovation. And the young dreamers and doers across America who are investing in ag technology will suddenly have to wonder whether their effort and investment is truly worth it.” He continues, “If one legacy industry can manipulate Congress to unilaterally kill one innovative company, how free is our free market? I’m doing everything I can to keep this provision out of our funding bills to protect innovation and ensure the free market is allowed to operate” . . . Sen. Young, a member of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, released a statement after Saudi Arabia transferred $500 million to United Nations for humanitarian programs for Yemen: “During my recent trip to Saudi Arabia, I met with Saudi leaders and received assurances they would soon provide the financial aid they had committed to help end the humanitarian crisis in Yemen,” said Sen. Young. “I’m pleased Saudi Arabia is fulfilling that commitment with their official transfer of $500 million to the UN, and I thank them for doing so. We will continue to monitor the situation to ensure this assistance is properly administered to help end the suffering of the Yemeni people.” We had told you last month that Sen. Young and U.S. Sen. Chris Murphy (D-CT) led a bipartisan cadre of eight senators in calling on Saudi Arabian Crown Prince Mohammad bin Salman to fulfil the Kingdom’s full commitment of $750 million to the United Nations to help fund critical programs aimed at alleviating the humanitarian crisis in Yemen.

- U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) was one of only 16 senators to vote against H.R. 4378 on September 26, the continuing resolution to fund federal agencies and extend several health care-related programs for FY 2020 through November 21. The President quickly signed the bipartisan resolution that affords the White House and Congress another 51 days to reach a longer-term appropriations agreement to avoid another partial government shutdown. Senate Committee on Appropriations Chair Richard Shelby (R-AL) told the Washington Post Wednesday that Congress could perhaps just keep passing short-term spending bills if House Democrats and the President cannot agree on 2020 spending priorities, and if that transpires it will be interesting to see if Sen. Braun continues to oppose the measures, or if more of his colleagues join him in the effort . . . Sen. Braun takes to Facebook in the last week of September to talk impeachment, observing that “Democrats have baselessly attacked President Trump since before he was elected. Let’s show the President that Hoosiers won’t fall for liberal political games” . . . inspired by Hoosier Laura McLinn and her fight for drug and treatment access for her young son Jordan, a ubiquitous fire-helmeted State House presence in recent years, Sen. Braun penned an op-ed for Modern Healthcare calling on Congress to hasten what he describes as its “quicksand pace” in finding a middle-ground solution on drug access, and proposing a solution that would provide wider access to more drugs for less without sacrificing safety for American patients. “In the business world,” he writes, “those who are slow to act and adapt find themselves out of business in a hurry. In Washington, it can take 10 years to get even a good idea across the finish line. But when it comes to the soaring drug prices, lack of access to meaningful treatments and drug shortages, D.C.’s quicksand pace isn’t just frustrating—it can be deadly.” The “ADAPT Act” which Sen. Braun advocates would amend the Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act to create an accelerated approval pathway to act as a “passing lane” for prescription drugs that have already been approved for sale in other developed countries with a positive history of clinical trials and available data such as Canada and Great Britain.

- A bipartisan letter sent September 27 to the President signed by 173 members of Congress, asking him to work urgently toward the safe return of veteran U.S. Marine Corps captain and award-winning journalist Austin Tice, who has been held in Syria for seven years, was signed by only two Hoosiers: U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) and U.S. Rep. Pete Visclosky (D).

□ “Congress remains united in our commitment to supporting any and all constructive efforts to bring Austin home to his family,” said the letter, organized by U.S. Sens. John Cornyn (R-TX) and Patty Murray (D-WA), and by U.S. Reps. Eliot Engel (D-NY), Michael McCaul (R-TX) and Al Green (D-TX). The letter was part of a campaign on Tice’s behalf, led by the National Press Club Journalism Institute and Reporters Without Borders.

- U.S. Rep. Jackie Walorski (R), assisted by U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R), led 65 of their House Republican colleagues in calling on the U.S. Department of Justice to provide any assistance requested by state authorities in investigating the discovery of human fetal remains on the Illinois property of Indiana abortion doctor Ulrich “George” Klopfer, and to open a separate inquiry if any federal laws were violated. In a letter to U.S. Attorney General William Barr, the members also requested a DOJ review of state laws pertaining to the disposition of human fetal remains. The letter was also signed by the other GOP members of the Indiana House delegation, U.S. Reps. Jim Baird (R), Susan Brooks (R), Larry Bucshon (R), Trey Hollingsworth (R), and Greg Pence (R).

□ “The discovery of more than 2,200 preserved human fetal remains on the property of a man infamously known as Indiana’s most prolific abortionist reveals a callous disregard for the sanctity of human life,” the Walorski-led members wrote. “This case has countless victims – both unborn babies and mothers – and represents a grotesque violation of human dignity that American society should not and cannot tolerate. We urge you to do everything in your power to support the Indiana and Illinois attorneys general in their investigations, and to keep us apprised of any developments.”

- During the final week of September, the U.S. House, on a bipartisan 321 - 103 vote, approved the “Strengthening the Tenth Amendment Through Entrusting States (STATES) Act,” a measure that would allow legal cannabis-related businesses to access the national banking system – and, in turn, help Indiana’s hemp industry, which has faced similar banking restrictions since its local legalization and federal recognition under the FARM bill. Passage came after a bipartisan coalition of 21 attorneys general urged its passage, a cadre that included our neighboring states of Illinois, Kentucky, and Michigan, but not Indiana (nor Ohio, where medical marijuana is legal, and recreational marijuana has been decriminalized).

□ The Indiana congressional delegation was split over passage of H.R. 2093, with both Democrats voting for it, three Republicans also favoring it and four Republicans opposing the measure . . . largely reflecting the divide among all Republicans who voted on the measure (47% favored it; 53% voted against it). Voting for it were U.S. Reps. Jim Baird (R), Jim Banks (R), André Carson (D), Trey Hollingsworth (R), and Pete Visclosky (R). Weighing in against passage were U.S. Reps. Susan Brooks (R), Larry Bucshon (R), Greg Pence (R), and Jackie Walorski (R).

● U.S. Rep. André Carson (D), a senior member of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, appeared live on CNN Monday night with Poppy Harlow to talk about the impeachment inquiry, and told viewers, “I would hope that this president does not act in a way that is reminiscent of a mob figure. And if he sees himself as such, he will be dealt with as such. It means that if he wants to be a gangster, then we’re going to have to uphold the law and treat him like a gangster. He’s already shown that he’s a tyrant.” He added that the House was “making sure that he doesn’t act like a gangster and use the seat of the presidency to continue to intimidate foreign leaders, to blackmail foreign leaders as it relates to the aid that they get from the U.S., to continually pollute all of the agencies and create this very toxic work environment where people are afraid to come forth with whistle-blowing complaints, and members of the cabinet and administration as well are afraid to even challenge the President. That’s a mob mentality and those are certainly traits of a tyrant.” He added, “I think that the whole Trump Administration has become a circus. So if you give them more cameras, you’re going to get more theatrics; you’re going to get more pageantry. We need to get to the facts. The Intel Committee is known to be disciplined, especially under the leadership of Chairman Schiff and ... we have a very talented staff of attorneys and former members of the Intelligence Community. And so those of us who serve as representatives, we take our jobs very seriously. We take our oath very seriously. And so what we want to do is make sure that the identity of the whistleblower is protected and we want to get to the bottom of this. The call is Exhibit A, the complaint is Exhibit B, if you will, and we need a fuller picture of what happened and what is happening. And so those who are concerned Republican, Democrats, urge your representative to do the right thing and put pressure on the Trump administration to cooperate.” As for Rudy Giuliani, “as a former prosecutor and a lawyer, I would expect for Mr. Giuliani to understand this process. I would hope that he would act in a cooperative manner. If he is someone who is truly concerned about the preservation of our democracy and upholding our constitutional rights as members of Congress, he should be willing to cooperate.” However, he added, “Giuliani has a reputation of being a smart man – or he had a reputation of being a smart man. It seems more clear that Mr. Giuliani is impressionable. He’s been hanging around Donald Trump, so he’s flip flopping just like the President. Again, my hope is that Mr. Giuliani will cooperate with the Committee and understand that Chairman Schiff is an accomplished leader, a very thoughtful leader, a fellow prosecutor might I add. And so I think that this is Mr. Giuliani’s time to preserve what’s left of his reputation, and work in a cooperative manner with those of us on the Intel Committee.” On Thursday, Rep. Carson sat down with Dan Spehler of WXIN-TV Fox 59 in Indianapolis, and was asked if he would vote for articles of impeachment if they came on the floor today. “At this point absolutely,” Rep. Carson responded. As for the President’s Thursday remarks from the White House lawn on China and Biden, “For him to openly do this is blatant and it’s disrespectful,” said Rep. Carson.

● U.S. Rep. Trey Hollingsworth (R) asks constituents: “On Tuesday, September 24, House Speaker Nancy Pelosi announced House Democrats’ official impeachment proceedings against the President. Her announcement followed the release of a transcript of a phone call between President Trump and President Zelensky of Ukraine. Question of the Week: Do you support impeachment of President Trump?”

IN State Circles . . .

● House Committee on Education Chair Bob Behning (R) and Rep. Chris Chyung (D) participated in a late September bipartisan educational tour of the Republic of Korea funded by the Office of the Consulate General of Korea in Chicago.

● Rep. Chris Chyung (D) indicates that his 2020 session bill ideas include some concepts not previously found in legislation.

● Local government cybersecurity practices (user awareness training; mandate data backups/patches)

● Lifting restrictions on affordable housing (Indiana has preempted local governments from running programs to expand affordable housing)

● Lowering age limits to run for House and Senate to 18 (27 states have lower age limits than Indiana)

● Flood mitigation plan coverage (Indiana is second to last in the nation according to FEMA)

● Consumer data privacy (opt-out provisions and ability to request data collected on you)

● Even as Hoosier lawmakers have largely overlooked both cybersecurity and data privacy issues over the years – even as the critical mass has seemed to grown acute in the past year or so – Insurance Journal reports that “Cyber risks are the top concern among businesses of all sizes. Of the 1,200 business leaders who participated in an insurer-sponsored survey, 55% said they worry some or a great deal about cyber risks, ahead of medical cost inflation (54%), employee benefit costs (53%), the ability to attract and retain talent (46%) and legal liability (44%).”

□ Keep an eye on the cybersecurity and data privacy front. Not only are both big national issues that have been entirely ignored by the Third Floor, but the importance on the former front grows as authorities try to downplay what is widely rumored to have been a ransomware attack on at least one key supplier of Subaru of Indiana Automotive, Inc. (close geographically to SIA in Tippecanoe County) that forced SIA to shut down two shifts last week. Ironically as well, the Governor proclaimed October as Cybersecurity Awareness Month in Indiana, supporting the national theme for 2019: “Own IT. Secure IT. Protect IT.” The proclamation communicates the importance to all Hoosiers that “maintaining the security of cyberspace is a shared responsibility in which each of us has a critical role to play, and awareness of computer security essentials will improve the security of the State of Indiana’s information, infrastructure and economy.” As we’ve been telling you all year, all long-ignored aspects of cybersecurity and data privacy will have to be addressed by Hoosier lawmakers in the very near future.

● Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) joins the State of Indiana with six other Republican-led states in an amicus brief filed at the end of September asking the Supreme Court of the United States to grant a writ of certiorari in City of Boise v. Martin, et al., No. 19-247. Indiana and the other states want the Supreme Court to overturn a 2018 ruling by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit that bans municipalities from prosecuting homeless people for sleeping on the streets when there is no option for them sleeping indoors. The intermediate appellate panel decided that “the government cannot criminalize indigent, homeless people for sleeping outdoors, on public property, on the false premise they had a choice in the matter.”

□ The brief signed onto by General Hill claims the ruling has infringed on the rights of states under the Tenth Amendment, and that “The Ninth Circuit’s decision has grave implications on the rights of states to enforce their laws putting the health and safety of their residents at risk,” and has “far ranging implications for the states’ criminal justice systems.” The amici argue that “the states have comprehensive rights in fashioning their rules for the betterment of the health, safety, and general welfare of their inhabitants,” and cite “the immediate grave effects of the Ninth Circuit’s decision and the potential for it to upend the states’ ability to create and enforce their most foundational public health and safety laws” as reasons why the justices should review the ruling. While cities such as Indianapolis (and downtown businesses) have concerns about how they can legally address the assorted concerns arising from homeless people living on the streets, General Hill and his colleagues read much more into the Boise ruling.

□ According to the filing, “The inability to enforce these laws has grave consequences, putting states’ residents at risk in rest areas, along highways, and on the grounds of important state structures, such as memorials, universities and capitol buildings. The inability to enforce these laws also poses environmental hazards and hinders the ability of state officials to maintain state infrastructure. Further, the inability to enforce these laws risks decreasing public access to important public buildings. The Ninth Circuit’s decision has also called into question many other criminal laws that democratically elected state lawmakers have deemed necessary to protect public health and safety. Clearly, the Ninth Circuit’s decision implicates laws prohibiting conduct by individuals who are homeless that may be considered ‘biologically compelled,’ such as public urination and defecation, theft of food, water, and clothing to protect against the elements, and public use of drugs and alcohol if the individual is addicted to such substances. But it also calls into question such fundamental prohibitions as laws imposing criminal penalties for murder, child sex abuse, child pornography, domestic violence, stalking, drug use, and rape for any criminal defendant who argues that his conduct was the product of a compulsion. Criminal defendants have recognized this for years,” contending as defenses to criminal charges “that their acts were compelled. But the Ninth Circuit swept these concerns away to constitutionalize an area of state control. Even worse, the Ninth Circuit’s action on this issue is unnecessary – state common laws already address the concerns that underpin the Ninth Circuit’s decision without intruding on states’ rights.”

● Governor Eric Holcomb (R) led a letter late last week to the chair and ranking member of the U.S. Senate Committee on Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee signed by 11 other Republican governors calling on Congress to provide flexibility in the Pell grant program (which would support Indiana’s Next Level Jobs initiative).

● Environment & Energy Publishing, LLC’s E&E News publishes a fascinating detailed report – the first in a series – outlining how an enforcement action against a Dearborn County whiskey distillery by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency Air and Radiation Division in the final full month of the Obama Administration evaporated under pressure from the distillery’s Oklahoma attorney “to EPA Chief of Staff Ryan Jackson, a fellow Oklahoma Republican who’s one of the agency’s longest-serving and most influential political appointees,” and from then-U.S. Rep. Luke Messer (R), whose assistance on behalf of the company included a four-page June 2017 letter to then EPA administrator Scott Pruitt that was more in the form of a legal brief.

□ MGP Ingredients, Inc.’s MGPI of Indiana, LLC was charged by the EPA regional office with having “improperly built air polluting warehouses in a county that at the time failed to comply with smog limits. MGPI took the allegations seriously, warning investors in November 2017 that its failure to apply for a Clean Air Act permit could cost the company at least $100,000 in fines.” Greendale Mayor Alan Weiss (I), “feels federal and state officials let him down – along with the people he represents. Weiss had hoped EPA’s enforcement case would force the company to curb its emissions of ethanol, a volatile organic compound (VOC) that helps create lung-damaging smog, which is also known as ozone pollution. Downwind from the warehouses, Cincinnati is currently violating EPA’s ozone standard. But what really bothers Weiss and people in Greendale is ‘whiskey fungus,’ a type of mold caused by ethanol vapor released during the whiskey aging process. The velvety black Baudoinia compniacensis has unknown human health effects and grows all over Greendale buildings, vehicles and street signs – particularly those closest to the MGPI warehouses. The mayor, a political independent, said he learned of MGPI’s air pollution lobbying campaign only after being contacted by E&E News ‘It really didn’t matter what we wanted,’ Weiss said ‘Nobody was listening to our concerns.’ Recall we told you a while back about the whiskey fungus phenomenon and damage it was causing in Aurora, Greendale, and Lawrenceburg.

□ The Messer letter to EPA’s Pruitt alleged that EPA’s Region V “is overstepping its authority and acting contrary to long-standing EPA policy,” with the “notice of violation to MGPI constituting an action that “will not only cost jobs, but is also legally unjustifiable” He claimed that Region V’s “stance flaunts EPA’s regional consistency guidelines, putting future economic growth in Indiana at risk,” and contended that it was placing Indiana at risk of losing an economic development project across the Ohio River to Kentucky. “Far from an abstract legal violation, Region V’s policy is already beginning to have negative effects on economic growth in Indiana,” Wrote Messer, “which the guidelines are designed to prevent. MGPI wishes to further expand its business, and requires additional aging warehouses. MGPI has identified available warehouse space across the river in Kentucky, under the jurisdiction of EPA’s Region IV. Because Region IV (like every EPA regional office other than Region V) adheres to the agency’s longstanding position with regard to fugitive whiskey emissions, MGPI can age its whiskey there without having to navigate inconsistent regulatory interpretation and enforcement. Unless the position taken by a staff lawyer in Region V is reversed, MGPI will be forced to locate this and perhaps future expansions in Kentucky rather than Indiana. The regional consistency guidelines are meant to avoid just this type of situation where inconsistent regional positions cause economic development to be redirected from one state to another.”

□ MGPI also ultimately paid “a penalty of just $11,250 to the Environmental Management Special Fund under an agreed order reached in August,” reports Mike Perleberg of Eagle Country 99.3-FM in Lawrenceburg. “According to the original notice of violation, the company had failed to abide by EPA rules by constructing and operating the (nine) barrel houses prior to receipt of the proper air permit. Eight of the barrel houses were built 2014-2016 and another was to be constructed in 2018 in Greendale, although the company had not submitted to IDEM a significant source modification. The VOCs in the case are ethanol which emits from barrels which sit by the thousands in warehouses as whiskey inside them ages. Part of the whiskey in each barrel evaporates through the barrel’s wood. The presence of ethanol in the air allows a fungus called baudoinia compniacensis to thrive in areas surrounding a distillery or barrel house. The so-called ‘whiskey fungus’ collects on homes, vehicle, trees and other structures as an unsightly, black, soot-like growth. In all, the warehouses would house more than 439,000 barrels, enough to emit well beyond the permitted limit of 25 tons of ethanol per year. The U.S. EPA decided in 2018 not to pursue the case, instead leaving it to IDEM.”

□ Perleberg explains that “After being called out for the permit violation, MGPI submitted applications to IDEM for the proper permits of the Greendale warehouses in May 2018. The authorization for construction and operation of the warehouses and their VOC emissions was granted last December. IDEM granted MGPI, in April, the necessary permit to begin housing up to 320,000 whiskey barrels at the former Deufol warehouse in Sunman, Indiana. The approval came despite uproar from area citizens about ‘whiskey fungus’ impacting their properties nearby.”

● We’ve long been first to tell you about key developments affecting the Unemployment Insurance Trust Fund – sometimes serving as your early warning system, as we did early in the Daniels Administration. On Thursday, the Interim Study Committee on Employment and Labor discussed the topic with stakeholders, and the Department of Workforce Development confirmed that while Indiana is ahead of schedule on paying off the Trust Fund, our state is near the bottom of the list of states for state Trust Fund solvency.

□ While no recommendations were made at the meeting Thursday, we think that it’s safe to tell you to expect an agreement among key parties to impose a freeze on Schedule E for a five-year period (Schedules run from A – I, with A being the highest revenue, and the fiscal health of the Trust Fund determines which schedule we use, with the state currently on Schedule E). This should help the State build some $1.4 billion in reserves, which both business and organized labor seem to believe is an appropriate target (we are sitting on a about $880 million now; DWD projects hitting a $1.1 billion balance in 2022, which would drop us to a lower schedule).

□ One area still being debated between the stakeholders: the triggers for changing payments if the balance dips too low, or the amount is exceeded.

● While local government units in Lake County and St. Joseph County have long prepared for the fiscal cliff they will experience when the long-delayed property tax caps hit their respective counties in 2020, overlooked is the budget squeeze that many smaller rural communities across the state are experiencing from the caps as they struggle to attract new building and businesses, and assessed valuation fails to increase.

● Effective October 26, the Indiana Health Coverage Programs (IHCP) is amending its reimbursement policy regarding high-risk pregnancy care, as part of a statewide effort to improve health outcomes of mothers and babies.

□ For dates of service on or after October 26, IHCP will reimburse for high-risk pregnancy care (a pregnancy that threatens the health or life of the mother or her fetus and requires specialized care from specially trained providers) when provided by physicians or advanced practice registered nurses. Some pregnancies become high risk as they progress, while some women are at increased risk for complications even before they become pregnant. IHCP does not determine conditions that may or may not complicate a pregnancy, so if the provider determines that an illness or injury could complicate a pregnancy or have an adverse effect on the pregnancy’s outcome, IHCP allows billing for covered services provided to treat the illness or injury. Services must be deemed medically necessary or preventive healthcare services, and provided within the scope of the applicable license and certification. Reimbursement will apply to services rendered under the fee-for-service (FFS) and managed care delivery systems.

● The final numbers are in, and cities and towns learn that a definitional oversight (for lack of a better phrase) in the formula for distributing local road dollars will mean that the City of Indianapolis should enjoy a net gain of about $12 million for road projects in 2020, an increase of some 23% from 2019 levels (the funding apparently cannot be directed toward retroactively paying all of the tire and wheel repair bills the city punted on over the past two pothole seasons). The bottom line will also result in just about every other jurisdiction suffering a loss of some eight percent in their respective long-awaited road repair dollars beginning next year as well.

- Stay tuned for the next report from the Indiana Climate Change Impacts Assessment (IN CCIA) examining The Future of Indiana's Water Resources. This Purdue Climate Change Research Center report is expected to be released later this year during a community briefing in Fort Wayne. Topics to be covered in the report will include expected changes in rainfall, snowfall, soil moisture, stream flow, flooding, and drought.

- In Whole Woman's Health Alliance, et al., v. Hill, et al., No. 1:18-cv-01904-SEB-MJD, the federal court challenge to the failure of the Indiana State Department of Health to license a South Bend abortion clinic, Senior Judge Sarah Evans Barker denies the request by the plaintiffs to add all 91 county prosecutors to this case – even as a class, finding that the effort simply to fend off any possible prosecutions of the clinic during pendency of licensing proceedings would unnecessarily encumber and significantly complicate the proceedings for no good and necessary reason. Judge Barker does add, however, that should the situation change such that any particular county prosecutor decides to file or threatens to file or does file a criminal prosecution against the plaintiffs during the pendency of this litigation, the motion can be renewed, and she will revisit her ruling.

- In the pending legal disciplinary proceeding against Attorney General Curtis Hill (R), attorneys for his two top aides and a law clerk in the Office of the Attorney General file a response to the Supreme Court Disciplinary Commission's motion seeking information from Aaron Negangard and Mary Beth Bonaventura and law student Garrett Bascom. The attorney for the trio seeks to quash the Disciplinary Commission's subpoena, and argues that "the Commission has taken a position contrary to its own practice in this case with this very discovery and with respect to Ms. Blackwell (another hill aide who entered into a separate deal to produce subpoenaed information) and is attempting to justify that with respect to the other three Non-Party Subpoena Recipients, a Protective Order should not issue. The Commission should be consistent and now judicially estopped from treating disparately the information it has requested and receives from the non-parties. The logical conclusion in part that might explain why the Commission is treating the subpoena recipients differently is that Ms. Blackwell did not have privileged communications between herself and Mr. Hill. On the other hand, however, Bonaventura and Negangard regularly engage in privileged communications with Mr. Hill, and because the issue of privilege exists for them and is asserted, the Commission is dissatisfied and choosing to preclude them from the benefit of a Protective Order as it relates to their information and responses. That cannot be the entire rationale, as Garrett Bascom has offered a complete response to the Discovery Request without any claim of privilege, he too is providing his personal information, email and phone information, metadata associated therewith, and the Commission has refused to provide a Protective Order to him notwithstanding that his response is on all fours with Ms. Blackwell's, for whom the Commission agreed to issue a Protective Order. The issuance of the Proposed Order of Protection in no way impairs or impedes the Commission's use of the Discovery responses in its case against Mr. Hill. It simply affords protection to seasoned lawyers and an aspiring lawyer from third parties accessing their information once it is provided to the Commission. The concern for these lawyers and lawyer to be, as the Commission agreed exists as it relates to Ms. Blackwell, is that the information sought in every request involves personal information, including metadata associated with their email accounts and phone service via text messages."

□ Attorney General Hill files an affidavit explaining that he understands the Disciplinary Commission has issued non-party requests for production to Negangard and Judge Bonaventura that include "communications in any format with Curtis T. Hill, Jr., that pertain to the events of the Sine Die party of March 14-15, 2018 and/or the allegations that Hill inappropriately touched four women at the Sine Die party." and that "pertain to the disciplinary investigation and/or disciplinary matter regarding allegations that Hill inappropriately touched four women at the Sine Die party." he affirms to Supreme Court Hearing Officer Myra Selby that "All of my communications to and from Aaron Negangard and Mary Beth Bonaventura that are quoted above were communications made in confidence with two individuals who were and are attorneys employed by the OAG related to the legal interests of the Attorney General of Indiana and the OAG and to obtaining professional legal advice relating to the same." That set of statements may come into play later, because it could be read as potentially relating to mixing official OAG business with Hill's personal affairs.

□ Counsel for the OAG trio also takes the opportunity, in a footnote to his motion to quash, to again deride the Supreme Court Disciplinary Commission for engaging in conduct perhaps best described as unbecoming. "As set forth in the Certification of Counsel the parties did engage in appropriate discussions and exhausted their efforts to resolve the issue of whether an Agreed Protective Order could issue. Notwithstanding that fact, the Commission in its first Response to the moving papers of the Non-Party Subpoena Recipients indicated that the Commission had invited a response from the undersigned that was not forthcoming, which representation did not accurately reflect the sequence of communication. When the undersigned presented the concern that the Commission represented inaccurately the extent of the communications between these parties, the Commission agreed that it did not invite a response that was not forthcoming and filed an Amended Response removing the inaccurate depiction that the undersigned did not respond to a request of the Commission."

- In State of New York, et al., v. Env'tl Protection Agency, No. 19-1019, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit vacates the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's denial of a petition that asked EPA to increase regulation on the amount of smog pollution that emanates from nine states – including Indiana – and drifts into New York and other northeastern states.

□ EPA has informed the appellate court that it may seek rehearing of the decision, as well as a parallel decision issued by the court in September in Wisconsin v. EPA, No. 16-1406.

IN the Economy

- The 2018 Gross State Product of Indiana, $366.7 billion, trailed not only that of 17 other states, but also the Gross Metropolitan Product of 12 U.S. Metro Areas, according to data compiled by IHS Markit (the State Budget Committee's contract economic forecasting firm) for the U.S. Conference of Mayors in its 18th annual report and forecast on U.S. Metro Economies.

□ On the plus side, the $147.0 billion Gross Metropolitan Product for the Indianapolis-Carmel metro in 2018 topped that of 17 states and the District of Columbia.

- New Census Bureau figures show the 2018 annual median household income lags at least $1,000 behind pre-recession levels in Indiana and eight other states, after adjusting for inflation. After adjusting for inflation, Hoosiers are taking home, on average, $1,700 less than they did in 2007. The only other non-coastal or foreign border state among the mix was Michigan.

- The Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago's Midwest Economy Index (MEI) moved up to a negative 0.26 in August from -0.37 in July (which had been the worst in 10 years), edging closer to the negative 0.30 posted in June. This constitutes the fifth consecutive month of negative territory for the Chicago Fed's index of nonfarm business activity in Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, and Wisconsin. The relative MEI decreased to -0.27 in August from -0.06 in June and July. The basic MEI captures both national and regional factors driving Midwest growth, while the relative MEI provides a picture of Midwest growth conditions relative to those of the nation.

□ Four of the five MEI states (all but Iowa) made negative contributions to the index during August, with Indiana's -0.10 (unchanged from July) the largest negative contributor in the region, as it has been in recent months, led by a second consecutive significant monthly decline in contributions by the services sector. We have no logical explanation for this phenomenon. The manufacturing, construction, and consumer sectors were also all down from July; only Michigan experienced a continued decline in each of the four sectors. All four sectors in Indiana were also down over the month in the Relative MEI, something that was not seen in Illinois, Iowa, Michigan, or Wisconsin.

- The 1,531 single-family building permits pulled statewide during August represent a one percent increase from July, but a six percent decrease from the 1,624 permits pulled in August 2018. Single-family permit numbers for January - August 2019 are down by five percent compared to the first eight months of 2018., although builders anticipate starts will continue to rise as we move into the autumn months, affordability concerns aside. August permits had been on an increase in each year since 2015 until 2019.

- Farmers became much more pessimistic about current conditions on their own farms and in the U.S. agricultural economy in late summer, according to the September Purdue University/CME Group Ag Economy Barometer. While the overall Ag Economy Barometer reading dipped only slightly from August, there was what Purdue researchers referred to as "a relatively large sentiment shift among ag producers" as they became noticeably more pessimistic about current conditions on their farms and in the U.S. ag economy - while also being somewhat more optimistic about future economic conditions, both compared to one month earlier. Farmers' outlook toward making large investments such as machinery or buildings also declined in September. Concerns about current economic conditions led producers to be less inclined to think now is a good time to make large investments in their operations as the Farm Capital Investment Index declined by nine points to a reading of 47, 20 points lower than in July. The Farm Capital Investment Index dropped for the second month in a row, down nine points from August, which left it 20 points below the July 2019 reading taken when corn and soybean prices were peaking. Producers' farmland value expectations for both the next 12 months and five years also drifted lower in September.

□ In the September survey, only 21% of producers said they expect profitability to decline over the next year, compared to 41% that expected a profitability decline when the same question was posed back in May, seen by researchers as a potential signal that growers expect better times in 2020 compared to 2019... possibly because they are looking forward to a return to more normal growing conditions and crop production in 2020.

- Brock Turner, who reports on rural issues for Indiana Public Media, finds that "Indiana farmers received nearly $600 million from the United States Department of Agriculture during the first round of payments from the Market Facilitation Program that seeks to minimize the impact of retaliatory tariffs from the Chinese government. More than 35,000 farmers applied for the program last year."

- As EmployIndy touts its programs and impact, it also tells benefactors that "Over the past decade, Indianapolis has seen an 80 percent increase in individuals living in poverty."

- Ivy Tech Community College President Sue Ellspermann testified in late September before the U.S. House Committee on Science, Space, and Technology, discussing the effects of machine learning and artificial intelligence on how community colleges and vocational schools educate and train the workforce.

- The Indianapolis-based Indiana Rail Road Company teams with the Association of American Railroads and the American Short Line and Regional Railroad Association to sue the State of Illinois in U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division, seeking to enjoin a new Illinois law that it claims is preempted by three federal laws. Indiana Rail Road Co., et al., v. Illinois Commerce Comm'n, et al., No.1:19-cv-06466.

□ The Illinois law, which became effective in August, "imposes a categorical rule requiring that all freight railroads operate in almost all circumstances with at least two crew members," which the plaintiffs contend is preempted by the Federal Railroad Safety Act, the Regional Rail Reorganization Act, and the ICC Termination Act. The Illinois law was signed just three months after the Federal Railroad Administration determined that "no regulation of train-crew staffing is necessary or appropriate" for railroads to operate safely, according to the complaint. "In recent decades, technological breakthroughs have allowed railroads to gradually decrease average crew sizes - from about five in the 1960s to just two today - while compiling an ever-improving record of safety," the Indiana Rail Road filing asserts. "Now, the nation's railroads are poised to deliver even safer and more efficient service." The lawsuit does not challenge the constitutionality of the Illinois law as violative of the Constitution's Commerce Clause.

□ Indiana Rail Road, which operates a 250-mile regional railroad from Central Illinois to Southwest Indiana, contends in its complaint for declaratory and injunctive relief that "If there were any objective or empirical evidence that operating with one-person crews endangered the safety of INRD employees or the public, INRD would not continue one-person operations regardless of the attendant efficiencies. But there is simply no such evidence. To the contrary, INRD has complied a superb safety record while using one-person operations in Indiana and Illinois."

● The adjustable Indiana gas tax for October is set at 13.4¢ per gallon, meaning that for a fourth consecutive month (for the first time since November - January), the tax has declined from the prior month – and the rate of decline, 0.5¢, is higher than the 0.2¢ over-the-month decline from August to September. The rate is also down by a significant 2.4¢ over the prior year, a greater disparity than in any month since March. The 13.4¢ October 2019 rate matches the October 2017 figure. The four straight months of decline follow four consecutive months of over-the-month increases. The new October rate is still higher than any month during the first one-third of 2019. While we noted earlier in the year that the tax in each of the first four months of 2019 was lower than it was during any month in 2018, that positive phenomenon ended in May.

● Hemp Industry Daily caught up with Purdue Extension hemp specialist Marguerite Bolt to learn how Hoosier hemp farmers state fared in the 2019 production season. “According to the Office of Indiana State Chemist, Indiana licensed 130 farmers this year, with roughly 5,300 acres for outdoor production and approximately 400,000 square feet of indoor production Bolt said more than half of Indiana farmers planted fiber varieties in 2019, with 35% focused on growing hemp flower for CBD production and 15% planting hemp for grain.”

● The Forever 21 retail bankruptcy will mean the closure of stores in Carmel, Evansville, and Plainfield, but Simon Property Group, L.P. told the Marion County Commercial Court September 27 that as of that date, Forever 21 Retail, Inc. and Forever 21, Inc., were in default of obligations under 106 individual lease agreements in Simon shopping centers around the United States, “and owes Simon in excess of $9,000,000 in unpaid rent and late charges.”

□ As Simon malls continue to hemorrhage tenants, the Wall Street Journal reports that Simon Property Group is a key player behind the Fair Markets Initiative, purported gras roots entity undertaking a national campaign criticizing the business practices of Amazon, the leading generator of online sales and protagonist in the mall exodus.

□ And on Wednesday, Simon announced that it will invest $280 million in new, multi-platform digital value online shopping venture.

● Georg Utz, Inc., a plastic injection molding provider in Edinburgh, seeks a 10-year business personal property tax abatement from the Bartholomew County Council for a proposed $3.4 million investment in new equipment that will help it retain more than 85 jobs and create almost 15 new production positions expected to pay $16.75 per hour . . . CraftMark seeks a pair of seven-year local property tax abatements . . . Sullair, a compressed air solutions provider, plans to invest $8.2 million in an 80,000 square-foot expansion of its headquarters campus in Michigan City, constructing a new manufacturing building for production of air compressors, a canopied storage building, and an additional parking lot for employees and add $16.2 million in new equipment with the help of a property tax abatement from the Michigan City Common Council . The project will also reconfigure portions of the primary 280,000 square-foot manufacturing facility on the campus. Sullair anticipates adding more than 30 full-time jobs as a result.

Gist, who has worked for DCS for 14 years in several different roles, will focus on relaunching the agency's updated practice model to all employees. The practice model, which promotes trust-based relationships and teamwork in child welfare, provides a framework for staff members to follow while serving Hoosier children. Retraining staff in the practice model principles was recommended by the Alabama-based Child Welfare Policy and Practice Group in the influential assessment of the agency in 2018.

- Mitch Donick assumes the role of deputy director of operations for the Department of Correction's Parole Services Division. Donick comes to the post with more than 20 years of experience in law enforcement, corrections, and protective services. After service in the Air Force, he began his career in corrections in 2003 as a correctional officer at Putnamville Correctional Facility, then worked at Reception Diagnostic Center and Plainfield Correctional Facility as correctional officer and correctional sergeant. In 2013 he became a parole agent, and for the past six years he has worked in four different districts serving as a parole agent, regional assistant district supervisor, and district supervisor.

● Christine Daniel becomes executive director of transitional healthcare for the Department of Correction, post from which she will oversee the navigation of physical and behavioral healthcare for populations entering and leaving Indiana Department of Correction, as well as the Medicaid Processing Unit and the Parole Re-entry Liaison Team. Daniel began her correctional career as a parole re-entry liaison, and became the regional director of re-entry with Wexford of Indiana, where she led initiatives involving state agencies and community-based programming to develop relationships and protocols for successful re-entry and recidivism reduction. She also served as program supervisor at a community mental health center, operating a 24-hour supportive living program for clients with serious mental illness and co-occurring disorders.

● Following the retirement of Jim Greeson as state fire marshal after 11 years of (often controversial) service, the Governor selects South Bend Fire Chief Stephen Cox to serve as the Indiana state fire marshal. Cox has served with the South Bend Fire Department for 26 years, with 12 years in executive leadership, and seven as chief.

● Indiana University alum Marie Harf is back at work as a political commentator for the Fox News Channel. The former senior advisor of strategic communications to then-U.S. secretary of state John Kerry (she led Iran nuclear negotiation communications strategy), Harf had left Fox, where she had been a TV commentator and co-host of Fox News Radio's Benson and Harf, to join the quixotic presidential campaign of U.S. Rep. Seth Moulton (D-MA) as deputy campaign manager for policy and communications, focusing on foreign policy.

● In these pages a few decades ago, we reviewed Indiana Supreme Court voting combinations and discovered that here was a distinct pattern in the voting alignment between a given chief justice and a first-year justice, regardless of the party of the governor by whom each were appointed (and we've always cautioned you not to take political party "affiliation" into consideration in any Supreme Court vote of any kind by any justice after the year 1990 or so – perhaps unlike any other state supreme court in the nation).

% of Rulings Aligned	Combinations of Justices
93%	CJ Rush - Goff
90%	David - Goff
88%	CJ Rush - David
	David - Massa
	Massa - Goff
86%	CJ Rush - Massa
76%	David - Slaughter

IN the Lobby

● Bloomington's Cook Group Inc. retains the Washington, D.C., law and lobbying firm Akin, Gump, Strauss, Hauer & Feld to lobby Congress on "Issues related to medical device excise tax repeal."

● Midwestern Pet Foods, Inc. of Evansville retains Venable LLP of Washington, D.C. to lobby Congress on "Pet food production Issues related to pet food regulations. former U.S. Rep. Bart Stupak (D-MI) is the lobbyist registered on the account.

● FrogueClark, LLC files a termination statement for its federal lobbying on behalf of Lilly USA, LLC.

IN Court

● Hoosiers who find themselves in need of a protection order may now request one from anywhere they can access the internet. A new protection order e-filing service is now available to individuals, advocates, and attorneys. The new service is designed for individuals, including children, who need protection from domestic or family violence, stalking, sex offenses, or harassment. People seeking protection can take advantage of the service to access it and request such orders on a 24/7 basis from the privacy and comfort of a safe space, without physically having to travel to and then file in a county courthouse.

TechPoint's 'red carpet' event aims to match non-Hoosiers with jobs in central Indiana

Twenty-eight potential Hoosiers—some with Indiana connections and others with none—are scouting Indianapolis on Friday as part of a TechPoint "red carpet experience" to see if the city is a place they'd like to call home.

The prospects—as TechPoint calls them—are here from across the world, 14 states plus China and Vietnam. They were chosen from among nearly 400 applicants who expressed an interest in moving to central Indiana if they could find the right job.

Mike Langellier, president and CEO of TechPoint, said the organization worked with about two dozen large and small companies to determine the types of candidates the firms desired most and then narrowed the list "based on fit and real genuine interest in wanting to be here."

The event—which kicked off Thursday night with a reception at Salesforce Tower—is part of TechPoint's larger "Wish You Were Here" campaign. The organization is partnering with TMap, a startup using big data to try to reverse Indiana's brain drain, to identify people who have connections to or interest in Indiana and persuade them to move to the state.

Hubert Goodman made the trip from Ho Chi Minh City, Vietnam, where he has lived and worked as a trade consultant since 2013. He was already planning to repatriate. "The U.S. job market is so much more dynamic and exciting," Goodman said during the reception, which offered views from the top floor of Salesforce Tower.

Goodman lived in Brown County and Indianapolis during the 2000s when he worked for Cummins Inc. and he views the city as one place he could land again as he returns to the United States. He's looking for an opportunity to help a company turn its data into action.

"I have a knack for knowing how to profit from the effective use of information," he said.

Goodman found the TechPoint event intriguing. "When I found out about this event, I really got excited," he said. "It definitely increases the probability I will move back to Indianapolis."

On Friday morning, Goodman and other prospects were scheduled for 30-minute interviews with companies that were matched to by TMap.

Five companies—Salesforce, Raytheon, Cummins, Eli Lilly and Co. and Geico—paid $10,000 each to help underwrite the red carpet event. But many other companies are participating and interviewing prospects.

Those companies will pay a fee if they hire one of the 28 prospects, but Langellier said it's less costly than if they had used a traditional recruiting service to make the connection.

After the interviews, prospects were scheduled to head off for tours of the city, including a bike ride along the Indianapolis Cultural Trail.

TechPoint planned tours and other events for the guests the prospects brought along as well, and Langellier said some of those “plus-ones” are being matched with job opportunities as well.

The prospects come from a wide range of industries but most are tech-related and have an average of 10 years of career experience.

“They’re at a stage in life where they want this kind of lifestyle,” Langellier said. “The traditional tech hubs are becoming unsustainable and many cases difficult to live in. The state where we had the most applicants from is California.”

Cara Corwin came from Michigan. She works in automotive consulting for a direct-mail company in the Detroit area (think about the coupons you receive encouraging you to get an oil change) and came to the TechPoint event because she’s ready for a change.

“In the position I’m in now, I’m kind of hamstrung,” she said. “I’m not really able to innovate or be entrepreneurial.”

Cara Corwin

Corwin has never lived in Indiana, but a former colleague now works for Cummins. He posted about the TechPoint red carpet opportunity on LinkedIn and Corwin applied. She’s looking for a product management role that provides a challenge.

She said she’s been impressed with the visit. “I think it’s an absolutely fantastic idea,” Corwin said. “And they’ve done a phenomenal job so far.”

TechPoint has been sending postcards, emails and even a virtual reality headset—the kind you slip your phone into to watch 3-D videos—to the prospects to help them get acquainted with the city.

Corwin was looking forward to her interviews and the neighborhood tours. “I would like to experience more of the downtown area,” she said. “I would love to live downtown if I were to come work here.”

Tanzil Rahman, a software developer who works in Iowa City, Iowa, came to the event with his wife. He also has no connection to Indiana and has lived in Iowa since moving to the United States from his native Bangladesh. But he wants to find a new challenge in a moderately sized Midwest city.

"I am looking for a position where I can grow professionally," he said. "And also, I would like to live in a city where I can get the flavor of a big city but not the hectic part of a big city. I don't want crime like Detroit or the traffic jams of Atlanta."

Tanzil Rahman

Rahman and his wife are looking for a neighborhood where they can raise a family and send children to good schools.

On Friday night, Rahman and other prospects were welcomed with music from Another Round, an all-male a cappella group from Indiana University, and a greeting from Mayor Joe Hogsett.

He encouraged the prospects to choose Indianapolis for what he called the "usual" reasons—a low cost of living, growing tech sector, and great sports and cultural amenities.

But, he said, as mayor, he had another argument.

"You have arrived in our city at an extraordinarily special time," Hogsett said. "We are growing, we are building, we are developing like never before. Renewing our infrastructure, redesigning everything from transit to criminal justice with a focus on being more sustainable, more equitable."

And he said prospects are just in time to take part in a civic collaboration that will define the city.

"I want you to know that as we seem to be living in a time of great change everywhere, the sudden evolution we are experiencing here in Indianapolis, well, it would seem to be right on time."

The Rogue Republican

Superintendent of Public Instruction Jennifer McCormick has apparently decided to take a “damn the torpedoes” approach when it comes to her final 14 months in office. McCormick was there for the announcement by State Senator Eddie Melton that he was running for Governor and in an interview with Chalkbeat Indiana, McCormick lamented the lack of a bipartisan approach to education in the Statehouse and on other occasions she and her staff, at least the ones who didn’t leave out of frustration with her leadership, have complained about the Governor and legislature.

So how did all this fall of the rails? Apparently, McCormick had the same problem that a lot of statewide elected officials deal with who come from smaller communities. Back home, they were the big fish in the small pond. Now in Indianapolis, at best they are a medium-sized fish in a big pond, but they haven’t accepted that reality and McCormick is a prime example. TCS spoke to several former employees and they all said the same thing. McCormick came here expecting to be the leader on education and that lawmakers would automatically defer to her. Anyone who’s been in that building on Washington Street for any amount of time knows that is not how the real world works. And whenever staff tried to explain that to her, it fell on deaf ears.

They also said McCormick is in a giant echo chamber because her top staff reinforces her opinions and they don't give her the frank and candid advice that she needed. And when someone disagreed with the office policies they were considered disloyal and encouraged to find work elsewhere. It's unfortunate that things turned out this way because from what we're hearing, McCormick is going to need all the friends she can get over the remainder of her term.

First of all, we're told that any agenda items she may have next year are basically dead even before they get out of her office on the second floor. More importantly, and with bigger consequences, we hear that there are some folks looking into her travel, particularly when she went on Melton's listening tour. You see the listening tour was not done in Melton's capacity as a State Senator but as a possible candidate for Governor, so when McCormick accompanied him on these trips, there is a serious question of whether the lines between governmental and political campaigning were crossed. In addition, some lawmakers are also questioning whether the Department of Education dropped the ball on monitoring virtual charter schools and if they had been paying closer attention, some recent controversies might have been avoided.

And those are just the tips of the iceberg. TCS hears there is a lot more coming that has the potential to make life very uncomfortable to the SPI, almost to the point that she might resign the office early. Of course, McCormick did actually try to leave a few months ago when she applied to be the head of Muncie Schools, but the Board and Ball State wanted nothing to do with her and her leadership.

And the irony of that decision was that they hired Dr. Lee Ann Kwiatkowski, who previously worked for McCormick but left out of frustration.

Hogsett's House of Cards

The fallout is continuing from last week's Marion County Democratic caucus for County Prosecutor. As you all know, Ryan Mears, who won, had the backing of Terry Curry while Tim Moriarty had Mayor Joe Hogsett's backing, along with Andre Carson, Council President Vop Osili and few other heavy hitters. He also had the "unofficial" backing of the County Party which is why they were all shocked when they lost by ten votes.

Well, we went and got a hold of the list all the precinct committeemen who were eligible to vote, both appointed and elected, and, well, let's put it this way, I'm from Chicago and I've never seen a deck so brazenly stacked. Out of the 75 or so appointed PCs, more than 50 had direct ties to Mayor Hogsett. They were either city employees or their family members. That list of 50 also included some personal friends of Moriarty as well as donors and lawyers with ties to the Mayor. Also, 14 PCs who were removed from the list had ties to Mears.

So if you think about this, Mears walked into the race with at least a 50-vote deficit (64-vote deficit if you count the removed PCs) and walked away with a ten-vote victory. The Mayor and top aides, TCS hears, were livid at the result. We're also told that some of the PCs who were backing Moriarty did not show up to the caucus and those folks apparently have targets on their backs. So if you're one of them and you work for the city, don't be shocked if your office is relocated to the basement.

We are even hearing the County party is planning to go after the PCs who voted for Mears. However, the party may want to think twice about getting revenge and more about building up its defenses. TCS is hearing that a lot of folks are feeling emboldened by last Saturday's victory and are looking at a takeover of their own by recruiting candidates to run in every appointed spot.

Another side note to all this, and we are still working on getting confirmation, but we've heard from several circles that the relationship between the Mayor and City-Council President Vop Osili has gone south after this. And they got into it pretty bad recently. It didn't quite come to blows, but TCS hears someone had to step in and separate them. When we get more details, we will let you know.

A Few Other Items of Note

We're hearing Barnes & Thornburg will have a role to play in the impeachment inquiry against President Donald Trump. Word is the firm has been retained by Vice-President Mike Pence to help deal with any subpoenas and investigations by House Democrats.

Marion County Democrats are apparently worried about Republican Mayoral candidate Jim Merritt's decision to name former IMPD Deputy Chief Bill Benjamin as the head of the police department if he becomes mayor. Benjamin is highly respected in the black community. And more importantly, when he ran for Sheriff in 2018, although he lost to Kerry Forestal, he got nearly 25,000 votes and in what a lot of folks think is going to be a low turnout election, that could potentially be a game-changer.

By the way, there had been some rumors that Rev. Charles Harrison of the Ten Point Coalition was going to make an endorsement in the Indianapolis Mayor's race. We spoke to him and he told us nothing could be further from the truth. He says neither he nor Ten-Point does endorsements as they are a not for profit.

Atlanta resident Beth Henderson announced her candidacy for Congress in Indiana's Fifth District. She is married to Tim Henderson who briefly ran for the U.S Senate in 2018.

Long-time Hoosier political activist Curt Smith announced this week the formation of a federal SuperPAC to benefit the candidacy of Micah Beckwith, one of at least five declared candidates in the GOP primary for the open Indiana Congressional District 5 race. Registered as the Hoosier Heartland Fund, the independent expenditure PAC will be assisted by former US Rep. Marlin Stutzman as strategic advisor.

FYI, it looks like we will be going back in the field one more time in the Indianapolis Mayor's race to poll in our LNG capacity. We'll be looking at the Mayor's race, council races and a couple of other local issues. We hope to present the results the week of the 21st.

NOTRE DAME TO HOST FIRST PRESIDENTIAL DEBATE: The University of Notre Dame will host the first presidential debate on Sept. 29, 2020. "The world's attention will be on us and on this region. Our democracy so badly needs a place where we can have serious conversations," Rev. John Jenkins, the university's president, said on Friday (South Bend Tribune). "We always welcome leaders from the various parties ... so we can have serious conversations about the issues that confront us. Presidential debates are a sacred moment in our democracy." It will take place at the Purcell Pavilion at the Joyce Center. It will be the first presidential debate in Indiana history. The other two sites for the 2020 presidential debates will be Belmont University in Nashville, Tenn., and the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor. The Commission on Presidential Debates in January sought proposals from sites interested in hosting a 2020 presidential or vice-presidential debate. The requirements included a debate hall with at least 15,000 square feet, "adequate" air and ground transportation, large parking areas for media, media filing and accreditation centers, at least 3,000 hotel rooms "nearby" and an unspecified financial contribution from the host site. The deadline for proposals was April 2.

HOLCOMB ENCOURAGED BY LOCAL SCHOOL PAY RAISES: Gov. Eric Holcomb is encouraged by local teacher pay increases that he believes are due to moves he and the General Assembly made with the biennial budget passed last spring (Howey Politics Indiana). Last week, Richmond teachers received a $3,000 base pay raise, while there was a 4% increase for Carmel Clay teachers. Carmel teachers also received a $25,000 increase in life insurance and a new leave agreement for foster parents. "I'm encouraged by reports that school districts are increasing teacher pay with the additional dollars the state provided with the historic increase in K-12 tuition support and the $150 million used to pay down teacher pension liability," Holcomb told HPI over the weekend. "Collective bargaining is still underway and I hope to hear more of these positive reports." Last summer, Holcomb expressed concerns that local school boards would not pass along the state-produced savings to teacher pay.

DISCIPLINE CHARGES FILED AGAINST 3 JUDGES IN SHOOTING BRAWL: Three southern Indiana judges face disciplinary charges over an Indianapolis altercation which left two of them with gunshot wounds (Berman, WIBC). The Indiana Supreme Court's Judicial Qualifications Commission accuses Clark Circuit Judges Andrew Adams and Brad Jacobs and Crawford Circuit Judge Sabrina Bell of being drunk when they got in a three a-m confrontation with two men in a White Castle parking lot, which escalated into a fistfight and ended when one of the men shot Adams and Jacobs. The charges provide the first detailed picture of what led to the fight. The judges were in Indy for a judicial conference, and according to the charges had spent the night barhopping. They went to the Red Garter strip club in downtown Indy with a Clark County magistrate, but walked to the White Castle after finding it closed. While the magistrate was inside the restaurant, the commission says someone in an SUV yelled something at the judges, and Bell gave them the finger. That touched off a profanity-filled shouting match among all five of them. The charges say Bell told police she got "mouthy," and the other two judges were defending her, eventually advancing on Brandon Kaiser and his nephew Alfredo Vazquez. The commission says Jacobs eventually had Kaiser pinned on the ground, when Vazquez, who'd primarily been fighting Adams, pulled him off. The commission says when Kaiser started to set up, Adams came over and kicked him in the back. That's when, according to the charges, Kaiser pulled a gun, shot Adams in the stomach, then went to where Jacobs and Vazquez were scuffling and shot Jacobs twice in the chest.

LEGAL MARIJUANA CHANGING WORKPLACE DRUG RULES: For business owner George Lynch, setting an employee drug policy related to marijuana is easy. He's just not going to test for it. It doesn't bother him if his workers use pot. Actually, it's no surprise if they do (Spaulding, South Bend Tribune). Green Stem is a cannabis company opening shop in Niles, Mich., and it's in the business of growing, processing and selling medical and — likely in the future — adult-use, or recreational, marijuana. So the company won't test to see if a staffer has used pot. Other, harder drugs will be a different matter. "We have to have a sensible drug policy," Lynch said, "and the sensible drug policy is, absolutely we're not going to test for cannabis." But for the same reasons marijuana testing isn't a concern for Lynch, it's become more of a concern for some other area businesses. Increasing legalization and social acceptance of marijuana — recreational pot shops and consumption clubs could soon open in Niles and Buchanan — have cast a haze for some over their workplace drug policy.

CLIMATE CHANGE WILL BRING MORE FLOODS: Knee-deep water in Alan Hamlet's basement in South Bend last year was a sign that some would attribute to climate change. The neighboring St. Joseph River flooded in February 2018 when heavy rains were accompanied by melting snow; water tables in the ground were saturated. There was nowhere for rainwater to go, so it found basements like Hamlet's. "We can never say with great certainty that any particular extreme event is caused by climate change, per se," Hamlet, a climate researcher in affiliation with the University of Notre Dame, said at a recent seminar (Miley, CNHI). "What we can do, though, is point to those events as examples of what future conditions say," Hamlet continued. "This is not just a single event. It is a systematic change that is happening over time." The 2018 flooding was deemed a once-in-a-2,500-year event. In the year-and-a-half through February 2018, South Bend experienced a 500-year flood and a 1,000-year rain event, when 8.49 inches fell in a 24-hour period beginning Aug. 15, 2016. Predictions indicate that the St. Joseph River at nearby Niles, Michigan, will see a 45% increase in 100-year floods by 2080. Over the past century, Indiana has become warmer by 1.2 degrees Fahrenheit, according to Jeffrey Dukes, director of the Purdue Climate Change Research Center. Rainfall has increased by 5.5 inches a year, causing more floods, Dukes said.

HPI PROGRAMMING NOTE: Your publisher became a married man last weekend, joining Susan Joiner Howey of the IU School of Medicine in a joyous and prosperous union. We are now traveling to New England. I've turned the insipid cable news off, silenced all the jabbering talking heads, and we'll be listening to the voices of America this week in places like Niagara Falls, Burlington, Dixville Notch, Newport, Provincetown, Pittsburgh and beyond. Your HPI Daily Wires will be coming a little later this week, but they'll include some of my observations. The next weekly HPI will be published on Tuesday, Oct. 22. As always, thanks for reading.

PEW FINDS PARTISAN DIVIDE INTENSIFYING: Three years ago, Pew Research Center found that the 2016 presidential campaign was "unfolding against a backdrop of intense partisan division and animosity." Today, the level of division and animosity – including negative sentiments among partisans toward the members of the opposing party – has only deepened. Growing shares in both parties give 'cold' ratings to those in opposing party. The share of Republicans who give Democrats a "cold" rating on a 0-100 thermometer has risen 14 percentage points since 2016 – with virtually all of the increase coming in "very cold" ratings (0-24). Democrats' views of Republicans have followed a similar trajectory: 57% give Republicans a very cold rating, up from 41% three years ago. The survey by Pew Research Center was conducted Sept. 3-15 among 9,895 adults (it was completed before House Speaker Nancy Pelosi's Sept. 24 announcement of an impeachment inquiry into President Donald Trump). It finds that both Republicans and Democrats express negative views about several traits and characteristics of those in the opposing party, and in some cases these opinions have grown more negative since 2016. For example, 55% of Republicans say Democrats are "more immoral" when compared with other Americans; 47% of Democrats say the same about Republicans. Three years ago, 47% of Republicans and 35% of Democrats said members of the other party were less moral than other people.

VOTERS FROM FISHERS FRET INVESTIGATIONS, IMPEACHMENT: As Democrats' impeachment inquiry into President Donald Trump intensifies, Mark Stenske of Fishers, Ind., feels like he's seen this movie before, and the storyline is getting old. First, there was the nearly two-year investigation into Russia's interference in the 2016 election and Trump's possible role in it. Then came the accusations against Trump's pick for the Supreme Court, Brett Kavanaugh, and contentious hearings before a Senate committee. Now it's questions about Trump's dealings with Ukraine's president and whether that should lead to Trump's removal from office (Burnett, AP). "I think they wanted to do it all along, and they're just looking for another way, another avenue," Stenske, a 55-year-old Trump supporter, said of the impeachment proceedings as he walked his dog through a suburban Indianapolis park last week. "I think it's kind of a ploy to help keep the pressure on him and muddy his campaign, his chances to win in 2020." Polling finds that support for the inquiry has grown since House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., announced the start of the investigation last month following a whistleblower complaint. But what those numbers don't show is the sense of fatigue among some Americans — a factor that could be significant as Democrats leading the inquiry debate how to proceed with an election year approaching. It's a feeling shared by people on both sides. For Trump supporters such as Stenske, the impeachment inquiry is more of the same from obstructionist Democrats still bitter about the 2016 election. Those who want Trump gone say it's tough to feel hopeful after watching him flout the rules and spew divisive rhetoric for almost a full term — and get away with all of it. "Impeachment in general has been depressing because it's sad that it's taken this long," said Megan Gettelfinger, 33, a preschool teacher and mother of two who moved to Fishers from Indianapolis almost three years ago.

TRUMP'S BLUFF KICKED OFF KURD FIASCO: President Trump had been calling Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan's bluff for more than 2 years, and some senior administration officials thought Erdogan would never actually go through with his long-threatened Syria invasion, according to 6 sources with direct knowledge of the situation (Swan, Axios). "I think everyone thought Erdogan was bluffing," a source close to Trump told me today. The big picture: Trump would tell Erdogan that if he wanted to invade Syria he would have to own whatever mess ensued, according to these sources. Erdogan would have to take care of ISIS and manage international condemnation, trouble from Capitol Hill, and the quagmire with the Kurds. And when Trump put it in such stark terms to Erdogan, the Turkish leader would demur. Until last Sunday, that is, when he told Trump he was moving ahead with the invasion of northern Syria. This time, Erdogan called Trump's bluff, having waited for international forces to wipe out the ISIS caliphate. Erdogan's decision — which the White House cleared the way for in its Sunday night announcement, alienating and blindsiding key allies including Republican lawmakers and the Christian right — has plunged the Middle East and Trump's political standing in Washington into crisis. Sources in Turkey have indicated that while Erdogan was talking big, he thought Trump would restrain him, a U.S. official familiar with the details told Axios' Margaret Talev.

SEN. YOUNG CALLS KURD BETRAYAL 'VERY BAD PRECEDENT': Indiana Senator Todd Young says he's exploring how Congress can intervene against Turkey's assault on the U.S.'s Kurdish allies in Syria (Berman, WIBC). Turkey began a ground and air assault across the Syrian border on Wednesday, three days after the White House announced it would remove a small contingent of Special Forces who had served as a buffer between the Turks and Kurds. Kurdish forces have been U.S. allies in Iraq and against ISIS. Young calls the abandonment of allies a "very bad precedent." He says President Trump deserves credit for trying to keep a campaign promise to bring American troops home. But he says the pullout in Syria was not only "imprudent," but a surprise. He says a move of that significance should have triggered legal requirements to consult Congress beforehand. Democratic Rep. Andre Carson says he's "horrified" by the bloodshed which follows what he calls Trump's "abrupt and reckless" decision, and says Congress needs to push back. He calls the withdrawal "a betrayal of U.S. leadership...resulting in a devastating human impact."

ABANDONED KURDS CUT A DEAL WITH ASSAD: Kurdish forces long allied with the United States in Syria announced a new deal on Sunday with the government in Damascus, a sworn enemy of Washington that is backed by Russia, as Turkish troops moved deeper into their territory and President Trump ordered the withdrawal of the American military from northern Syria. The sudden shift marked a major turning point in Syria's long war (New York Times). For five years, United States policy relied on collaborating with the Kurdish-led forces both to fight the Islamic State and to limit the influence of Iran and Russia, which support the Syrian government, with a goal of maintaining some leverage over any future settlement of the conflict. On Sunday, after Mr. Trump abruptly abandoned that approach, American leverage appeared all but gone. That threatened to give President Bashar al-Assad and his Iranian and Russian backers a free hand. It also jeopardized hard-won gains against the Islamic State — and potentially opened the door for its return. The Kurds' deal with Damascus paved the way for government forces to return to the country's northeast for the first time in years to try to repel a Turkish invasion launched after the Trump administration pulled American troops out of the way. The pullout has already unleashed chaos and bloodletting.

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: It's cliché, but Susan and I ended up at Niagara Falls last night, a logical geographic way station to New England. It became what I call one of those "Rushmore Moments," after our visit to that iconic South Dakota tribute to our great presidents last summer. As we walked on the American side to the falls, we were in a throng of people headed down to see the last fireworks show of the season. More than half of this crowd were foreign visitors. We heard perhaps a dozen or so different languages. People were excited, polite and communicative. To me, it was another vivid example of this great melting pot nation we live in. At a time when our politics and news source choices become extreme and segregated, it is joyous to see the masses come together in a common place to experience something of explicit magnitude such as Niagara Falls, which never cease to amaze me. It was a heartening experience. We head through the Adirondacks to Burlington, Vt. today. - Brian A. Howey

DODEN BOOK RECOUNTS FORT WAYNE'S REVIVAL: A book that recounts Fort Wayne's downtown resurrection goes on sale today. The timing — just three weeks before the election that will decide the city's next mayor — isn't a coincidence (Slater, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). Eric Doden, former head of Greater Fort Wayne Inc. and the Indiana Economic Development Corp., commissioned Virginia-based author Chis Mead to write the 12-chapter book, "Turning Rust to Gold: Fort Wayne's Fight for Revival." Doden, who failed to win the Republican mayoral nomination in 2011, supports Republican challenger Tim Smith in the Nov. 5 election. "I knew he didn't like (incumbent Mayor) Tom Henry," Mead said about Doden, who chose the book's release date. "I knew this book was coming out during election season. At 65, I wasn't born yesterday."

DEMOCRATS DEBATE TUESDAY: The fourth Democratic presidential debate, hosted by CNN and the New York Times, will take place on Tuesday in Westerville, Ohio. Twelve candidates will debate each other on one stage.

BUTTIGIEG SAYS TRUMP DESTROYING ALLIANCES: Moving U.S. troops out of Syria was the wrong move, according to South Bend Mayor and presidential candidate Pete Buttigieg (Darling, WIBC). In the past, Buttigieg has been an advocate for ending what he refers to as "forever wars" in the middle east. It was this reasoning that President Trump said prompted him to pull troops out of northern Syria early last week. Speaking on CNN's State of the Union in Des Moines, Iowa Sunday, Buttigieg said ending the war doesn't mean withdrawing from engagement. "Often if mean making sure we do our part to stabilize or help keep the peace so that full-blown conflicts don't break out," Buttigieg said. "This isn't even a strategy or a policy. It is the president systematic destroying American alliances and values. That makes the country worse off."

BUTTIGIEG, WARREN LEAD IN FIELD OFFICES: Just a half-block off the old courthouse square here lies a handsome storefront with bunting and a vintage sign that reads "Warren for President." It's a field office for Senator Elizabeth Warren of Massachusetts, who along with Mayor Pete Buttigieg of South Bend, Ind., is one of only two Democratic candidates with a brick-and-mortar presence in this college town 30 minutes south of Des Moines (New York Times). Ms. Warren and Mr.

Buttigieg have broken away from the Democratic pack with the most field offices overall in the four early states, and they are making an expensive bet that organizational strength on the ground will catapult them to crucial top finishes in Iowa's first-in-the-nation caucuses. Their ground games give them more workspaces for organizers and volunteers. More organizers lead to more in-person contact with potential supporters in every nook and cranny of a state. And in Iowa, where picking a candidate is akin to a religious conversion following extended evangelism from a supporter, a strong and broad organization is often the backbone of a winning campaign. The offices also serve as an advertisement that Democrats do still exist in more rural areas, like Indianola, that swung to President Trump in the 2016 election. Surrounding Warren County, which Barack Obama carried in 2008, went for President Trump in 2016 by 16 percentage points.

HUNTER BIDEN QUILTS CHINESE FIRM: Hunter Biden, whose overseas business dealings have drawn relentless attacks from President Trump and posed a threat to the candidacy of his father, Joseph R. Biden Jr., intends to step down from the board of a Chinese company, BHR, by the end of the month, his lawyer said on Sunday, a move his father later lauded in a forceful defense of his son's integrity (New York Times). The lawyer also said in a statement that if Mr. Biden were to be elected president, his son would "agree not to serve on boards of, or work on behalf of, foreign-owned companies."

Sunday Talk

SEC. ESPER DEFENDS SYRIAN PULLOUT: Members of President Trump's Cabinet, including Defense Secretary Mark Esper and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin, on Sunday defended the decision to withdraw U.S. forces from northern Syria ahead of a Turkish military operation as well as a delay in sanctions against Ankara that have sparked bipartisan criticism. Esper said the presence of U.S. troops near Turkey's border with Syria would not have prevented Turkey's advance into Syria. "I think they were fully committed," Esper said of Turkey on Fox News Sunday. "We are not going to go to war, another war in the Middle East, against Turkey. ... That's not what we signed up for." Esper also pushed back against host Chris Wallace's characterization of U.S. troops at the border as a "tripwire." "I'm not one to ... classify them as a tripwire and sacrifice them, if you will," he said.

ESPER CONFIRMS LARGER SYRIAN U.S. PULLOUT: Defense Secretary Mark Esper confirmed Sunday that President Trump has ordered a larger withdrawal of U.S. forces from northeastern Syria than was previously indicated. During an appearance on CBS's Face the Nation, Esper said the U.S. has withdrawn about 1,000 U.S. troops from northern Syria since an initial smaller withdrawal of troops. Trump made the decision to increase the withdrawal amid reports that Turkey will expand its offensive "further south than originally planned and to the west," Esper told CBS's Margaret Brennan on Sunday. Esper also referenced reports that the Syrian Democratic Forces, a Kurdish group allied with the U.S. in the battle against ISIS, are seeking an agreement with the Syrian and Russian governments. "And so we find ourselves as we have American forces likely caught between two opposing advancing armies, and it's a very untenable situation," Esper told Brennan.

MATTIS SAYS ISIS WILL RESURGE AFTER BETRAYAL: Former Defense Secretary Jim Mattis said "ISIS will resurge" in Syria in his first public comments after President Donald Trump's withdrawal of troops from the region. "I think Secretary of State [Mike] Pompeo, the intelligence services, the foreign countries that are working with us have it about right that ISIS is not defeated. We have got to keep the pressure on ISIS so they don't recover," Mattis said in an interview on NBC News' Meet the Press set to air Sunday. Mattis' warning comes after Trump announced last week that the U.S. will move special operation teams away from the Syrian border as Turkey launches an offensive against Kurdish forces. The Kurds have long fought alongside the U.S. against the Islamic State in the region.

KINSINGER SAYS U.S. COULD HAVE PREVENTED TURKISH ASSAULT: Rep. Adam Kinzinger (R-Ill.) on Sunday sharply criticized President Trump's decision to remove U.S. troops from northeastern Syria, saying the 50 U.S. troops stationed at the border with Turkey would have prevented Turkish forces from advancing into the country. "We all know that if there were still those ... soldiers, Turkey wouldn't attack," Kinzinger, an Air Force veteran, said on CBS' Face the Nation. Taking aim at Trump's argument that the U.S. should not be involved in endless wars in the Middle East, Kinzinger said the U.S. was "preventing an endless war and that actually commenced on Sunday a week ago." "To see this yet again, leaving an ally behind, abandoning people that we told that we were going to be with is disheartening, depressing, frankly it's weak," Kinzinger told CBS' Margaret Brennan. "I don't see how it follows through on the president's biggest promise in the campaign to defeat ISIS, because I think it's going to resurge."

SCHIFF SAYS WHISTLEBLOWER MAY NOT TESTIFY: House Intelligence Chairman Adam Schiff indicated Sunday that the whistleblower at the heart of Democrats' impeachment inquiry against President Donald Trump might not testify over concerns about the person's safety. Schiff's remarks come after Trump dramatically escalated his attacks on the whistleblower and as he repeatedly calls for the official to be unmasked. Trump's unrelenting barrage has spurred worries from Democrats that congressional Republicans might try to reveal that person's identity — conceivably endangering his or her safety — at the behest of the president. Schiff (D-Calif.) said the whistleblower's testimony might not be needed given that a rough transcript of the call with Trump asking Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky for a "favor" — the centerpiece of the whistleblower's complaint — is public. In addition, lawmakers have collected a tranche of damning text messages and witness testimony related to the scandal in the past two weeks. "Our primary interest right now is making sure that that person is protected. Indeed, now there's more than one whistleblower, that they are protected," Schiff said on CBS' "Face the Nation" on Sunday.

DEMS DISCUSS DETAINING OFFICIALS WHO IGNORE SUBPOENAS: Rep. Rashida Tlaib (D-Mich.) revealed in a new interview that House Democrats have discussed jailing allies of the president who do not comply with congressional subpoenas, an escalation of the House's efforts to force White House compliance with an impeachment inquiry (The Hill). Tlaib told Deadline Detroit that such an action, known as inherent contempt, would be "uncharted territory" for Congress but added that "serious conversations" about taking the step have occurred within the Democratic caucus. "There have been actual serious conversations about what the logistics would look like ... if we did have to force someone through a court order to come before the Congressional committee," she said. "This is pretty uncharted territory for many of us and even for Congress." Tlaib's comments echoed those of Rep. John Garamendi (D-Calif.), who called for the House to do as much in a CNN interview earlier this week.

CRUZ SAYS IT'S NOT APPROPRIATE FOR CAMPAIGNS TO SEEK FOREIGN HELP: Sen. Ted Cruz (R-Texas) said Sunday that "of course" it was inappropriate for President Trump to call for Chinese officials to investigate former Vice President Joe Biden and his son Hunter. Cruz was responding to a question on "Face the Nation" from the CBS host Margaret Brennan, who asked the Texas senator whether Trump's call for Beijing to investigate the Bidens was appropriate amid his own criticisms of Beijing for human rights abuses. "Of course not," Cruz responded, adding "elections in the United States should be decided by Americans and it's not the business of foreign countries to be interfering in our elections."

KASICH ASKS GOP TO 'LOOK IN MIRROR': Former Ohio Gov. John Kasich said his advice for fellow Republicans in Congress during the impeachment process was to "look in the mirror at how you want to be remembered." Kasich, who was defeated by President Trump in the 2016 primary and has often criticized the president, said Republicans shouldn't be afraid of telling Trump their true feelings. "Look in the mirror and figure out how you want to be remembered later and how you feel about yourself today," Kasich told CNN's Jake Tapper during an appearance on "State of the Union." "There's nothing wrong with telling the truth and sharing your real feelings," he said.

ENGEL 'DISGUSTED' BY ERDOGAN: House Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Eliot Engel (D-N.Y.) said on Sunday that he is "disgusted" that a U.S. president would "feel comfortable" with Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan. "Erdogan's a bad guy, and I'm disgusted that the American president would feel comfortable with a guy like Erdogan," Engel told host Chuck Todd on NBC's "Meet the Press." Engel also said that NATO should consider removing Turkey as a member because it's acting like a "Russian ally."

YOUNG SAYS THERE'S NO 'SMOKING TRANSCRIPT': Indiana Senator Todd Young says House Democrats haven't made the case yet for impeaching President Trump (Berman, WIBC). Young says the summary of Trump's phone call pushing Ukraine to investigate potential Democratic opponent Joe Biden is not, in his words, a "smoking transcript." He says he doesn't have a hard and fast rule for what would be impeachable conduct -- he says it's a case-by-case determination, and says he'll review any documents or evidence in the event of an impeachment. Young has said little about the impeachment investigation. He says he's determined not to let the House inquiry distract him from policy priorities like the trade deal with Mexico and Canada. Indiana's other senator, Republican Mike Braun, has been a more outspoken opponent, issuing a statement this week declaring Trump is right to refuse to cooperate with an impeachment probe he calls a "partisan sham."

TRUMP WANTED YOVANOVITCH OUT IN UKRAINE: The former U.S. ambassador to Ukraine whose abrupt ouster in May has become a focus of House impeachment investigators said Friday that her departure came as a direct result of pressure President Trump placed on the State Department to remove her, according to her prepared remarks before Congress (Washington Post). The account by Marie Yovanovitch depicts a career foreign service officer caught in a storm of unsubstantiated allegations pushed by the president's personal attorney Rudolph W. Giuliani and a cast of former Ukrainian officials who viewed her as a threat to their financial and political interests. She told lawmakers that she was forced to leave Kiev on "the next plane" this spring and subsequently removed from her post, with the State Department's No. 2 official telling her that, although she had done nothing wrong, the president had lost confidence in her and the agency had been under significant pressure to remove her since the summer of 2018.

SONDLAND EXPECTED TO DESCRIBE TRUMP 'QUID PRO QUO': Ever since former U.S. special envoy to Ukraine Kurt Volker handed over those text messages, President Trump's defenders have pointed to one of them as supposedly exonerating Trump (Washington Post). "Bill, I believe you are incorrect about President Trump's intentions," Gordon Sondland, the U.S. ambassador to the European Union, told another diplomat. "The President has been crystal clear no quid pro quo's [sic] of any kind." This text has been a linchpin of the Trump Ukraine defense. But on Saturday night, the linchpin broke. The Washington Post's Aaron C. Davis and John Hudson reported that a person close to Sondland says the ambassador will tell Congress in a deposition this week that there was some kind of a quid pro quo, "but not a corrupt one."

HOUSE SCHEDULE: The House may consider a resolution opposing Trump's actions in Syria this week, a Dem leadership aide tells Alayna. House Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Eliot Engel (D-N.Y.) and ranking member Michael McCaul (R-Texas) will introduce legislation to sanction Turkish officials involved in the invasion of Syria and banks involved in the defense sector (Axios). The leadership aide said the timeline of the bill's floor consideration is still unclear. The Hong Kong Human Rights and Democracy Act — bipartisan legislation that is one of Pelosi's top priorities — will be debated on the floor this week under suspension, the aide said. On Wednesday, Congressman Raul Ruiz (D-Calif.) will hold a gun violence prevention roundtable with physicians and public health experts. Pelosi is slated to attend.

TRUMP OFFICIALS SCHEDULED TO TESTIFY: The following Trump administration officials are scheduled to appear before the House Intelligence, Oversight and Foreign Affairs committees as part of their impeachment inquiry: Monday: Trump's former Russia adviser Fiona Hill. Tuesday: Deputy Assistant Secretary of State George Kent. Thursday: U.S. Ambassador to the European Union Gordon Sondland and Counselor of the State Department Ulrich Brechbuhl.

SENATE SCHEDULE: The Senate will confirm the following nominees, per a Republican leadership aide: Barbara McConnell Barrett as Secretary of the Air Force Frank Volk as a judge for the Southern District of West Virginia. Charles Eskridge III as a judge for the Southern District of Texas. David Novak as a judge for the Eastern District of Virginia. Rachel Kovner as a judge for the Eastern District of New York.

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB DECLARES 'MOVE OVER' WEEK - Indiana Gov. Eric Holcomb has signed a proclamation declaring this week "Indiana Move Over Week." In April 1997, ISP Trooper Andrew Winzenread was killed while helping a motorist on Interstate 74 in Dearborn County, according to a press release from Indiana State Police (WRTV). After Winzenread's death, Indiana was the first state in the country to require people to move over a lane or slow down when passing an emergency vehicle, according to the release. The law has been expanded to require people to slow down at least 10 mph from the speed limit or move over for other vehicles with flashing amber lights, like tow trucks, utility service vehicles, and others, according to the release. On Saturday, the Indiana Towing and Wrecker Association and other groups will host an event from 9-11:30 a.m. at the Indian State Fairgrounds for attendees to hear from the people the law benefits. The event also serves a "touch a truck" event for children.

GOVERNOR: WORKFORCE COUNCIL TO DO LISTENING TOUR - The Governor's Workforce Cabinet is holding a series of listening sessions around Indiana over the next two months. It's seeking citizen input on how to spend federal workforce dollars over the next four years (Hicks, Indiana Public Media). The listening tour is part of a requirement for states looking to get tens of millions of federal dollars under the Workforce and Innovation Opportunity Act. The act gives states funds for youth and adult unemployment programs. There will be listening sessions for each of the state's 12 economic regions, with the first one to be held on Monday in New Albany. A spokesperson for the Governor's Workforce Cabinet wrote in an email that the state's plan will "incorporate a broader swath of programs" than previous years in order to streamline workforce efforts. Following the period for public comment, the Governor's Workforce Cabinet will submit the plan to the Department of Labor.

GOVERNOR: SEPTEMBER REVENUE UP - The monthly revenue report for September 2019 state tax collections was released Friday (Howey Politics Indiana). General Fund revenues for September totaled $1,709.7 million, which is $91.1 million (5.6%) above estimate based on the April 17, 2019 revised revenue forecast and $101.9 million (6.3%) above revenue in September 2018. Overall, higher than expected collections from sales and use, individual income and corporate taxes and other revenues such as insurance and interest revenues combined to drive General Fund revenues above current year estimates and prior year actuals both on a monthly and fiscal year-to-date basis. While September is a high revenue activity month, most of the revenue collections are projected to come in between December and June. Significant monthly fluctuations are expected and revenues are better interpreted within the context of the longer term trend for fiscal year 2020.

STATEHOUSE: KLOPFER FETAL REMAINS GROW IN NUMBER- Indiana's attorney general said Friday that 165 sets of fetal remains have been found in the Chicago area inside a car owned by a late Indiana abortion doctor, boosting the total number of abandoned sets of fetal remains discovered at properties linked to him to more than 2,400 (Callahan, AP). Attorney General Curtis Hill said the 165 remains were discovered Wednesday in the trunk of a Mercedes-Benz parked at a business property in Dolton, Illinois, where Dr. Ulrich Klopfer had kept a total of eight cars. Those remains are believed to be from abortions Klopfer performed in 2002 at his three Indiana abortion clinics, Hill said. Last month, 2,246 sets of fetal remains were found in Klopfer's Will County, Illinois, garage, after relatives stumbled onto them while cleaning out that building after he died Sept. 3 at age 79.

ISP: TROOPER KILLED IN TIPPECANOE COUNTY ACCIDENT - An Indiana State Trooper died late Friday night when he was on his way to help another trooper in Tippecanoe County (CBS4). The Indiana State Police say 27-year-old Trooper Peter R. Stephan was on his way to help another state trooper who had called for back-up near Americus Township at approximately 10:25 p.m. Friday. Trooper Stephan was driving his 2018 Dodge Charger police car on Old State Road 25 North, just south of Stair Road, when he approached a curve. For some unknown reason, the car went off the east side of the road, rolling at least once and hit a utility pole. EMS personnel responded to the scene. Unfortunately, Trooper Stephan was pronounced dead at the scene as a result of his injuries.

INDOT: RESIDENTS DON'T WANT NEW ALBANY BRIDGE TO CLOSE - Southern Indiana officials are urging Indiana's transportation department not to fully close down an Ohio River bridge during repairs to the span (AP). Local leaders, members of business groups and local colleges shared their concerns Thursday about the Sherman Minton Bridge during a closed meeting with the Indiana Department of Transportation's commissioner. New Albany City Councilman Al Knable says local officials stressed during the meeting that the region cannot afford a full closure of the bridge, which links New Albany and Louisville, Kentucky. The News and Tribune reports that work on an estimated $90 million to $105 million in repairs is expected to begin in early 2021.

HEALTH: MOSQUITO RELATED DEATH IN ELKHART - A person has died in Elkhart County from a rare but deadly mosquito-borne virus that often affects horses. State health official say it's the first human case in Indiana in more than 20 years and only the fourth reported since 1964 (WIBC). Eastern equine encephalitis or EEE has already been found in more than a dozen horses in northern Indiana in 2019. Symptoms of the virus include chills, fever, body aches, and joint pain. Some develop a severe form of the disease that causes brain inflammation, nearly a third of all cases are fatal.

IDEM: HEC CLAIMS IMPROPRIETY IN WATER VIOLATIONS - Claiming state and federal regulators have not taken proper action in response to repeated violations of the Clean Water Act, two environmental organizations plan to bring a lawsuit against ArcelorMittal for "repeated violations" of its federal discharge permit (Mayes, Michigan City News-Dispatch). "ArcelorMittal has a record of 100 violations of the Clean Water Act since 2015, including their spill of ammonia and cyanide into the Little Calumet River in August," according to Indra Frank, environmental health and water policy director of the Hoosier Environmental Council. "In that time neither the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, nor the Indiana Department of Environmental Management has taken any formal enforcement action. This suit is intended to ensure there are consequences for this long record of violations." The HEC filed notice with ArcelorMittal on Oct. 4 of its intent to sue, in conjunction with the Environmental Law & Policy Center.

EDUCATION: ND TRUSTEES GIVE JENKINS ANOTHER 5-YEAR TERM - The University of Notre Dame Board of Trustees has elected Rev. John Jenkins to another five-year term as president of the University (Mills, Inside Indiana Business). Jenkins was first elected in 2005. He's the 17th Holy Cross priest to serve in that role of the 176-year-old school. Jenkins' fourth term will begin immediately following the end of his current term on June 30, 2020. "Like the 16 Holy Cross priests before him, Father Jenkins has led the University of Notre Dame with ultimate distinction," said John Brennan, chairman of the university's board of trustees. "His insight, wisdom and steady hand have allowed Notre Dame to expand its research portfolio, grow globally and continue to provide an undergraduate education of the first rank, all in concert with our Catholic mission."

WHITE HOUSE: TOTAL CHAOS IN SYRIA AFTER TRUMP WITHDRAWAL - President Trump's decision to withdraw U.S. troops from northern Syria, where they had long kept an uneasy peace among competing forces, left the region in upheaval Sunday and the administration scrambling to respond to fast-moving events (Washington Post). In urgent meetings and telephone conferences, top national security officials studied often-conflicting accounts of what was happening on the ground. In public appearances, Cabinet secretaries denied that the United States had "abandoned" its Syrian Kurdish allies to invading Turkish forces and threatened severe sanctions against Ankara. "This is total chaos," a senior administration official said at midday, speaking on the condition of anonymity about the confusing situation in Syria.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP FALSE CLAIMS AT 13,435 - As President Trump approaches his 1,000th day in office Wednesday, he has significantly stepped up his pace of spouting exaggerated numbers, unwarranted boasts and outright falsehoods (Washington Post). As of Oct. 9, his 993rd day in office, he had made 13,435 false or misleading claims, according to the Fact Checker's database that analyzes, categorizes and tracks every suspect statement he has uttered. That's an average of almost 22 claims a day since our last update 65 days ago. One big reason for the uptick: The uproar over Trump's phone call with Ukraine's president on July 25 — in which he urged an investigation of former vice president Joe Biden, a potential 2020 election rival — and the ensuing House impeachment inquiry. We've added a new category of claims, Ukraine probe, and in just a few weeks it has topped 250 entries.

WHITE HOUSE: JUDGE RULES TRUMP MUST TURN TAX RETURNS TO CONGRESS - Congress can seek eight years of President Trump's business records from his accounting firm, a federal appeals court in Washington ruled Friday in one of several legal battles over access to the president's financial data (Washington Post). In a 2-to-1 ruling, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit upheld Congress's broad investigative powers and rejected the president's bid to block lawmakers from subpoenaing the documents. The case is one of several clashes between the Democratic-controlled House and the Republican president over Trump's data that is expected to reach the Supreme Court. In this case, the judges ruled that Trump's arguments — that the subpoenas were invalid because Congress lacked a "legitimate legislative purpose" for its subpoenas — were incorrect. "Contrary to the President's arguments, the Committee possesses authority under both the House Rules and the Constitution to issue the subpoena, and Mazars must comply," Judges David S. Tatel and Patricia A. Millett wrote for the court. Both were appointed by Democratic presidents.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP TAUNTS FOX NEWS AFTER SMITH LEAVES - Fed up with the coverage on his favorite cable news station, President Trump decided late this summer that a direct intervention was needed. So he telephoned the chief executive of Fox News, Suzanne Scott, and let loose (New York Times). In a lengthy conversation, Mr. Trump complained that Fox News was not covering him fairly, according to three people with knowledge of the call. Ms. Scott, who has led the cable network since last year, responded by urging Mr. Trump to sit for an interview with Bret Baier, the channel's chief political anchor, the people said. If the conversation placated Mr. Trump — who has taken to calling Fox News "HOPELESS & CLUELESS!" — his public statements in the weeks afterward did not show it. Irrked by their reporting, he taunted the Fox News anchor Shepard Smith, who resigned from the network on Friday, and its chief national correspondent, Ed Henry. He declared that the Fox News pollsters "suck" after they found majority support for impeachment and openly pined for the network's "good old days."

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP ANNOUNCES LIMITED TRADE DEAL WITH CHINA - President Trump said Friday that the U.S. and China have reached a limited trade deal, marking the first tangible achievement in the 18-month trade war between the world's two largest economies (Washington Post). Speaking in the Oval Office during a meeting with Chinese Vice Premier Liu He, the president said negotiators had reached a "substantial phase one" agreement though details remained to be written down. As part of the partial agreement, the White House agreed not to proceed with plans to increase tariffs on $250 billion in Chinese goods next week from 30 percent from 25 percent. The partial accord, involving major Chinese purchases of U.S. farm products and U.S. tariff concessions, is intended to pave the way for a more complete bargain between Washington and Beijing. Trump and Chinese President Xi Jinping could meet to finalize such an agreement in Chile at an Asian-Pacific leaders summit in mid-November.

WHITE HOUSE: ACTING HOMELAND SECURITY CHIEF QUILTS - President Trump said late Friday that he is replacing Kevin McAleenan, the acting homeland security secretary, after a tenure in which McAleenan reduced border crossings and shepherded major Trump administration immigration policies but clashed with other senior officials and struggled to earn the president's trust (Washington Post). "Kevin McAleenan has done an outstanding job as Acting Secretary of Homeland Security. We have worked well together with Border Crossings being way down. Kevin now, after many years in Government, wants to spend more time with his family and go to the private sector," Trump said of his top immigration official in a tweet. McAleenan had become increasingly frustrated with a cadre of Trump's appointments to senior immigration roles, and he recently told The Washington Post that he was struggling to control the messaging coming out of his department. More hard-line figures have attacked him as insufficiently committed to the president's immigration agenda, while critics of the administration's policies argue McAleenan has used conciliatory rhetoric to lend cover to harsh measures.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP READIES TURKEY SANCTIONS - President Trump plans to sign a new executive order that authorizes "very significant" new sanctions that the U.S. government can impose on Turkey following its decision to launch a military operation in Syria this week (Wall Street Journal). The order allows for sanctions against any person associated with the government of Turkey, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin told reporters on Friday, noting that these sanctions haven't been activated and are contingent on Turkey's actions, including its promise to keep Islamic State detainees in captivity. "We can shut down the Turkish economy if we need to," Mr. Mnuchin said. Officials at the Turkish embassy in Washington didn't immediately respond to a request for comment. However in a speech late Friday, Turkey's president, Recep Tayyip Erdogan, didn't address the possibility of U.S. sanctions, but said Turkey wouldn't bow to foreign pressure.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP/PENCE SCHEDULE - President Trump's schedule, per a White House official: Monday: Trump has no scheduled events. Tuesday: Trump will have lunch with Vice President Pence. He will also participate in a photo opportunity with 2019 Stanley Cup Champions, the St. Louis Blues. Trump will also meet with Secretary of Defense Mark

Esper. Wednesday: Trump will participate in bilateral meetings with Italian President Sergio Mattarella. The two will also hold a joint press conference. Trump will also have lunch with Secretary of State Mike Pompeo. Later he will deliver remarks at an Italian-American Reception. Thursday: Trump will participate in a roundtable with supporters and deliver remarks at a joint fundraising committee luncheon in Fort Worth, Texas. He will also participate in the ribbon-cutting and deliver remarks at the Louis Vuitton – Rochambeau Workshop in Texas' Johnson County. Later, he will deliver remarks at a Keep America Great Rally in Dallas.

PENTAGON: GREEN BERETS 'ASHAMED' OF KURD BETRAYAL - American commandos were working alongside Kurdish forces at an outpost in eastern Syria last year when they were attacked by columns of Syrian government tanks and hundreds of troops, including Russian mercenaries. In the next hours, the Americans threw the Pentagon's arsenal at them, including B-52 strategic bombers. The attack was stopped (New York Times). That operation, in the middle of the American-led campaign against the Islamic State in Syria, showed the extent to which the United States military was willing to protect the Syrian Kurds, its main ally on the ground. But now, with the White House revoking protection for these Kurdish fighters, some of the Special Forces officers who battled alongside the Kurds say they feel deep remorse at orders to abandon their allies. "They trusted us and we broke that trust," one Army officer who has worked alongside the Kurds in northern Syria said last week in a telephone interview. "It's a stain on the American conscience." "I'm ashamed," said another officer who had also served in northern Syria. Both officers spoke on the condition of anonymity to avoid reprisals from their chains of command.

PENTAGON: 2K TROOPS TO SAUDI ARABIA - The Pentagon is deploying three new antimissile systems, two squadrons of jet fighters and approximately 2,000 additional troops to Saudi Arabia in an accelerating U.S. buildup meant to counter Iranian hostilities in the region, officials said Friday (Wall Street Journal). The move represents the largest of three rounds of U.S. military deployments to Saudi Arabia since July, and comes as U.S. lawmakers hold a negative view of arms sales and support to Riyadh. The Pentagon will deploy two Patriot surface-to-air missile batteries as well as a Terminal High Altitude Air Defense system, or Thaad, which provides broader air defenses against the ballistic missile threat for much of the region, officials said.

ILLINOIS: 5 KILLED BY CHICAGO NEIGHBOR - Three men and two woman were killed in a shooting in an apartment building on Chicago's northwest side by a neighbor known to have "anger management issues," police said (AP). Authorities said the man left his apartment Saturday night, went to a neighbor's apartment in the same building and shot and killed four people as they sat around a table eating dinner. The man, identified as a 66-year-old construction worker who has lived in the building for about 15 years, then went to another neighbor's apartment and shot a 53-year-old woman, according to authorities.

COUNTIES: PETA VIDEO SHOWS ABUSED PIGS IN JACKSON - The video contains graphic images of pigs with bloody sores living in cramped spaces (Indiana Public Media). "Several piglets were seen actually trying to stay afloat in the manure pit, where some flooring had collapsed, and the flooring just teemed with maggots, and roaches and rats," says Colin Henstock, a spokesperson for the People for the Ethical of Animals. Henstock says workers were also cutting off the tails of piglets and throwing them across the barn. "That's done without any pain relief at all, as a standard practice in the pig farming industry," says Henstock. PETA asked Indiana State Police to investigate the incident.

COUNTIES: ABATEMENT REJECT THREATNES MADISON SOLAR FARM - Officials in Madison County have rejected a tax abatement for a proposed solar farm, putting the $110 million project in jeopardy (AP). The Madison County Council voted 4-3 on Tuesday to deny the Lone Oak Solar Energy Center's request for a traditional 10-year tax abatement. The proposed solar farm in northern Madison County would generate 120 megawatts of electricity, but officials with developer Invenergy say that not obtaining the tax abatement could make the project financially impossible. The Herald Bulletin reports that company officials say the tax abatement would have saved the company $5 million in personal property taxes over the 10 years.

COURTNEY APPROVED AS NEW MADISON MAYOR: Republican Madison Mayoral candidate Bob Courtney was unanimously approved to serve out the unexpired term of former Mayor Damon Welch at a Jefferson County Republican Caucus meeting Saturday morning at the Red Bicycle Hall (Madison Courier). The meeting, which was open to the public, took only minutes and Courtney was the only applicant for the position. Courtney will replace Acting Mayor Dan Dattilo, a Democrat councilman who stepped in as the city council's pro tem immediately after Welch's unexpected death on Sept. 25. Courtney will serve out the unexpired term of Welch that ends on Dec. 31, 2019. Courtney, who is facing Democratic candidate Julie Berry in the November General Election, took the oath of office at 11 a.m. on Monday at Madison City Hall.

ANALYST CRUNCHES MARIJUANA NUMBERS FOR INDIANA: Legal marijuana would create money and jobs, but maybe not as many as you think. Oregon economist Beau Whitney works with New Frontier Data, which focuses on bringing hard numbers to the cannabis debate. He told a Indiana Economic Development Association conference the cannabis industry has created a quarter-million jobs in the 33 states where it's legal, and predicts the rapid growth of the industry will nearly triple that number in seven years (Berman, WIBC). If cannabis were legalized nationally, he says, you could double that figure to 1.4 million jobs. But Whitney says the taxes on legal marijuana have typically accounted for just .3% of state revenue. In Indiana, that'd translate to about $50 million a year, less than a quarter of what the state collects in cigarette taxes. And Whitney warns not all the pot business will move aboveground. If states ratchet taxes too high or make regulations too expensive to comply with, he says many customers will keep buying from dealers.

BIGGEST DEM DEBATE STAGE TONIGHT: Tonight will be the biggest presidential primary debate in history (New York Times). Twelve Democratic candidates will be stuffed on stage with former Vice President Joseph R. Biden Jr. and Senator Elizabeth Warren of Massachusetts again at the center. Senator Bernie Sanders of Vermont will be scrutinized following his heart attack. Senator Kamala Harris of California will try to reverse her fortunes. And second-tier candidates will seek to do something, anything to ensure a November debate spot. But being the aggressor has yet to pay off in the primary debates. Ms. Harris's June confrontation with Mr. Biden resulted in a temporary high. Former housing secretary Julián Castro's September attack on Mr. Biden's memory seemed to backfire. The question headed into the CNN/New York Times debate on Tuesday night: Can anyone make a splash without being the one who ends up soaked?

ASSAD'S FORCES SURGE BACK INTO SYRIAN VACUUM: Syrian government forces streamed into the country's northeast on Monday, seizing towns where they had not set foot in years and filling a vacuum opened up by President Trump's decision to abandon the United States' Syrian Kurdish allies (New York Times). Less than a week after Turkey launched an incursion into northern Syria with Mr. Trump's assent, President Bashar al-Assad of Syria, considered a war criminal by the United States, has benefited handsomely, striking a deal with the United States' former allies to take the northern border and rapidly gaining territory without a fight. In addition to Mr. al-Assad, Mr. Trump's decision to pull American forces out of the way has also quickly redounded to the gain of Russia and Iran, as well as the Islamic State, as the retreat reconfigures battle lines and alliances in the eight-year war. "For the Syrian regime and Russia, the Americans are leaving, so that is a big achievement," said Hassan Hassan, a Syria analyst at the Center for Global Policy. "In just one day, gone. They don't have to worry about what this presence means for the future."

TRUMP CALLS TO CHINESE, RUSS, ASSAD, 'NAPOLEON' TO PROTECT KURDS: President Trump on Monday said other countries — including China or Russia — should be responsible for protecting the U.S.-allied Kurds in northern Syria amid a groundswell of bipartisan criticism over his decision to pull American forces out of the region (The Hill). Trump took to Twitter to argue against a U.S. presence in the region, even as some of his staunchest allies in Congress assert that his strategy has opened the door for Turkey to slaughter the Kurds and for a resurgence of ISIS. "Let Syria and Assad protect the Kurds and fight Turkey for their own land. I said to my Generals, why should we be fighting for Syria and Assad to protect the land of our enemy?" Trump tweeted. "Anyone who wants to assist Syria in protecting the Kurds is good with me, whether it is Russia, China, or Napoleon Bonaparte. I hope they all do great, we are 7,000 miles away!" he added. Trump is sending Vice President Mike Pence to the region in an attempt to begin negotiations. Pence said Trump spoke directly to Turkish leader Recep Tayyip Erdogan (AP).

TRUMP, PENCE SCRAMBLE TO STOP TURKISH FIASCO: U.S. President Donald Trump on Monday demanded Turkey stop its military incursion in Syria and imposed new sanctions on the NATO ally as Trump scrambled to limit the damage from his much-criticized decision to clear U.S. troops from Turkey's path. Vice President Mike Pence said Trump had told Turkish President Tayyip Erdogan in a phone call on Monday to agree to an immediate ceasefire (Reuters). He also said he would travel to the region soon to try to mediate the crisis. Pence said Trump had been firm with Erdogan on the phone. "The United States of America simply is not going to tolerate Turkey's invasion in Syria any further. We are calling on Turkey to stand down, end the violence and come to the negotiating table," Pence told reporters. Turkey launched a cross-border operation into northern Syria on Wednesday just days after Erdogan told Trump in a phone call that he planned to move ahead with a long-planned move against America's Kurdish allies in the region. Trump abruptly announced a redeployment of 50 American troops from the conflict zone to get them out of harm's way, dismissing criticism that this would leave the Kurds open to attack. This was widely seen as giving Erdogan a green light for his operation. With lawmakers in the U.S. Congress moving to impose sanctions of their own, Trump issued an executive order authorizing sanctions against current and former officials of the Turkish government for contributing to Turkey's military operation in northern Syria. In a statement, Trump said he had increased tariffs on imports of Turkish steel back up to 50 percent, six months after they were reduced, and would immediately stop negotiations on what he called a $100 billion trade deal with Turkey. "Unfortunately, Turkey does not appear to be mitigating the humanitarian effects of its invasion," said Trump.

PELOSI, GRAHAM VOW SANCTIONS ON TURKEY: Democrats in Congress are vowing to quickly slap new sanctions on Ankara and formally oppose President Trump's decision to pull U.S. troops from northern Syria following Turkey's military offensive against Kurdish forces loyal to the United States (The Hill). Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) spoke Monday with Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.), an ally of Trump who is fiercely critical of his policy on Syria, about the need for bipartisan legislation. "As we find ourselves in a situation where the president gave a green light to the Turks to bomb and effectively unleashed ISIS, we must have a stronger sanctions package than what the White House is suggesting," said Pelosi. Republicans have excoriated Trump for his decision, but it's not clear how far they'll go with legislation to explicitly rebuke him. Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) didn't tip his hand Monday on what he will support, but said he was "gravely concerned" and that talks would be ongoing in the Senate this week on how to respond. "Withdrawing American leadership from this pivotal region would not serve our nation's short-, medium- or long-term interests. ... I look forward to discussing what the United States can do to avoid a strategic calamity with my Senate colleagues and with senior administration officials when the Senate returns to Washington this week," he said.

HILL BECAME ALARMED AT UKRAINE PRESSURE: President Trump's former top Russia adviser told House committees Monday that she and other White House officials grew so alarmed about the administration's efforts to push Ukraine to open certain investigations that they raised their concerns with a White House lawyer, according to people familiar with the matter (Wall Street Journal). Fiona Hill, who served on the National Security Council and left the administration in August, testified for about nine hours before three House panels as part of the impeachment inquiry examining the president, his administration and his allies' dealings with Ukraine, including a July call in which he pressed Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky to investigate Democratic presidential candidate Joe Biden. In her testimony, she detailed a July 10 meeting she attended with senior Ukrainian officials, then-National Security Adviser John Bolton, and other U.S. officials in which the U.S. ambassador to the European Union, Gordon Sondland, raised the issue of the investigations, the people said.

BOLTON BECAME CONCERNED ABOUT UKRAINE: The effort to pressure Ukraine for political help provoked a heated confrontation inside the White House last summer that so alarmed John R. Bolton, then the national security adviser, that he told an aide to alert White House lawyers, House investigators were told on Monday (New York Times). Mr. Bolton got into a tense exchange on July 10 with Gordon D. Sondland, the Trump donor turned ambassador to the European Union, who was working with Rudolph W. Giuliani, the president's personal lawyer, to press Ukraine to investigate Democrats, according to three people who heard the testimony. The aide, Fiona Hill, testified that Mr. Bolton told her to notify the chief lawyer for the National Security Council about a rogue effort by Mr. Sondland, Mr. Giuliani and Mick Mulvaney, the acting White House chief of staff, according to the people familiar with the testimony. "I am not part of whatever drug deal Sondland and Mulvaney are cooking up," Mr. Bolton, a Yale-trained lawyer, told Ms. Hill to tell White House lawyers, according to two people at the deposition. (Another person in the room initially said Mr. Bolton referred to Mr. Giuliani and Mr. Mulvaney, but two others said he cited Mr. Sondland.)

MILLER FAINTS AT SECOND ELKHART DEBATE: Republican candidate for mayor Dave Miller vowed to press ahead with his campaign despite a fainting spell Monday that cut short a debate with his opponent (Elkhart Truth). It was the second occurrence of this type for Miller, who fainted during a previous debate at the Matterhorn restaurant on Sept. 10.

REPUBLICAN COUNCILWOMAN ENDORSES HOGSETT: Republican Susie Cordi, who was elected to the council in 2015 and is not seeking re-election this year, is featured in a radio ad released Monday by the campaign for Democratic incumbent Mayor Joe Hogsett (IBJ).

NEW BUTTIGIEG DIGITAL AD AHEAD OF DEBATE: Pete for America released a new digital spot, "Makes More Sense," highlighting the difference between his health care plan, Medicare for All Who Want It, with Elizabeth Warren's support of Medicare for All. The paid digital ad will run in Iowa on a variety of platforms (Howey Politics Indiana). The ad highlights Pete's bold approach to health care would not kick millions of people off their private health care, and would give them the option to choose the plan that's right for their them.

HILL TESTIFIES FOR 10 HOURS: President Trump's former Russia adviser testified under subpoena for roughly 10 hours on Monday as Democrats try to dig into how allies of the president tried to circumvent official policy on Ukraine as part of the impeachment inquiry (The Hill). Fiona Hill, who served as Trump's top analyst on Russia on the National Security Council staff until this summer, is the third witness to appear for a closed-door session before the three House committees leading the impeachment inquiry, following former Ukraine special envoy Kurt Volker and former ambassador to Ukraine Marie Yovanovitch. While lawmakers largely declined to comment on the specifics of Hill's testimony, Democrats asserted that Hill corroborated what they described as a concerted effort by Trump allies who were pushing for the Ukrainian government to investigate the Bidens to remove Yovanovitch from her post in May. At the center of that effort, they say, was the president's personal lawyer Rudy Giuliani.

SAYS GIULIANI RAN 'SHADOW' FOREIGN POLICY: Fiona Hill, the White House's former top Russia adviser, told impeachment investigators on Monday that Rudolph W. Giuliani, the president's personal lawyer, ran a shadow foreign policy in Ukraine that circumvented U.S. officials and career diplomats in order to personally benefit President Trump, according to people familiar with her testimony (Washington Post). Hill, who served as the senior official for Russia and Europe on the National Security Council, was the latest witness in a fast-moving impeachment inquiry focused on whether the president abused his office by using the promise of military aid and diplomatic support to pressure Ukraine into investigating his political rivals.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP PRESSES SANCTIONS ON TURKEY - President Trump authorized sanctions and raised steel tariffs on Turkey, while threatening more-powerful financial penalties if Ankara continued a military offensive in northern Syria launched after Mr. Trump decided to withdraw U.S. troops from the region (Wall Street Journal). Mr. Trump also spoke separately with President Recep Tayyip Erdogan of Turkey and Kurdish Commander Mazloum Abdi and urged them to negotiate an end to the violence, administration officials said. Mr. Trump, calling for an immediate cease-fire, tapped Vice President Mike Pence and White House national security adviser Robert O'Brien to lead a delegation to Turkey to seek a resolution to the conflict. The administration's first punitive actions against Turkey and its effort to start talks came amid widespread criticism on Capitol Hill that Mr. Trump's decision left Kurdish militias that had aided the U.S.-led fight against Islamic State open to attack. Meanwhile, Democratic and Republican lawmakers said they plan to speed through their own sanctions package starting on Tuesday. "I am fully prepared to swiftly destroy Turkey's economy if Turkish leaders continue down this dangerous and destructive path," Mr. Trump said on Monday. "Unfortunately, Turkey does not appear to be mitigating the humanitarian effects of its invasion."

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP/PENCE SCHEDULE - President Trump will have lunch with VP Mike Pence at 12:30 p.m. in the private dining room. He will welcome the 2019 Stanley Cup Champions, the St. Louis Blues, at 3:10 p.m. in the Rose Garden.

NASA: RESEARCHES SAYS LIFE WAS DISCOVERED ON MARS - We may have already discovered the essence of life on Mars 40 years ago, according to a former NASA scientist (CNN). Gilbert V. Levin, who was principal investigator on a NASA experiment that sent Viking landers to Mars in 1976, published an article in the Scientific American journal last Thursday, arguing the experiment's positive results were proof of life on the red planet. The experiment, called Labeled Release (LR), was designed to test Martian soil for organic matter. "It seemed we had answered that ultimate question," Levin wrote in the article. In the experiment, the Viking probes placed nutrients in Mars soil samples -- if life were present, it would consume the food and leave gaseous traces of its metabolism, which radioactive monitors would then detect. To make sure it was a biological reaction, the test was repeated after cooking the soil, which would prove lethal to known life. If there was a measurable reaction in the first and not the second sample, that would suggest biological forces at work -- and that's exactly what happened, according to Levin.

SPORTS: POPE 'ENDORSES' NEW ORLEANS SAINTS - The New Orleans Saints got an unexpected — and probably unintentional — backer for their game at Jacksonville (AP). Pope Francis, the head of the Catholic Church, included the Saints' Twitter logo in a tweet Sunday morning — one New Orleans football fans took as a good omen for their team. "Today we give thanks to the Lord for our new #Saints. They walked by faith and now we invoke their intercession," the Pope tweeted after canonizing five new saints at a mass at Vatican City. The hashtag and capitalization of Saints added the Fleur de Lis, the emblem associated with the Saints and worn on the team's helmets.

XI WARNS OF 'CRUSHED BODIES AND SHATTERED BONES': As street battles between protesters and police continue to escalate in Hong Kong, China's authoritarian leader warned Sunday any further attempt to divide the country will literally be crushed (Fox News). Chinese President Xi Jinping made the comments during a visit to Nepal, where he became the first Chinese president in more than two decades to visit the country. "Anyone attempting to split China in any part of the country will end in crushed bodies and shattered bones," he told Nepalese Prime Minister K.P. Sharma Oli, China's state broadcaster CCTV reported. "And any external forces backing such attempts dividing China will be deemed by the Chinese people as pipe-dreaming!"

RICHMOND: MOTHER CHARGES IN SCHOOL SHOOTING - The mother of a teenager who killed himself at a Richmond school in 2018 has been charged. Mary York faces charges in Wayne County. On December 13, 2018, 14-year-old Brandon Clegg, brought a gun to Dennis Intermediate School, shot at police, then shot and killed himself. At the time, York was credited with calling 911 before the shooting, allowing officers to respond more quickly. York is now facing charges of dangerous control of a child, two counts of neglect of a dependent, and three counts of neglect of a dependent (WIBC). According to court documents, Clegg had made statements to the staff at Fayette Regional Hospital in Connersville on May 30, 2018, about wanting to go into a school and kill people who had bullied him. That same month, court documents state Clegg expressed suicidal thoughts to a counselor at Centerstone in Richmond. Clegg was prescribed medication while at Fayette Regional. He told York the medication made him feel weird, and she said she didn't make him take it. York also took him out of the inpatient mental health treatment program because her insurance wouldn't pay the costs and she couldn't afford it, court documents say.

FORT WAYNE: TEACHERS GET 2.5% PAY RAISE - The Fort Wayne Community Schools board approved a contract Monday that includes raises for teachers (LeBlanc, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). The two-year agreement with the Fort Wayne Education Association – the union representing teachers – covers July 1, 2019, through June 30, 2021. Base salaries this year increased 2.5%, which brings the salary range for teachers to $40,078 to $70,891. The raises are retroactive. Next year, a 1.5% bump increases the range to $40,679 to $71,496. Board members also approved a 2.5% raise for non-union employees, which includes central office staff and district administrators. Superintendent Wendy Robinson lauded teachers, who she said have the best interests of the district at heart. "Which is why we're able to get things done," she said.

FORT WAYNE: COLISEUM TO HOST WOMEN'S NCAA TOURNEY - Collegiate women's basketball will bring a bit more March Madness to Fort Wayne's Memorial Coliseum. And Coliseum officials couldn't be happier (Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). Public-admission tickets to the first-ever Division I NCAA women's regional championship games in Fort Wayne go on sale at 10 a.m. today. The games will take place March 28 to 30, with regional winners moving on to the Sweet 16. "It's the highest-level college basketball tournament that Fort Wayne has ever hosted," said Nathan Dennison, the venue's vice president of sales. "It's a big deal."

INDIANAPOLIS: COUNCIL PASSES BUDGET 22-2 - The Indianapolis City-County Council passed Mayor Joe Hogsett's 2020 budget Monday night, but not without some discussion on a big topic on some councilors' minds (WRTV). The $1.2 billion budget passed with a vote of 22-2. Michael McQuillen, R-District 4, and Brian Mowery, R-District 25, voted against it. Democrat Christine Scales was absent from the meeting due to an illness. A year ago, the 2019 budget passed unanimously among both Republican and Democratic councilors, a fact the mayor's office frequently touts. But frequent unbudgeted financial requests throughout the year frustrated some Republicans on the council, leading to the two "no" votes. "We want this to be honest," Councilor Jefferson Shreve, R-District 16, said before the vote. "We can say we have an honestly balanced budget. We just want an honestly balanced budget. We want the budget we pass tonight to be the one we live with from Jan. 1." Shreve, who voted in favor of the budget, said councilors looked at the budget with more skepticism this year. One unbudgeted request came in March, when the Indianapolis Department of Business and Neighborhood Services requested $822,000 for 28 new vehicles. BNS requested buying the new cars because the department had $900,000 more than what was initially budgeted for 2018. BNS budgeted for $20.4 million, but actually made $21.3 million. BNS, unlike other city agencies, gets its self-funded budget through fees and permits.

INDIANAPOLIS: OSILI COMMENTS AS COUNCIL PASSES BUDGET - Following this evening's passage of the 2020 Indianapolis-Marion County Budget, Council President Osili has released the following statement (Howey Politics Indiana): "I'm pleased with the outcome of the Council's vote this evening on the 2020 budget for the City of Indianapolis and Marion County. Four years in a row, Mayor Hogsett has presented a fiscally responsible budget that invests strategically in our city's infrastructure, public safety, and criminal justice reform. The 2020 budget adopted tonight by the Council includes significant increases in funding for IMPD, IFD, community crime prevention grants, and the arts. It does so without raising taxes."

EVANSVILLE: COUNCIL PASSES $431M BUDGET - Evansville City Council approved the 2020 city budget Monday night. The $431 million budget passed 8-1. The one abstaining vote came from Republican Justin Elpers (WFIE-TV). Elpers voted no, saying he was in favor of an amendment concerning upping insurance premiums for non-bargaining city employees, which did not pass. "Our city employees are not paid well. That issue with the city health insurance for non-bargaining employees was an issue for those employees that barely make minimum wage working for the city. We can look at that maybe in the future. It's not cheap to run your city. 431 million dollars, for example, 35 million dollars to run the police department so none of this stuff is cheap." The budget also included funding for an aerial ladder fire truck, new police vehicles, the penguin exhibit at the zoo, and a number of street projects as well as construction funding for the Deaconess Aquatic Center.

WANNATAH: FIRE KILLS 2,000 RACING PIGEONS - A structure housing nearly 2,000 racing pigeons from around the world burned to the ground late Saturday night or early Sunday morning, incinerating all the birds and prematurely ending the 2019 Hoosier Classic Million Dollar One Loft Race (NWI Times). Hoosier Loft owners and race organizers Jim and Kelly Ward, of Wanatah, said their family is "completely devastated" by the fire that also killed four of their dogs, according to friends of the family. "Our family has spent hundreds of hours working in this loft and it has become our life," the Wards said on the race website. "We are thankful that our children are safe, but we are devastated at the loss of something that we lived to do on a daily basis."

FULTON COUNTY: TRIAL FOR BUS STOP HOMICIDES STARTS TODAY - The jury trial for a woman accused of killing three kids and injuring a fourth when she disregarded the stop arm and lights on a school bus last year is set to begin on Tuesday (WRTV). Alyssa Shepherd is charged with three counts of reckless homicide and one count of disregarding the stop arms on a school bus causing injury. Police say she was driving a Toyota Tacoma on State Road 25 sometime after 7 a.m. when she allegedly "disregarded" the stop arm and lights on a stopped school bus in front of a mobile home park, striking four kids who were crossing the street to board the bus. Shepherd told police she saw the lights flashing, but she didn't realize it was a school bus until the kids were in front of her, according to court documents.

ALLEN COUNTY: RTL TO HONOR SWAYZE - A longtime policy advocate for Indiana Right to Life will receive the prestigious Daniel Award at tonight's Allen County Right to Life dinner in Fort Wayne (Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). Sue Swayze Liebel is from Indianapolis, where she has worked for more than 25 years in policy development, program design and implementation, lobbying and political strategy. Swayze currently serves as the state policy director for the Susan B. Anthony List in Washington, D.C. She is responsible for implementing the program's mission of advancing women lawmakers who are dedicated to ending abortion by passing laws that save lives.

Aptive Plc, a mobility tech company formerly known as Delphi Automotive, plans to open an engineering lab in Westfield that will create 50 high-paying jobs, the city announced Monday night.

The company plans to lease 53,000 square feet inside the Westfield Business Centre and invest more than $9 million in property and equipment.

The building, 17001-17075 Oak Ridge Road, is southwest of the intersection of U.S. 31 and State Road 32.

The jobs created will pay an average wage of almost $80,000 annually, the city said. Work in the lab will include environmental testing, product/material analysis and on-vehicle development.

“The team at Aptiv will be working on future-focused technology, and I could not be more excited to welcome them to Westfield,” Westfield Mayor Andy Cook said in written remarks. “These are exactly the types of high-tech investments we have been working to attract. This is a statement that our community can attract a diverse workforce to support this kind of innovation.”

The Westfield City Council on Monday approved a 5-year personal property tax abatement for the company phased in at 20% a year.

Westfield Business Centre, a 133,000-square-foot spec building that opened a year ago, is now fully leased. Other tenants are Grinds LLC, ETI Fab and 3rd Dimension Industrial Printing.

Aptiv, headquartered in Dublin, Ireland, was formed in May 2017 when Delphi Automotive Plc spun off its Powertrain Systems segment, which included its engine management systems and aftermarket operations, into Delphi Technologies Plc.

The remaining company was renamed Aptiv. It focuses on electrical/electronic architecture (vehicle electrical systems) and electronics and safety (software and sensing systems, computing platforms, advanced safety systems and automated driving).

The company reported full-year 2018 revenue of $14.4 billion, an increase of 12% from the prior year.

State funds fuel local road work

Staff Report

TheStatehouseFile.com

INDIANAPOLIS—Communities across Indiana will be on the receiving end of $99.2 million in state matching funds for local road projects.

Gov. Eric Holcomb and Commissioner Joe McGuiness of the Indiana Department of Transportation announced the funding in the Ohio River town of Madison, where Jefferson County Roads: Community Crossings Initiative.

“High-quality local roads and bridges are an important part of our formula for attracting jobs, growing our economy, and building strong communities,” Holcomb said in a news release. In all, 229 towns, cities and counties across Indiana are receiving the money.

The Community Crossings Initiative has provided more than $612 million in state matching funds for construction projects.

In response to local requests to help manage project flow, INDOT now accepts applications in both January and July, with a $1 million cap annually per community. An estimated $100 million will be available for communities opting to apply during the January 2020 call for projects.

“INDOT is excited to partner with communities through this matching grant program to make infrastructure investments that contribute to the success of all Hoosier cities, towns, and counties,” McGuiness said.

To receive a grant, local governments must provide local matching funds, 50 percent for larger communities or 25 percent for smaller communities, from a funding source approved for road and bridge construction.

Local governments must also submit an INDOT-approved asset management plan for maintaining existing roads and bridges. State law requires annually that 50 percent of the available matching funds be awarded to communities within counties with a population of 50,000 or fewer people.

The list of all communities receiving matching funds is online at www.in.gov/indot/communitycrossings.

Mike Grant | Times Herald Construction crews work on a street in Washington as part of the Community Crossings program. Milestone Contractors are expected to wrap up work in Washington next week. A new round of projects was just announced by INDOT.

f t G+ in p @

The State of Indiana will be sending millions of dollars to area cities, towns and counties as part of the Community Crossings grant funding. This is the second round for funding this year that state wide will provide nearly $100 million dollar for projects in 229 Indiana cities, towns and counties.

Two of the grants are headed to a couple of the smaller communities in Daviess County. Elnora landed a grant of $92,208. “We will utilize the grant money for town road improvement,” said Elnora Town Board member Jed Jerrels. “This is funding for phase two of road improvements, and we are looking forward to getting started hopefully early next spring.”

The small town of Cannelburg received a grant for $95,464.20. “We are tickled to death to get this,” said Cannelburg Town Board President Dale DeLong. “Our streets had not been paved for 15 years. This is the third grant we have received and when this is completed, we will have repaved all of our streets.”

The plan in Cannelburg is to repave CR 900E from U.S. 50 to CR 100N. "CR 900E is our last street in town to pave," said DeLong. "Because so much of the traffic goes out into the county, the county has agreed to pick up half of the tab for the matching funds. It is fantastic that we can work together on this. We'll probably try to get it done in the spring. It needs work, right now we are just patching the patches."

"That is really great news for Elnora and Cannelburg," said Daviess County Highway Supervisor Phil Cornelius. "It will be good to work with Cannelburg to get that piece of CR 900E improved."

Sharing in match funding for the communities in the county is not unusual. When CR 650E in Montgomery was repaved under a Community Crossings grant the county was involved in putting in the matching funds.

This time around neither Daviess County or Washington received grants. For the county, they had tapped out their eligibility. "You are capped at $1 million," said Cornelius. "We received that amount in the spring."

The money is going toward the repaving and improvement of CR 1000N from SR 57 in Plainville east to the Daviess-Martin County line. That $1.2 million project is being done by Milestone Contractors and is expected to start Wednesday. Officials expect the road to be closed for 1.5 miles each day as the work moves across one of most rural parts of the county right in the middle of harvest.

"We are going to ask people to be patient with them," said Cornelius. "If they have a part of the road closed off it will only be for one day and then people can use it the following day. They will have flaggers to help with traffic."

That project should take about nine days to complete the paving, depending on the weather, and then the contractor will come back and work on the approaches and shoulders.

Loogootee will be receiving one of the larger grants in the area. INDOT approved $763,531.50 for the Martin County community. "We are ecstatic with this news," said Loogootee Mayor Noel Harty. "We had been turned down the last couple of times, so we couldn't feel more blessed."

Loogootee intends to work on two problems at once with its grant. One element will be the paving and the other will include fixing some surface drainage issues. "This will be in a number of locations in the city," said Harty. "This will fix some very old problems."

All of the projects approved in the area will require a 25% match. Loogootee will use some money from its storm water fund and motor vehicle highway fund to cover that cost. "Two or three more grants like this and we might be able to clear up all of those drainage problems," said Harty.

Besides Loogootee, Martin County landed a Community Crossings grant for $574,429. That is the second Community Crossings grant approved for Martin County this year. "We're really happy with that," said Martin County Commissioner Paul George. "That's about $800,000 this year."

Martin County plans to replace a couple of bridges and fix a couple of roads with the latest funding. "This is a good way to spend our road dollars," said George. "We have road projects planned out for the next couple of years. We just have to keep the financing coming."

Neither Washington or Daviess County received Community Crossings money during this round of funding, but both are working on plans for applications next year.

"We are definitely going back in the spring," said Cornelius. "I have a project in mind, but I need to run it by the commissioners first. It will probably be in the million-dollar range. I try to get as much money as possible to put on our roads. I hate to leave money on the table."

"We did not apply this fall, but we probably will in the spring," said Washington Mayor Joe Wellman. "We are working on a plan with our project engineers on the Business 50 project to try and leverage some Community Crossings grants. It would be good to be able to get the state to pick up even more on the cost of that project."

In announcing the latest rounds of grants state officials pointed out that since its inception Community Crossings has provided $612 million for road projects around Indiana.

"High-quality local roads and bridges are an important part of our formula for attracting jobs, growing our economy, and building strong communities," said Indiana Governor Eric Holcomb.

"Efficiently and safely moving people and commerce is vital to the quality of life and vitality of our communities," added INDOT Commissioner Joe McGuinness. "INDOT is excited to partner with communities through this matching grant program to make infrastructure investments that contribute to the success of all Hoosier cities towns and counties."

ANDERSON – Madison County and four area cities and towns have been awarded $2.2 million through the Community Crossing grant program to upgrade local roads.

Indiana Gov. Eric Holcomb announced Thursday the second distribution of funds for road improvements managed by the Indiana Department of Transportation.

Since the program was started, the state has provided more than $612 million to local communities for construction projects through the Next Level Roads plan.

INDOT will distribute an estimated $100 million during the January 2020 application process.

In addition to Madison County, the city of Alexandria and the towns of Lapel, Edgewood and Daleville were approved for funding.

Local communities with a population of less than 50,000 people are required to provide 25% in matching funds, and Madison County was required to provide a 50% match.

Anderson received $1 million in the first round of awards this year.

Daleville Town Council President Bill Walters said that, with the additional $211,488 that was awarded, the town will complete work on Main Street and Daleville Road. Daleville has received about $700,000 through the Community Crossings grant program over the past four years, according to Walters.

“Every street in Daleville will be repaved by the spring or summer of 2020,” he said.

The town of Lapel received a grant of $315,000. Dennis Molina, Lapel clerk/treasurer, said the funds would be used on Main Street north of Indiana 13. The work will include the replacement of curbs and sidewalks where necessary.

Some of the funds will be used on Ninth Street between Main and Ford streets and south on Ford Street to Brookside Cemetery, according to Molina.

“This is a great program,” he said. “Last year we used the matching funds on 950 West and 750 South.”

Matching funds came from the town's Local Road & Street fund and from the Cascadden family's donation to the community, Molina said.

Katherine Tanner, Edgewood clerk/treasurer, said the town would use the $300,000 to repave Winding Way and several other streets. The town's matching funds of $100,000 came from the Local Road & Street and Motor Vehicle Highway funds, Tanner said.

Joe Copeland, Madison County engineer, previously said that the county's $1 million state grant would be used, along with $1.2 million in matching funds from the county, for four road projects:

- 200 North from 200 West to 600 West, estimated $799,195 cost
- 300 East from Ind. 236 to County Road 67, estimated $399,677 cost
- 700 West from Ind. 128 to Ind. 37, $795,474 cost
- 600 North from 350 East to 500 East, $245,504 cost

Alexandria received $426,067 through the grant program. Mayor Ron Richardson said the funds will be used to address storm water issues in the city.

Richardson noted that his city is working on an application, due in August, for a $600,000 Community Crossings grant. He said the city would provide $200,000 in matching grant funds for storm water work in Alexandria.

Anderson is using the $1 million state grant to repave 38th Street from Scatterfield Road to Columbus Avenue and from Madison Avenue to the railroad tracks at Raible Avenue. The funds will also enable the repaving of Broadway from School Street north to the intersection with Indiana 9.

Notice of intent to sue ArcelorMittal filed over Clean Water Act violations

By JEFF MAYES - Staff Writer Oct 11, 2019

1 of 3

AP file photoPhoto shows dead fish in the East Branch of the Little Calumet River in Portage following a spill of toxic chemical into the stream from the ArcelorMittal steel mill on Aug. 11. Two environmental groups have filed notice of intent to sue the steelmaker over violations of the Clean Water Act, the second such notice filed in the wake of the incident.

PORTAGE – Claiming state and federal regulators have not taken proper action in response to repeated violations of the Clean Water Act, two environmental organizations plan to bring a lawsuit against ArcelorMittal for "repeated violations" of its federal discharge permit.

"ArcelorMittal has a record of 100 violations of the Clean Water Act since 2015, including their spill of ammonia and cyanide into the Little Calumet River in August," according to Indra Frank, environmental health and water policy director of the Hoosier Environmental Council.

"In that time neither the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, nor the Indiana Department of Environmental Management has taken any formal enforcement action. This suit is intended to ensure there are consequences for this long record of violations."

The HEC filed notice with ArcelorMittal on Oct. 4 of its intent to sue, in conjunction with the Environmental Law & Policy Center.

ArcelorMittal's steel mill in Burns Harbor is located near the Indiana Dunes National Park, and discharges water into the East Branch of the Little Calumet River, which flows directly into Lake Michigan, the groups said in a joint statement.

"ArcelorMittal's violations include exceeding its permit limits for total cyanide, free cyanide and ammonia. In August 2019, ArcelorMittal's excessive pollution, including significant amounts of cyanide, killed 3,000 fish and closed a beach on Lake Michigan at the National Park," the statement said.

Despite requirements in its permits, "ArcelorMittal did not even report that incident until two days after citizens reported the fish kill" to IDEM and the Indiana Department of Natural Resources, the statement said. "Neither IDEM, nor the U.S. EPA has taken any formal enforcement action against ArcelorMittal for the August 2019 incident or any of the other 100 alleged violations."

Frank said that has to change.

"Without consequences, the pattern of violations and the damage to Lake Michigan may continue. Meaningful consequences will create a strong incentive for ArcelorMittal to prevent future violations."

And federal law makes that possible, according to Jeffrey Hammons, staff attorney for the ELPC.

"The Clean Water Act authorizes citizens to sue when the government lets us down," he said.

"ArcelorMittal needs to be held accountable, and IDEM and EPA need to do a better job of protecting Lake Michigan, Indiana Dunes National Park, and the people who enjoy them."

The suit would be the second threatened against ArcelorMittal in the wake of the August spill.

Portage attorney Thomas Dogan filed a notice in late August of intent to sue, with plaintiffs including the Portage Port Authority, Marquette Yacht Club, VI Marina, Dunes Harbor LLC and KLM Dunes, along with nearly 70 people who claim they were affected by the spill.

Dogan said at the time the plaintiffs "consist of persons and businesses who recreate, enjoy the natural resources, engage in healthy exercise, instill proper morals, raise their families, enjoy hunting, fishing and other outdoor activities; and conduct legal businesses within the area of the Burns Waterway and nearby Lake Michigan and its environs near Portage."

All are "adversely affected by pollution from the ArcelorMittal Burns Harbor Plant" and intend to sue "for violations of the Clean Water Act resulting from the facility's operation in violation of the law," he said.

In the latest notice of intent, the "total cyanide load" discharged from one just outfall at the ArcelorMittal was 548% higher than the legal limit on Aug. 12; 795% higher on Aug. 13; 557% higher on Aug 14; and 419% higher on Aug. 15, according to Hammons. The amount of ammonia discharged also far exceeded the legal limit, he said.

"The EPA and IDEM have said they will file inspection reports about the Aug. 11 spill, but neither agency has taken formal enforcement action over any of the steel mill spills over the past four years," Hammons said.

"In the face of this repeated, illegal damage to Lake Michigan, we can no longer just stand by and wait for the state and federal government to act," Frank said. "The damage has to stop for the sake of everyone who gets their drinking water from the Lake; everyone who swims, fishes, or boats in the lake; and the wildlife that make their home in the lake."

She believes state funding cuts have hampered IDEM's ability to properly act.

"The HEC is concerned that chronic underfunding of IDEM is contributing to its lack of action," she said. "The Indiana legislature and Governor's office have repeatedly cut IDEM's budget over more than a decade, so that they are now operating with 100 fewer staff than they had in 2005.

"Indiana needs IDEM's funding fully restored so that polluters can be held accountable and our environmental problems can be addressed."

ArcelorMittal said in a statement it is unable to comment on the notice of intent to sue, but it continues to focus on compliance and reassuring community stakeholders that they hear and take their concerns "very seriously."

The company continues to monitor the Little Calumet River and has been in compliance since Aug. 17, the statement said. And it is working with federal and state authorities to address issues and concerns from the August release.

Save the Dunes, which is not a party to the pending suit, applauded the news.

"Accountability in situations such as the recent cyanide and ammonia exceedances from ArcelorMittal takes a multitiered, strategic approach," a statement from the group said. "We're pleased to share that our colleagues at the Environmental Law and Policy Center and Hoosier Environmental Council are pursuing a lawsuit. We will continue to work closely with them as we move forward together to change Indiana's toxic reputation."

Michigan City-based outdoor guide Todd Hatfield, who found and reported a smaller diesel fuel spill on Trail Creek earlier in the summer, says IDEM "dropped the ball" on both spills.

He said when he reported the Trail Creek spill, an IDNR representative responded immediately, but no one from IDEM showed up until the following morning, which "allowed the fuel to continue spilling into the stream and into Lake Michigan for another 12-14 hours."

He said he tried to contact IDEM about the Trail Creek spill, and later the Little Calumet spill because the latter affected his business. "A lot of people thought that spill was affecting water all along the lakefront," he said.

"IDEM was completely incompetent on handling that. I called them about that – it was bad for business – and while I had someone on the phone I asked about the spill on Trail and why nothing was ever said – and they tried to deny that it happened.

"I said I was the one who called it in and have video proof. I said that I wanted a full detailed report about what happened, how [it happened], how bad, is it cleaned up ... I have yet to receive that info."

USS INDIANAPOLIS TO BE COMMISSIONED ON SATURDAY: The Navy says it will commission its new USS Indianapolis combat vessel at a northwestern Indiana port Saturday (AP). The ceremony marking the ship's entry into the Navy's active fleet is set to begin at 10 a.m. CDT at Burns Harbor along Lake Michigan. It's the fourth military vessel carrying the Indianapolis name. The second USS Indianapolis was sunk by a Japanese submarine in July 1945 while returning from a Pacific island where it delivered key components for the Hiroshima atomic bomb. Only 317 of its nearly 1,200 crewmen survived the sinking and days in shark-infested waters. The new ship was built at a Wisconsin shipyard and will be based near Jacksonville, Florida. It's a Freedom-class littoral ship designed to be highly maneuverable for missions such as mine-clearing and anti-submarine warfare. Planned by about 25 to 30 volunteers from Indiana, the commissioning will feature many traditional ceremonies that include assuming command of the USS Indianapolis, setting the first watch, and the breaking of the flag of the under secretary of the Navy (NWI Times). Jill Donnelly, the wife of former U.S. Senator Joe Donnelly, serves as the ship's sponsor and will give the ceremonial first order to "man our ship and bring her to life." After arriving at the Port of Indiana-Burns Harbor, the crew of the USS Indianapolis went on a whirlwind tour of the state, visiting war memorials in Indianapolis, the Bankers Life Fieldhouse where the Indiana Pacers play, the Notre Dame campus in South Bend, and the ArcelorMittal Burns Harbor steel mill.

HILL DENIES GROPING ALLEGATIONS: A relaxed, conversational Attorney General Curtis Hill took the stand Thursday to deny he touched anyone in a sensual or intimate manner at a legislative party in March 2018. Instead, he described touching people throughout the evening as leaning in to hear or guiding someone to a spot by the bar with his hand on their backs (Kelly, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). Hill admitted nursing a vodka martini and sipping on a Fireball shot, saying he wasn't intoxicated but alcohol played a part in his relaxed attitude that night. "I was shocked. I was troubled. Apparently, there were...women out there who believed or perceived that I had done something inappropriate," Hill said when he learned of the allegations. But he also framed himself as a victim of sorts – saying no one in the legislative branch ever apologized for leaking a confidential report to the public that ultimately spurred this week's disciplinary hearing. "I was concerned this was now becoming a political attack," Hill said. Hill said he remembers seeing Rep. Mara Candelaria Reardon at the event and leaning in to hear her. He placed his hand on her back and was surprised to feel skin. He was unaware she was wearing a backless dress. But he denied moving his hand down to her butt and said he didn't hear her yell at him to back off. Hill similarly denied touching Gabrielle Brock, Samantha Lozano and Niki DaSilva inappropriately.

HILL RECOUNTS MEETING WITH BOSMA, LONG: on June 29, 2018, Attorney General Curtis Hill got a call about an emergency conference call with legislative leaders. That is when he found out that a probe had been started and that the Indianapolis Star was working on a story (Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). He didn't know much about the allegations and no names of the women were used. At the end of the call Hill told House Speaker Brian Bosma to tell the women involved if he did or said anything that made them feel uncomfortable he apologized. A few days later, on July 2, he met in person with Bosma and then-Senate President Pro Tem David Long. Bosma told Hill then that "the situation has gone from bad to worse" and said the confidential memo prepared by the Taft law firm to assess legislative liability had been leaked. They then refused to show Hill the memo because it was confidential. "My attitude in the meeting started to change," Hill said. "I was unable to see the report and I was getting agitated." He said once something gets in the public it can't be taken back. He noted he wasn't interviewed for the report, which was one-sided with no context. He said it was a "heart-sinking moment" when he read the report because he knew the public would assume it was true even though it was void of form and substance. Hill noted some inaccuracies in that report. Reardon also noted inaccuracies during testimony earlier this week.

BRAUN, COONS FORM BIPARTISAN CLIMATE CHANGE CAUCUS: Democratic Sen. Chris Coons (Del.) and Republican Sen. Mike Braun (Ind.) are launching the Senate Climate Solutions Caucus aimed at fostering bipartisan cooperation on climate change (Axios). Coons, in remarks to NBC News, laid out some areas of potential cooperation. "Bipartisan ideas already exist — from improving energy efficiency and investing in R&D to supporting energy security and workforce development," he said. The Washington Examiner writes that Republican Sen. Lisa Murkowski (Alaska), who chairs the Energy and Natural Resources Committee, will join the effort.

P.E. MacALLISTER DIES AT AGE 101: Philanthropist and prominent Indianapolis businessman Pershing Edwin MacAllister —better known as P.E. MacAllister—has died at the age of 101. MacAllister was named after General John Joseph "Black Jack" Pershing (CBS4). He was born in 1918 and grew up in Wisconsin. After graduating from Carroll College in Waukesha, Wisconsin, he joined the U.S. Army Air Corps. He served in World War II in the European and African theaters between May 1942 and August 1944. He was discharged from the Army in 1945 and married Violet Rebecca Cochran. They had four children together, three girls and a boy. In May 1945, he began working for his father at MacAllister Machinery. He made his way up through the ranks, serving as a mechanic, salesman and warehouse worker. He became president of the company in 1952. He and his brother, Dave, ran the company for 30 years as it continued to grow and thrive. He was known for his work ethic and often went to the office on Saturdays. A longtime resident of Indianapolis, MacAllister and his family were regulars at Northminster Presbyterian Church. A supporter of the arts, he served as president of the Indianapolis Opera Company and as a board member of the Indiana State Symphony Society. He was vice chair of the Edyvean Repertory Theatre Board and a member of the President's Advisory Committee on the Arts. He served as president of the Capital Improvement Board, overseeing construction of the Indiana Convention Center and the Hoosier Dome, two projects that transformed the city.

PENCE TAKES SWIPE AT NBA IN CHINA CRITICISM: Vice President Mike Pence took a swipe at Nike and the NBA on Thursday in a speech criticizing communist China's record on trade and human rights, saying American corporations have been too willing to ignore censorship and repression in pursuit of profits (AP). Pence singled out the shoe company for removing Houston Rockets merchandise from stores in China after the team's general manager angered the Chinese government with a tweet supporting anti-government protesters in Hong Kong. The NBA was acting like a "wholly owned subsidiary" of China's "authoritarian regime" for failing to stand up to the government's criticism of Rockets General Manager Daryl Morey, he said. "Nike promotes itself as a so-called 'social-justice champion,' but when it comes to Hong Kong, it prefers checking its social conscience at the door," the vice president said in a speech laying out the Trump administration's approach to China. The speech was delivered as President Donald Trump seeks to close a new trade deal with China, with Pence cast in a hard-line role. China fired back at Vice President Mike Pence's criticism on human rights, calling his speech 'lies' and chiding him for ignoring U.S. problems like racism and wealth disparity (Politico Playbook).

REPUBLICANS STRUGGLE TO DEFEND TRUMP; ATTACK THE PROCESS: Republicans in Congress struggled for a second consecutive day Thursday to defend President Trump against Democrats' impeachment inquiry amid a steady stream of damaging revelations about his conduct, leveling another symbolic objection to a process they said was fundamentally unfair (New York Times). One day after House lawmakers tried to block an impeachment witness by sowing chaos with a protest in the Capitol's secure meeting rooms, Senate Republicans joined the fray by offering a resolution condemning the House investigation and demanding that Democrats hold a formal vote authorizing the inquiry. But the move left the president's allies in the same awkward place they have been for more than two weeks: unable or unwilling to mount a vigorous defense on the substance of the allegations and focused instead on trying to shake the public's faith in the House's impeachment process. Senator Lindsey Graham of South Carolina, a fierce defender of the president and a lead sponsor of the Senate resolution, dodged questions on Thursday about the president's dealings with Ukraine. He called the impeachment investigation "a star-chamber type inquiry" and accused Democrats of pursuing an investigation that is "out of bounds, is inconsistent with due process as we know it."

REP. PENCE SEES NO CONFLICT OF INTEREST: Rep. Greg Pence, R-Indiana, does not believe his role on one of the committees in charge of the impeachment inquiry against President Donald J. Trump constitutes a conflict of interest due to his relationship to the vice president and will not recuse himself from the investigation, said Kyle Robertson, Pence's chief of staff (East, Columbus Republic). Pence, who is the older brother of Columbus native and Vice President Mike Pence, is one of 21 Republican and 26 Democratic House members who sit on the House Foreign Affairs Committee, one of three committees leading the impeachment inquiry. The other two committees include the House Intelligence Committee and the House Oversight and Reform Committee. If Trump is impeached and removed from office, Pence's brother would be sworn in as president. As part of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, Rep. Pence has had access to closed-door depositions from U.S. officials speaking about Trump's and other officials' actions in Ukraine and the phone call between Trump and Ukraine President Volodymyr Zelenskyy in which Trump said he would like the Ukraine president to investigate Democratic presidential candidate Joe Biden and his son.

REP. BAIRD TOOK PART IN GOP INQUIRY PIZZA PROTEST: About three dozen Republican lawmakers — including U.S. Rep. Jim Baird from Indiana's 4th District — protested how House Democrats are conducting the impeachment inquiry of President Donald Trump and temporarily halted the testimony of Defense Department official Laura Cooper Wednesday (Lafayette Journal & Courier). Cooper, who serves as the deputy assistant secretary of defense for Russia, Ukraine, and Eurasia, was subpoenaed for a closed-door session with the House Intelligence, Foreign Affairs, and Oversight and Reform committees. She was expected to answer questions about how military aid was withheld from Ukraine as Trump sought the investigation of his political rival.

HATE GROUP PAID FOR BARTHOLOMEW SHERIFF'S WHITE HOUSE TRIP: Bartholomew County Sheriff Matt Myers was one of 200 sheriffs from across the country to attend a White House conference and briefing on "Secure Borders and Safe Communities" from Sept. 24-26 in Washington (Columbus Republic). Myers said his main purpose for attending was to talk about drug enforcement — an important issue in Bartholomew County and communities nationwide — and how proper border and port security is needed in that regard. It's understandable why Myers and other sheriffs would want to attend the conference. However, the organization that paid for Myers' trip and the trips of six other Indiana sheriffs has been the source of concern. The Federation for American Immigration Reform (FAIR) paid about $1,100 for Myers' trip. FAIR is considered to be a hate group by the Southern Poverty Law Center, whose definition of a hate group mirrors the Federal Bureau of Investigation's definition of a hate crime. FAIR also has been criticized by the Anti-Defamation League for its views considered to be pro-white and anti-immigrant.

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: The best story of the day is how the crew of the new USS Indianapolis traveled the state to learn all things Hoosier. Some 11,000 people are expected to attend Saturday's commissioning at Burns Harbor. The crew shares an important American legacy with those who died and survived the 1945 sinking of the third ship bearing this name. We emphatically welcome the new USS Indianapolis. May she serve our great nation with pride and dedication. - Brian A. Howey

RIDENOUR HAS BIG MUNCIE MAYORAL MONEY LEAD: Republican mayoral candidate Dan Ridenour has out-fundraised Democrat opponent Terry Whitt Bailey nearly two to one so far this campaign season, according to campaign finance records (Ohlenkamp, Muncie Star Press). The reporting period was from April 13, 2019 until October 11, 2019 showing a majority of the funds raised from shortly before the primary election to now. Funding totals for candidates are the year-to-date totals, which include this period's filings as well as those raised prior to April 13. Ridenour came off as the largest fundraiser by far, raising $177,418. Multiple individual donors gave more than $1,000 to his campaign throughout the primary and general election period. The biggest funding sources for Ridenour came from individual fundraising events. Four of those, like golf outings, netted Ridenour more than $10,000 apiece. As for political action committees, Ridenour had three large donors, including the Muncie Police PAC ($5,000), Muncie Firefighters PAC ($6,000) and the Indiana State Republican Committee (in-kind advertising donation of $9,906).

HOLCOMB TO BARNSTORM FOR MAYORAL CANDIDATES: Gov. Holcomb will campaign for Republican candidates for mayor as next month's election draws closer (WIBC). State Republican Chairman Kyle Hupfer, who also chairs Holcomb's reelection campaign, says Holcomb plans a three-day barnstorming tour through at least 10 cities on the weekend before the election to try to push Republican candidates across the goal line. He says the party hasn't finalized the specific stops. Republicans announced this month they already have the 4,500 signatures required to get Holcomb on next year's ballot. Hupfer says the party set a goal of gathering the signatures by October 1 so it can reassign party staffers to serve as reinforcements in local races, helping with phone banks and door-knocking.

HUPFER STUMPS FOR MILLER IN ELKHART: Indiana Republican Party chairman Kyle Hupfer came to Elkhart on Thursday morning to support his party's candidate for mayor (Elkhart Truth). "We are just excited with mayor's races across the state, but especially with Dave's," Hupfer said, following a campaign rally with about 100 people at Lex 530.

HOGSETT CAMPAIGN RESPONDS TO MERRIT 'SMEARS': In response to the launch of a smear website by Senator Jim Merritt, which includes completely false accusations targeting Mayor Hogsett's family, the Hogsett for Indianapolis campaign released the following statement attributed to Heather K. Sager (Howey Politics Indiana): "For ten months, Senator Jim Merritt has failed to articulate clear policies he would pursue if elected or how he would pay for those ideas. Rather than spend these last two weeks engaging in substantive debate, it's clear that he's chosen to embrace the worst of partisan politics. Let's be blunt: Jim Merritt is knowingly making false, harmful claims about Mayor Hogsett and his family. Jim Merritt's personal attacks are small-minded, desperate, and beneath both the office he currently holds and the one he seeks to gain. We expect this kind of disgusting behavior from Washington, but it is disappointing to see Jim Merritt bring those same despicable tactics to Indianapolis. We call on local Republican officials to disavow these false statements and disingenuous personal attacks in the strongest terms possible."

NBC POLL SHOWS 49% SUPPORT/OPPOSE IMPEACHMENT: Americans are evenly divided on whether President Donald Trump should be impeached. Forty-nine percent think he should be impeached and removed from office and 49 percent are against it, according to results from a new NBC News|SurveyMonkey poll.

BUTTIGIEG CRITICAL OF FACEBOOK: Democratic presidential candidate Pete Buttigieg told CBS News on Thursday that he believes Facebook's advertisement policy is "a mistake" and that the breakup of big technology companies is a "remedy that should be on the table" (CBS News). The mayor of South Bend, Indiana, called for greater accountability on the part of the social media giant, which has come under scrutiny in recent weeks. "[Facebook] has a responsibility to pull false advertising," Buttigieg said. "And yes, they also have a responsibility to intervene when there is advertising that will contribute to voter suppression."

SANDERS BACKS LEGAL MARIJUANA: Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) on Thursday introduced a plan to legalize marijuana and also expunge the records of people with marijuana-related convictions (The Hill). "We're going to legalize marijuana and end the horrifically destructive war on drugs," Sanders said in a statement. "It has disproportionately targeted people of color and ruined the lives of millions of Americans.” “When we’re in the White House, we’re going to end the greed and corruption of the big corporations and make sure that Americans hit hardest by the war on drugs will be the first to benefit from legalization,” he added.

REP. RYAN DROPS OUT: Rep. Tim Ryan dropped out of the 2020 Democratic presidential primary race on Thursday, after his campaign failed to gain any significant traction (Politico). “While it didn’t work out quite the way we planned, this voice will not be stifled. I will continue to advocate and fight for the working people of this country — white, black, brown, men, women,” Ryan said in a statement from his campaign announcing his withdrawal from the race. “There’s people who get up every day, take a shower after work sometimes, that are working really hard. And we’re going to continue to fight for making sure that those workers are treated fairly, and that they have access to good health care, that they have a solid pension to retire on.”

GABBARD WON'T SEEK REELECTION: Congresswoman Tulsi Gabbard said in a video message late Thursday that she won't seek re-election in her district in Hawaii so she can focus on her bid for the 2020 Democratic presidential nomination (CBS News). “Throughout my life, I’ve been motivated by a desire to serve the people of Hawaii and our country, and have made my decisions based upon where I felt I could do the most good,” Gabbard said in a statement. Gabbard was facing a primary challenge from State Senator Kai Kahele, who criticized Gabbard for spending too much time on her presidential race. Although Gabbard brought in more than $3 million for her presidential campaign between June and September of 2019, she raised no money for a re-election campaign in that same period, according to Open Secrets. Kahele, meanwhile, raised more than $300,000 between June and September, according to Open Secrets.

WHISTLEBLOWER MAY NOT TESTIFY: The whistleblower who initially unmasked President Trump’s effort to pressure Ukraine for political favors has moved steadily toward the periphery of the House impeachment inquiry as several Democrats said Thursday they have ample testimony from senior Trump administration officials to back his claims (Washington Post). Democrats were once prepared to take extraordinary steps to preserve the whistleblower’s identity under questioning, considering him central to their investigation. But over the past month, they have grown cold to the idea of exposing him to additional scrutiny after several witnesses described how Trump leveraged access and military aid to secure a promise from Ukraine to launch investigations that could help his 2020 reelection bid.

HOUSE DEFENDS CLOSED INQUIRY SESSIONS: House Democrats plan to move ahead with more closed-door interviews in their impeachment inquiry, scheduling current and former White House officials for private depositions despite stepped-up demands from Republicans to conduct the investigation in public (Wall Street Journal). The plans come at the close of a week in which a witness tied President Trump to an alleged quid pro quo regarding Ukraine aid and Republicans staged a protest over the secretive nature of the proceedings. Rep. David Cicilline (D., R.I.) said Democrats would move the investigation into a public setting “as soon as we have completed the gathering of evidence and that we are ready to make a presentation.” He said he expected that within weeks, not months—and before the introduction of any articles of impeachment—already given testimony would be made public or that witnesses would openly testify. Nearly all of the witnesses in the impeachment inquiry that started last month have testified in front of three House committees behind closed doors in the basement of the U.S. Capitol building.

IMPEACHMENT INQUIRY TESTIMONY SCHEDULE: Saturday: Philip Reeker, acting assistant secretary of State for European and Eurasian affairs; Monday: Charlie Kupperman, former deputy national security adviser; Tuesday: Lt. Col. Alexander Vindman, NSC Europe chief; Wednesday: Kathryn Wheelbarger, acting assistant secretary of Defense for international security affairs; Thursday: Morrison.

GRAHAM SPONSORS IMPEACH RESOLUTION IN SENATE; YOUNG CO-SPONSORS: Senate Republicans are stepping up their attacks on the House’s impeachment inquiry, as the prospect of a trial in the upper chamber grows more likely by the day and President Donald Trump has demanded that his Capitol Hill allies form a firewall of support around him (Politico). Sen. Lindsey Graham, a close Trump ally, introduced a resolution on Thursday that condemns the Democrat-led impeachment probe. The South Carolina Republican has attacked Democrats for their handling of the impeachment process. His resolution — backed by Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell — calls on the House to hold a vote to formalize the impeachment inquiry and to give Republicans the same authority as Democrats to issue subpoenas. U.S. Sen. Todd Young is one of the co-sponsors (Howey Politics Indiana).

REP. HILL DEMANDS NUDE PHOTOS BE REMOVED: Attorneys for U.S. Rep. Katie Hill on Thursday threatened to bring legal action against a British tabloid for posting what it claims are nude photos of the freshman California Democrat (Politico Playbook. Hill's legal team — Marc Elias and Rachael Jacobs of the firm Perkins Coie — also suggested Hill was defamed over allegations by the Daily Mail that she has a Nazi-inspired tattoo on her body. "In a cease-and-desist letter to Candace Trunzo, executive editor of the Daily Mail, Elias and Jacobs demanded that 'you remove these photos from publication at once.' The newspaper ran a series of intimate photos of Hill and a former campaign staffer whom it said she had an affair with before Hill won her seat in Congress. Hill, who is going through an acrimonious divorce, has admitted to an 'inappropriate' relationship with a female campaign staffer and apologized to her constituents over the matter.

BOSMA STATEMENT ON MacALLISTER: House Speaker Brian C. Bosma on the passing of Indianapolis businessman and philanthropist P.E. MacAllister at age 101 (Howey Politics Indiana): "P.E. MacAllister was a cherished friend, and inspirational mentor to so many young leaders. He was one of the principal architects of the renaissance of our capital city. He also left a giant mark in both industry and philanthropy – a legend of his time. I will miss him tremendously, and offer my deepest sympathy to his family and friends."

HOLDMAN RESPONDS TO TAX CLIMATE: State Sen. Travis Holdman (R-Markle) offered the following statement today regarding Indiana's tax climate ranking (Howey Politics Indiana): "Once again, the Tax Foundation ranked Indiana No. 10 in the nation and No. 1 in the Midwest for best tax climate. I'm pleased to see this recognition, as the ranking demonstrates the result of pro-growth, conservative tax policy by the General Assembly. Over the last decade, we've reduced personal and corporate tax rates, provided an exemption for small businesses on the business equipment tax, and capped property tax rates with the support of Hoosier voters, making it easier to own a home. As the chair of the Tax and Fiscal Policy committee, I'm proud of our work to make Indiana a better place to live, work, and own a business, and I look forward to our state's continued success in the years to come."

KOCH APPOINTED TO COMMERCIAL COURTS COMMITTEE: State Sen. Eric Koch (R-Bedford) has been named to the committee created by the Indiana Supreme Court to provide guidance to the state's six Commercial Courts (Howey Politics Indiana). In 2016, the Indiana Supreme Court established a three-year Commercial Courts Pilot Project to begin June 1, 2016, and end June 1, 2019. The purpose of the pilot project was to: Establish judicial practices that will help all court users by improving court efficiency; Allow commercial disputes to be resolved efficiently with expertise and technology; Enhance the accuracy, consistency, and predictability of judicial decisions in commercial cases; Enhance economic development in Indiana by furthering the efficient resolution of commercial law disputes; and Employ and encourage electronic information technologies, such as e-filing, e-discovery, and telephone/video conferencing, and employ early alternative dispute resolution interventions, as consistent with Indiana law.

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB TRIBUTE TO MacALLISTER - Gov. Eric J. Holcomb offered the following statement on the death of P.E. MacAllister (Howey Politics Indiana). "Even though P.E. lived until the incredible age of 101, Janet and I were crushed to hear of his passing. I'm thankful for the impact this veteran, educator, corporate titan and all around Renaissance man left on Hoosiers and the world. He was a man of deep faith and compassion with a heart for Indiana. I ask that all Hoosiers join me in offering prayers and condolences to P.E's family and friends." MacAllister received the state's highest honor, the Sachem, in 2014.

GOVERNOR: CROUCH STATEMENT ON MacALLISTER - Lt. Governor Crouch offered the following statement on the death of P.E. MacAllister. "Today, I join Hoosiers across the state in mourning the loss of P.E. MacAllister. He has rightly been called a 'Founding Father' of Indianapolis, and his impact on our capital, state and country is immeasurable. He lived a full and remarkable 101 years as a World War II veteran, prodigious businessman, cherished father and extraordinary public servant. He set an example for the next generation of public servants and community leaders, and I feel so blessed for the moments I shared with him over the years. My heart aches for this loss, and I send my prayers and thoughts to the entire MacAllister family, as well as the many Hoosiers who admired him."

GOVERNOR: HUPFER TRIBUTE TO MacALLISTER - Indiana Republican Party Chairman Kyle Hupfer released this statement following the passing of P.E. MacAllister. "Indiana lost a legend. P.E. MacAllister was a veteran, business pioneer, humanitarian, great patron of the arts, philanthropist and so much more over his 101 years. In fact, you almost run out of superlatives when trying to describe his monumental life of achievement and service to Indiana. A long life lived well, P.E."

will be missed but his contributions to our state ensure his life and legacy will never be forgotten. My thoughts and prayers will be with his family in the days ahead."

AUTOS: UAW PUSHBACK ON GM DEAL - Some local workers at the Kokomo General Motors Components Holding plant say they're not happy with the tentative contract between the company and the United Auto Workers union and plan to vote against it (Gerber, CNHI). Members of UAW Local 292 are set to vote Friday to ratify or reject the 2019 tentative contract after striking against the company for nearly six weeks. Around 300 workers at the Kokomo GM Components Holding plant will cast their ballots from 7 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the UAW Local 685 hall at 929 E. Hoffer St. Union representatives will be on hand to review the tentative contract and answer any questions. But hourly worker Butch Bowlin said Thursday he's already made up his mind on the contract. "It sucks," he said while standing on the picket line on Goyer Road. "There's nothing for us here. Just vote no."

EDUCATION: VU OPENS UP FRENCH QUARTER DORM - Vincennes University has officially broken ground on the site of its French Quarter property. The French Quarter is a French-Creole-inspired apartment-style living complex that aims to honor to the French heritage of the area and increase community engagement on campus (Inside Indiana Business). The apartments feature three-bedroom units, each with a private full bathroom, a shared living space and a full kitchen. Other property amenities will include bike storage rooms, second-floor balconies, a parking space for each bedroom, a fountain and open outdoor space. When completed, the complex will house nearly 200 students.

WHITE HOUSE: PENCE TRIBUTE TO P.E. MacALLISTER - Vice President Pence pays tribute to P.E. MacAllister (Howey Politics Indiana): "P.E. MacAllister was a titanic figure in Indiana Republican politics and was one of my first political supporters and a lifelong friend and mentor. He wasn't just a mentor to me but was a mentor to an entire generation of great conservative leaders. P.E.'s true memorial is a strong and vibrant city of Indianapolis."

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP CONFRONTED BY LIMITS IN DEFENSE STRATEGY - President Donald Trump is confronting the limits of his main impeachment defense (AP). As the probe hits the one-month mark, Trump and his aides have largely ignored the details of the Ukraine allegations against him. Instead, they're loudly objecting to the House Democrats' investigation process, using that as justification for ordering administration officials not to cooperate and complaining about what they deem prejudicial, even unconstitutional, secrecy. But as a near-daily drip of derogatory evidence emerges from closed-door testimony on Capitol Hill, the White House assertion that the proceedings are unfair is proving to be a less-than-compelling counter to the mounting threat to Trump's presidency. Some senior officials have complied with congressional subpoenas to assist House Democratic investigators, defying White House orders. Asked about criticism that the White House lacks a coordinated pushback effort and could do a better job delivering its message, spokeswoman Stephanie Grisham said, "It's hard to message anything that's going on behind closed doors and in secret." "It's like you're fighting a ghost, you're fighting against the air. So we're doing the best we can," she said on Fox News Channel.

WHITE HOUSE: BANNON RETURNS TO DEFEND TRUMP - Former White House chief strategist Stephen Bannon has returned from exile to defend President Trump, believing the presidency is imperiled and that Trump is in urgent need of a more robust defense against the House impeachment inquiry (The Hill). Bannon spent the past two years on a journey to spark populist movements at hotspots around the world after he was banished from Trump's inner circle and cut off from Breitbart News, where he was executive chairman, for trash-talking members of the president's family to author Michael Wolff in the book "Fire and Fury." Now the impeachment fight has called him back to Washington. Bannon is underwriting a new media venture from the basement of his Capitol Hill home, known affectionately among allies as "the Breitbart Embassy," where he'll broadcast live, seven days a week, from now until the Senate votes on impeachment.

WHITE HOUSE: SEX ASSAULT ALLEGATION MADE V. TRUMP - President Donald Trump's own records "strongly corroborate" the sexual assault accusations of Summer Zervos and belie the president's denials, the former contestant on "The Apprentice" said in a court filing Thursday (ABC News). Zervos has alleged Trump "repeatedly touched her, groped her, and kissed her" on multiple occasions in late 2007 and early 2008, but he has denied it and called her a liar.

WHITE HOUSE: FED SUBSCRIPTIONS TO NYT, WAPO MAY END - The White House plans to tell federal agencies to discontinue subscriptions to the Washington Post and the New York Times,, ABC News confirmed Thursday, just days after President Donald Trump said he wanted to "terminate" the subscriptions in another move against the news media (ABC News). In an Oct. 21 interview on Fox News' "The Sean Hannity Show," Trump said the administration doesn't "even want it in the White House anymore," referring to the New York Times.

WHITE HOUSE: STAFFERS FACE $15K LEGAL BILLS TO TESTIFY - As a parade of State Department officials began trooping to Capitol Hill this month to testify in the impeachment inquiry imperiling President Trump, officials from the department's union dispatched an appeal to its nearly 17,000 members (New York Times). Send money, they pleaded. For the second time since Mr. Trump took office, an investigation into his conduct has set off a scramble across Washington for lawyers to represent witnesses — and for the money to pay them. This time, instead of high-rolling players in Mr. Trump's 2016 campaign, many of the witnesses are career government workers who helped shape or carry out policy toward Ukraine. On civil-servant salaries, they have racked up bills of $15,000 or more for lawyers who can guide them through the morning-to-dusk sessions before congressional inquisitors. Already caught in a struggle between two branches of government, many are now worried about how to pay for legal advice that can cost $750 to $1,500 an hour. "We have never faced a comparable situation," said Eric Rubin, a senior American diplomat who runs the union, the American Foreign Service Association. "Our colleagues are facing unprecedented legal bills."

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SCHEDULE - President Trump will depart the White House at 11:40 a.m. en route to Benedict College in South Carolina. He will give a speech on judicial reform at 2:15 p.m. Afterward, Trump will head to Camp David. President Trump says he will go to Nats Park for Game 5 of the World Series between the Washington Nationals and the Houston Astros -- if the series gets that far. The Nats have to win tonight and Saturday to avoid a Game 5 on Sunday night.

PENTAGON: TROOPS COULD BE LEFT IN SYRIA - The White House is considering options for leaving about 500 U.S. troops in northeast Syria and for sending dozens of battle tanks and other equipment, officials said Thursday, the latest in an array of scenarios following President Trump's decision this month to remove all troops there (Wall Street Journal). The options, presented by military officials, would represent a reversal from the American withdrawal Mr. Trump wanted. It also would modify U.S. objectives—from countering Islamic State extremists to also safeguarding oil fields in eastern Syria with additional troops and new military capability.

JUSTICE: BARR'S RUSSIA PROBE TURNS CRIMINAL - Attorney General William Barr's expanding review of the Russia probe has evolved into a criminal investigation, according to a person familiar with the matter, giving a federal prosecutor who is leading the inquiry the ability to subpoena witnesses and use a grand jury (Wall Street Journal). It couldn't immediately be determined what prompted the change nor what evidence of a crime Mr. Barr and the federal prosecutor leading the probe, John Durham, may have found. When the inquiry was announced in May, Justice Department officials described it as a review that could prompt changes to counterintelligence investigations of political campaigns.

JUSTICE: SUIT FILED OVER BARR NOTRE DAME SPEECH - A large online Christian group has filed a complaint against U.S. Attorney General William Barr over his recent speech at the University of Notre Dame Law School (Indiana Public Media). Barr spoke to a closed group of Notre Dame law students on October 11th. The non-profit group, Faithful America, filed a complaint with the U.S. Department of Justice saying Barr's speech violated his oath to uphold the constitution. Barr's speech was reportedly on 'religious liberty.' In it, he blamed secularism for societal problems. Faithful America says the speech is a clear violation of the first amendment's ban on an establishment of religion. The group also filed a petition with more than 13-thousand of its member's signatures.

DOE: JUDGE HOLDS SEC. DeVOS IN CONTEMPT - A federal judge on Thursday held Education Secretary Betsy DeVos in contempt of court and imposed a $100,000 fine for violating an order to stop collecting on the student loans owed by students of a defunct for-profit college (Politico). The exceedingly rare judicial rebuke of a Cabinet secretary came after the Trump administration was forced to admit to the court earlier this year that it erroneously collected on the loans of some 16,000 borrowers who attended Corinthian Colleges despite being ordered to stop doing so. U.S. Magistrate Judge Sallie Kim wrote that 'the evidence shows only minimal efforts to comply with the preliminary injunction' she issued in May 2018 ordering the Education Department to halt its collection of the loans.

AUTOS: SUBARU ISSUES 2 RECALLS - Subaru of America is issuing two recalls for more than 400,000 vehicles. The recalls cover as many as 466,205 late-model Imprezas and Crosstreks, Subaru said in a statement to the National Highway Traffic and Safety Information Administration (CNN). The first recall impacts 2017-2019 Imprezas and 2018-2019 Crosstreks, and relates to the engine. Power may continue to the ignition after the engine is shut off, which could result in a short circuit and blown fuse, Subaru said. This defect can result in a higher risk of crash if the short circuit happens while the car is in use. The second recall pertains to 2017-2019 Imprezas but only 2018 Crosstrek vehicles, Subaru said. These vehicles are equipped with Positive Crankcase Ventilation valves that may come apart and cause debris to fall into the engine. This can result in loss of power while the vehicle is in operation, which can increase the risk of an accident.

AUTOS: FORD PROFITS DOWN 57% - Ford profits fell 57% to $425 million in the third quarter, down from $991 million a year ago. The Dearborn, Michigan-based automaker, one of the largest industrial employers in the Calumet Region, earned just 11 cents per share as compared to 25 cents per share a year earlier (Pete, NWI Times). Ford said it now expects to make an annual profit of $6.5 billion to $7 billion, as compared to $7 billion last year. The automaker, which operates the Chicago Assembly Plant in Hegewisch and the Chicago Stamping Plant in Chicago Heights, had previously forecast it would bring in a net income of $7 billion to $7.5 billion this year.

NEW YORK: DeBLASIO SAYS TRUMP WOULD BE ARRESTED IF HE SHOT SOMEONE - President Donald Trump will get arrested if he shoots someone in the middle of Fifth Avenue — despite his lawyer's claims to the contrary, Mayor Bill de Blasio and the NYPD said Thursday (Politico). "If anybody shoots someone, they get arrested. I don't care if they're the president of the United States or anybody else," de Blasio told reporters during an unrelated press conference in Manhattan. "If you shoot someone, you should get arrested, and we would arrest him."

SPORTS: CUBS HIRE ROSS AS MANAGER - The Chicago Cubs hired former catcher David Ross to replace Joe Maddon as their manager Thursday, hoping he can help them get back to the playoffs after missing out for the first since 2014 (AP). The Cubs announced a three-year deal with Ross with a club option for the 2023 season. He becomes the 55th manager in club history. The 42-year-old Ross played the final two of his 15 major league seasons with the Cubs and was a revered leader on the 2016 team that won the World Series, ending a championship drought dating to 1908. "I'm honored by this opportunity to be the next manager of the Chicago Cubs," Ross said in a statement. "My time with this organization has been special since the day I joined, so to continue with the club in this role is a blessing for which I'm so very thankful."

SPORTS: ASTROS FIRE ASSISTANT GM FOR COMMENTS - The Houston Astros on Thursday fired the team official who directed offensive, vulgar comments toward female reporters during the celebration of the team's American League Championship Series victory five days earlier. In both a statement and a news conference at Nationals Park, on the travel day between Games 2 and 3 of the World Series, the team apologized to the reporters and acknowledged it mishandled the incident (Washington Post). Assistant general manager Brandon Taubman was terminated for his actions after Saturday night's win over the Yankees, when he yelled in the direction of the female reporters who were covering the Astros' celebration, "Thank God we got Osuna! I'm so [expletive] glad we got Osuna!" — references to Astros closer Roberto Osuna, who was acquired in a trade in 2018 after being suspended for violating baseball's domestic violence policy.

HAMMOND: COUNCIL CANDIDACY CHALLENGED - Republican Hammond City Council candidate Charles Kallas is making a last-ditch effort to bounce from the ballot one of the three Democrats running for three at-large council seats, which would ensure Kallas is elected regardless of what voters decide (Carden, NWI Times). On Thursday, Kallas asked Lake Superior Judge Bruce Parent to order the Lake County Board of Elections and Voter Registration to disqualify Democrat Katrina Alexander as a candidate and to reject all votes cast for her at the Nov. 5 general election. Kallas, who is the sole Republican council candidate, claimed Alexander should be removed from the ballot because she submitted an invalid financial disclosure form with her Feb. 7 declaration of candidacy that omitted Alexander's ownership of a photography business she started in 2009.

FORT WAYNE: CIB EXTENDS ELECTRIC WORKS DEADLINE - The Allen County-Fort Wayne Capital Improvement board this morning voted unanimously to again extend the timeline for the Electric Works project (Rodriguez, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). The board is a major contributor of public funds for the approximately $250 million redevelopment of the former General Electric campus south of downtown. However, one member, long-time Fort Wayne developer Don Steininger, abstained from the vote because of what he called a "lack of transparency" by the developers. "I cannot vote to support the project at the expense of other worthy projects that will take place in the next 25 years," Steininger said in a statement.

FORT WAYNE: HENRY COMMENTS ON ELECTRIC WORKS EXTENSION - Statement from Mayor Tom Henry on Electric Works project (Howey Politics Indiana): "I was encouraged by today's vote by the Allen County Fort Wayne Capital Improvement Board of Managers (CIB) to approve an extension to the economic development agreement for the Electric Works project. I appreciate the CIB's partnership. This follows the Fort Wayne Redevelopment Commission's recent action to approve the extension. This will allow for additional time for RTM Ventures to finalize private financing and secure tenants. Successful public-private partnerships are complex and take time, but they're critical to advancing our community and region as a point of destination for job and business growth, strong neighborhoods and attractive quality of life amenities. I want to see Electric Works succeed and positive progress is being made. The public financing bodies involved in this project are committed and engaged partners with the Electric Works development team as the process continues to move forward. The local public financing entities have worked collaboratively to secure the necessary public funding of $65 million for the project. That funding is in place and will be released when all conditions of the economic development agreement are met and closing occurs."

SOUTH BEND: COUNCIL TO CONTINUE TO PURSUE PD TAPES - The Common Council, at least for the near future, will stay the course in its seven-year legal pursuit to have the South Bend police tapes released, the council's attorney said Thursday (South Bend Tribune). "I don't think there will be any attempt to stop the litigation," said attorney Robert Palmer.

In recent weeks, council members had privately debated the idea of dropping the lawsuit if they could verify from other sources what exactly is on the tapes. In executive session meetings, including one on Wednesday, Palmer presented council members with an alternative to continuing the court case: use their city government subpoena power to see whether a former police department employee would verify the accuracy of a website's reporting that it had obtained her written description of recordings of officers making racial slurs and talking about illegal activities.

KNIGHTSTOWN: PD CHIEF ON LEAVE; PICKING UP TRASH - Why is the Knightstown Police Chief picking up trash on the side of the road wearing a baseball cap and jeans? "Because they are paying me to be off work and I don't think that's right, so I am earning the taxpayers' money," said Chief Chris Newkirk (CBS4). The town council decided to put Newkirk on paid administrative leave last Thursday night. He said he didn't know it was happening until he showed up to the station and they were changing the locks. "I honestly have no idea where they got their information, what their information is, or what their concerns are, it was never expressed to me," said Newkirk. He said the council told him it had to do with his medical condition, and he will need to pass a fitness test to return.

INDIANAPOLIS: INDY RED LINE CLAIMS 230K RIDERS - Riders along the Red Line boarded the route 230,651 times in the month of September, and total system ridership was up thirty percent over last month (Howey Politics Indiana). In an effort to continuously improve Red Line reliability, schedule adjustments and additional layover time at both ends of the rapid portion of the route are being incorporated to improve on-time performance. With the new route changes in effect Sunday, October 27, Red Line buses will continue service north of the 66th Street Station to 96th Street and south of the University Station to Greenwood Park Mall. These north and south extensions will travel on a 20-minute frequency, and passengers are encouraged to look at the destination signs on the front of the bus when traveling beyond 66th Street and University stations. Last month, the Board of Directors approved an extension of free fares through Sunday, November 10 due to delays in full functionality of MyKey fare vending machines. Fare collection is still expected to begin on Monday, November 11.

NOBLESVILLE: BASKETBALL HALL OF FAME DIES IN FARM ACCIDENT - A former basketball standout, and a member of the Indiana Basketball Hall of Fame, was killed in an accident on a Hamilton County farm, according to the Hamilton County Sheriff's Office (WIBC). Just after 7:30 p.m. on Wednesday, deputies responded to a field in the area of 274th Street and Ott Road for a report of a fatal accident. After arriving on the scene, deputies learned that a farmer was working in his soybean field and slowed down in order to turn a corner as Tony Etchison of Arcadia attempted to climb aboard the combine. However, Etchison fell and was run over by the farming equipment. Etchison was pronounced dead on the scene. Etchison was a Noblesville High School basketball standout, leading the Millers to three straight sectional titles in 1989, 1990 and 1991. He was also inducted into the Indiana Basketball Hall of Fame in 2016.

LAKE STATION: WATER SYSTEM SOLD TO AMERICAN WATER - The City of Lake Station in northwest Indiana sold its drinking water system to Indiana American Water for more than $20 million. It's one of more than a dozen water and wastewater systems the company has acquired around the state in the past decade (Thiele, Indiana Public Media). City attorney Michael Deppe says the sale will allow Lake Station to pay off millions of dollars of debt and help the city pay for costly repairs to its aging infrastructure — like fixing water main breaks. "Every time we have something that's dramatic, naturally it's the water customers that have to pay for it," he says. "Well, this way if something does happen, you know, it would be spread out throughout all of American Water's customers."

HOWARD COUNTY: 10 OVERDOSE DEATHS IN 3RD QUARTER - Howard County experienced 10 overdose deaths in the year's third quarter, Coroner Steven Seele announced Thursday (Myers, Kokomo Tribune). That means the county had 28 overdose deaths through the first nine months of the year, putting it on a higher pace than last year but below the pace of 2017, the deadliest year on record for overdoses in Howard County. Seele, who publicly announces death totals after each quarter, said that of the 10 overdoses cases, eight were the result of opiate abuse between July 1 and Sept. 30. Two of the opiate cases involved heroin, while five involved Fentanyl.

PORTER COUNTY: EMPLOYEES TO GET 3% RAISE - Porter County government workers will receive a 3% increase in pay under the newly adopted 2020 budget. The $41.7 million budget was unanimously approved recently by the Porter County Council (NWI Times). The pay increase for county government's 550 full-time employees follows a 4% wage hike awarded last year. Council President Dan Whitten said the increases make up for previous years when employees saw little, if any, increase on their paychecks due to county financial difficulties. "Now, the county is solvent," he said. "We're strong. We've been playing a little catch up the past few years."

Pershing Edwin MacAllister, an Indianapolis businessman and vastly influential civic leader and figure in local Republican politics, died Wednesday.

He was 101 years old.

Preferring to be known by the initials P.E., MacAllister helped build Indianapolis-based family business MacAllister Machinery Co. into a regional powerhouse. He also worked behind the scenes in a wide variety of capacities during the city's resurgence that began in the 1960s.

He served in top positions on the election campaigns of Mayor Richard Lugar and Mayor Bill Hudnut, as well as on a myriad of corporate, civic and government boards. He played a key role in developing the Hoosier Dome as a member of the Marion County Capital Improvement Board, and founded the Indianapolis Parks Foundation.

"The greatness of P.E. is that he was not one thing, he was many things," Mayor Joe Hogsett said Thursday in a media statement. "A veteran, a businessman, a civic leader, and a philanthropist—his impact on our community cannot be overstated. Over the course of P.E.'s life, our city rapidly evolved and much of the vibrancy we enjoy today is a direct reflection of P.E.'s generosity and vision."

"He wasn't just a mentor to me but was a mentor to an entire generation of great conservative leaders," Pence said in a prepared statement. "P.E.'s true memorial is a strong and vibrant city of Indianapolis."

MacAllister, who served as chairman of MacAllister Machinery Co., was born Aug. 30, 1918, in Oconto, Wisconsin, to Edwin W. and Hilda MacAllister. He grew up during the Great Depression and graduated from Carroll College in 1940 with intentions of becoming a teacher. He then enlisted in the U.S. Army Air Force.

He "washed out" of flight school and became an armament officer, responsible for arming a squadron of P-38 fighters. He was stationed in England, North Africa and Italy, where he finished his service with the rank of captain.

In June 1945, he began working for his father at MacAllister Tractor Co., the Allis Chalmers Caterpillar dealer for much of the state at that time, according to the Indiana Historical Society. He worked his way up in the company, beginning his career packing parts and moving on to working as a mechanic and later a salesman.

When his father became ill in 1951, P.E. and his brother, Dave, took over MacAllister Machinery, according to his obituary.

The brothers ran the business for 30 years before P.E.'s son, Chris, assumed control in 1991. P.E. remained chairman, and the business grew to employ 2,500 people.

"P.E. continued to report for work every day, keeping in touch with customers, employees, Caterpillar, and the financial results," his obituary states. "Not many can brag about 74 years of service to their employer."

In 1967, he ventured into politics when former U.S. Sen. Richard Lugar ran for Indianapolis mayor. MacAllister served as his campaign treasurer for both his first campaign and his re-election campaign in 1971. He also was campaign chairman for former Mayor Bill Hudnut four times.

"Usually behind the scenes and with little interest in holding office himself, P.E. set about improving the process, structure, candidates, and quality of local government," his obituary states.

He founded the Greater Indianapolis Republican Finance Committee and The Chairman's Club—the fundraising arms for city/county races.

One of his proudest accomplishments was staging the Conference on Cities, an international symposium on urban problems in collaboration with NATO, which was held in Indianapolis in May 1971.

He served on Capital Improvement Board for 17 years, including time as its president, and helped to construct the Indiana Convention Center and the Hoosier Dome.

"P.E. MacAllister was a cherished friend, and inspirational mentor to so many young leaders," Indiana House Speaker Brian Bosma said in a prepared statement. "He was one of the principal architects of the renaissance of our capital city. He also left a giant mark in both industry and philanthropy—a legend of his time."

He donated to hundreds of charitable and civic institutions, to politicians, to Little League teams, his alma mater and his church, Northminster Presbyterian Church.

Never one for fancy cars, expensive hobbies or flashy jewelry, he lived modestly in the same house for 58 years, according to his obituary.

He also was an ardent patron of the arts, including serving as president of the Indianapolis Opera Company and as a board member of the Indiana State Symphony Society. He also was vice chair of the Edyvean Repertory Theatre Board and a member of the President's Advisory Committee on the Arts.

He earned countless awards and honors over his career, including the state's highest honor, the Sachem, in 2014, and the Sagamore of the Wabash, which he was given by five different Indiana governors, including current Gov. Eric Holcomb.

"Even though P.E. lived until the incredible age of 101, Janet and I were crushed to hear of his passing," Holcomb said in a prepared statement Thursday. "I'm thankful for the impact this veteran, educator, corporate titan and all-around Renaissance man left on Hoosiers and the world. He was a man of deep faith and compassion with a heart for Indiana."

He is survived by daughters Laurie and Sandy and son Chris, plus his grandchildren. Two wives, Rebecca Cochran and Fran Downing, who he married on his 85th birthday in 2003, preceded him in death.

John McDonald: Let's change our frame of mind about college degrees

October 25, 2019 | John McDonald

KEYWORDS

I'd like to invite you to look at the world slightly differently.

You've been told that, if your children don't attend a four-year college and get a degree, indebting them by $29,000 or more (the average in Indiana), you or they are somehow a "loser."

That's a lie.

Bill Gates from Microsoft, Michael Dell from Dell Computer and Steve Jobs from Apple. None of them earned a college degree.

They are not alone. Famous founders Jan Koum (WhatsApp), Travis Kalanick (Uber), both Dustin Moskovitz and Mark Zuckerberg (Facebook), both Evan Williams and Jack Dorsey (Twitter), and even Hiroshi Yamauchi—who transformed Nintendo from a card-making company into a video game giant—don't have college degrees, either. A college degree never was and still isn't required to be a technologist.

There are many professions where a college degree is really needed (doctors, lawyers, etc.). And, I can't think of a single profession that isn't enhanced by a college degree. But to require it? Not in my line of work. Software development, cybersecurity—indeed a whole range of job roles in technology—are now more like technical trades than they are degree programs, something like the plumbers and electricians of the digital economy.

As parents, we need to demand of our high schools that all the pathways to success are arrayed in front of our children, especially technical trades.

Look to Eleven Fifty Academy, driven by technology pioneer Scott Jones, as a fast and low-cost way to a paying job in coding or cybersecurity. Look to Kenzie Academy, led by repatriated Hoosier Chok Ooi, as a way into the tech industry by financing your skills through a rebate to the academy after you've landed a job at a high salary through the program that helped you get there.

Look to innovators like Kevin Berkopes at Crossroads Education, innovators who are changing how companies get access to skills like machine learning through employing students to tackle the meatiest analytics problems of our age. Look to Don Wettrick at the StartEdUp Foundation, who has taught many waves of students how to survive and thrive in the economy of personal initiative, where everyone is an entrepreneur. Look to Mike Langellier and the team at TechPoint, who are recruiting and placing high school students in important internship roles across our state to drive technology forward.

Change has come even to our traditional universities. Look to fantastic programs like the Cybersecurity Academy offered by Ivy Tech Community College Columbus at the Muscatatuck Urban Warfare Center. Look to Bryan Ritchie at the IDEA Center at the University of Notre Dame for how Hoosier students can be enabled to take their ideas to market. Look to Purdue Polytechnic, enabled by Head of School Scott Bess, Dean Gary Bertoline and President Mitch Daniels, who are renovating the idea of a technology education by opening their program to self-direction—to involvement with companies like mine, ClearObject, to directly hire and engage students.

These efforts not only are the future of technology education, but also will ensure that Indiana businesses survive and thrive in the digital economy. These people “get it.”

I realize these words are challenging and threatening to the status quo. But our children know already that the skills they are being taught are no longer relevant for the digital economy. Skills of the future are learned on demand, in the context of students’ daily lives, and applied directly to “moving the needle” at organizations that can connect their abilities to customer needs without delay.

We can become a “brain engine” that fuels the future of our state, the Midwest and our country. But we must shed the idea that the only way to succeed is a four-year degree and return to placing value on technical trade education as a valid, parallel, even preferred career path. •

Claire Fiddian-Green: Don't forget about the significant dangers of cigarettes

October 25, 2019 | Claire Fiddian-Green

KEYWORDS

Recent headlines about a mysterious vaping-related lung illness that has resulted in the deaths of at least 26 people in 21 states—including three in Indiana—have riveted the nation. To date, 1,299 cases have been reported of lung injury associated with the use of e-cigarette products.

The CDC has still not determined the cause(s) of this illness, which appears to be associated with both THC- and nicotine-containing products; the agency's current guidance is to avoid e-cigarette use. Adults who have switched from combustible (i.e., traditional) cigarettes to vaping in an effort to make a healthier choice are encouraged to try evidence-based treatments, such as nicotine replacement therapy, in order to quit altogether.

Especially worrisome is the rapidly rising rate of youth vaping. A recent survey shows e-cigarette use among Indiana high schoolers increased more than 380% from 2012 to 2018. What's particularly troubling is that many students inaccurately believe vaping is not harmful. And in yet another sign of the enormous power of social media to influence people's beliefs, Congress is currently investigating whether millions of bot-generated social media posts have been misleading young people about the safety of nicotine and e-cigarettes.

While we must continue our efforts to address youth vaping, we can't forget about the far more deadly consequences of smoking. This is especially critical given strong evidence showing children and adolescents who vape are significantly more likely to go on to use traditional cigarettes.

Nearly 22% of Hoosier adults smoke, and every year more than 12,500 Hoosiers die from smoking-related diseases. A key point is that nearly nine out of 10 adult smokers started smoking by the age of 18—that's why the spike in youth vaping, and the link between vaping and combustible cigarettes, is so alarming.

And the bad news surrounding tobacco use continues. America's Health Rankings just released a report showing Indiana ranks 35th out of 50 states for the health of Hoosier women and children. The data tell a troubling story: Indiana ranks 48th in the country for maternal mortality and 43rd for infant mortality. Perhaps to no surprise, smoking is a key contributor to both maternal and infant mortality. In fact, Indiana ranks 42nd nationwide for tobacco use during pregnancy and 43rd for the percentage of children who live in households where smoking occurs.

Tobacco use also costs taxpayers. For example, a recent study examining Hoosiers on Medicaid found smokers have 51% higher monthly Medicaid expenditures than non-smokers, which translates into $540 million in smoking-attributable health expenditures annually. Just imagine what wish-list items the state budget could fund if we didn't incur the state-level portion of these annual smoking-related expenses.

The solutions to Indiana's high adult smoking rate and youth e-cigarette crisis are clear and backed by strong evidence.

First, years of data from across the United States show that when the price of nicotine-containing products increases, consumption decreases. This is particularly true for the most price-sensitive individuals, including young people.

Second, raising the minimum legal age to purchase tobacco and e-cigarette devices to 21 would make it harder for young people to buy vaping products and cigarettes. Younger students who vape or smoke explain how easy it is to access vaping products or cigarettes from students who are 18 and older.

As we focus on the youth vaping crisis, let's not forget about the significant dangers of smoking. A comprehensive approach to ending nicotine use in Indiana must address both e-cigarette and traditional cigarette use. •

Una Osili: U.S. should focus more resources on maternal health

October 25, 2019 | Una Osili

KEYWORDS

I grew up in Nigeria. As a young child, I witnessed firsthand the tragic effects of maternal mortality.

Nigeria has one of the highest maternal mortality rates in the world. When I was 6 years old, our healthy neighbor went to the hospital to deliver a baby. She never returned home. We were shocked to learn that she died tragically while giving birth in a hospital.

The death of any human being is a tragedy. But when that person is also a mother, the far-reaching loss imposes enormous costs and intergenerational impacts on families and communities.

Given advances in health care, deaths related to pregnancy are unacceptable. I was alarmed to learn from America's Health Rankings that Indiana ranks third in the nation for maternal mortality.

Indiana's maternal mortality rate is 50.2 of 100,000 live births. The rate of life-threatening complications for new mothers in the United States has more than doubled in two decades. This increase can be explained by several complex factors, including unequal access to care.

Looking more closely at the data, maternal mortality rates for black women are consistently three to four times higher than for white women. This racial disparity in maternal mortality affects women of all income groups. Serena Williams and Beyonce made this clear by sharing their frightening childbirth stories.

The hard truth is that more American women—of all races—are dying of pregnancy-related complications than in any other developed country. The United States is one of the few countries where the rate of women who die during childbirth is higher than in any other developed country. According to professor Neel Shah of Harvard Medical School, African American women are 50% more likely to die in childbirth than were their mothers.

Reports emphasize that maternal deaths are often preventable since they are often the result of gaps in health care provision and systems, social support and information.

Here in Indiana, health care practitioners are raising alarms as they point to the lack of maternity health wards and a shortage of obstetricians.

medical practitioners. Improving maternal mortality rates here in Indiana will require updating facilities to include the appropriate technology, equipment and experienced personnel.

Currently, federal and state funding data show only 6% of block grants for “maternal and child health” are directed toward the health of mothers. Policymakers in Indiana can do more by tracking maternal mortality so that delays in lifesaving care and maternity ward deserts can be addressed.

In addition to grants, there is much we can do to expand the support for pregnant women and new mothers. An emphasis on maternal health will require addressing women’s health before pregnancy.

To date, far too few philanthropic dollars have been focused on maternal health. A new report—the Women & Girls Index: Measuring Giving to Women’s and Girls’ Causes—quantifies charitable donations to organizations in the United States dedicated to women and girls.

The report finds that organizations focusing on women and girls received only 1.6% of all donations made that year.

Although women’s and girls’ organizations that focus on women’s health receive the largest share of philanthropic support ($1.2 billion in 2016), maternal health has not yet attracted funding.

It comes down to this: We all must expand efforts to address maternal health. We must close the gaps in health care access. Such a goal will require the commitment of government, health care professionals, policymakers, parents, friends, neighbors and colleagues—in other words, all of us. •

Ed DeLaney: Time to check on the turkey

October 25, 2019 | Ed DeLaney / Special to IBJ

I am very much an observer when it comes to holiday cooking. But I do get asked to check on the turkey from time to time. Even the best bird is ruined if overcooked because of neglect. Well, it is time to look into the oven and see what the state's property tax caps have done to public education funding and what can be done to compensate for any shortfall.

The bad news is that the tax caps have hurt the 93% of our kids in traditional public schools. The good news is that state government is in a position to help.

The General Assembly rightly responded to the firestorm over escalating property tax rates that festered for years and reached a crescendo about 15 years ago. The solution promised a grand bargain: The state would cap property taxes at 1% of assessed value for homeowners but would take on the full cost of operating schools. Buses and buildings would still be paid out of local property taxes. The sales tax rate went up in turn.

A number of legislators warned that this bargain needed to be watched, that adjustments would be needed. Just like the family holiday turkey might need to be turned.

What has been the result? School districts do not have enough money to support our teachers. Indiana teaching professionals are in the bottom ranks when it comes to increases in teacher pay since 1999. As the chart shows, we were average in teacher pay for decades, but the Great Recession and the complete Republican takeover of state government in 2010 have ended that. Teacher pay is falling off a

So what is the Republican supermajority doing to help? The answer is looking through the glass door of the oven, rather than using a thermometer to check the temperature of the turkey.

It has tried two old-time techniques: fiddle around the edges and locals.

First, lawmakers came up with a complex plan that would let some 290 school districts decide whether to share a modest pension saving with teachers. It will be hard to measure the impact, if any.

How are lawmakers passing the buck? We have fostered a growing last resort that lets districts hold referendums to raise tax money to boost teacher pay as well as buy buses, hire administrators and pay for school safety. Again, it will be hard to measure the impact. The citizens will often, but not always, respond positively. Districts with less in the way of property can choose to pay higher taxes or short-change their students. Meanwhile, legislators watch with arms folded across their chests.

By the way, the Legislature's fiddling isn't limited to the tiny help that came with the pension cost shift. Lawmakers have also gone negative by cutting the added support directed toward poorer students while raising the basic support given to all kids. Everyone is given a "choice," Republicans say. Move to a richer neighborhood if you can, or just live with shrinking support for your kids.

As a young man, I read the "Conscience of a Conservative," by Barry Goldwater. Years later, I got to cross-examine him in court. I remember one thing he said in his fight against a federal role in education. He asserted, correctly, that every state had enough money to support public education. What he didn't know was that Indiana would walk away from the responsibility that comes with having the means to act. •

Hill denies wrongdoing as his disciplinary hearing ends

 thestatehousefile.com/hill-denies-wrongdoing-disciplinary-hearing-ends/40175/

By Janet Williams

By Brandon Barger

TheStatehouseFile.com

INDIANAPOLIS—Attorney General Curtis Hill firmly denied charges Thursday that he groped and grabbed a lawmaker and three legislative staff members at a March 2018 party marking the end of the legislative session.

In calm, measured tones Hill testified that while he had a few drinks, he wasn't inebriated at the gathering at AJ's Lounge in Downtown Indianapolis and that his actions, while friendly, were not "rude, insolent or angry."

"I touched no one in a rude manner," Hill said.

Attorney General Curtis Hill at his disciplinary hearing earlier in the week. He testified Thursday and denied the allegations against him.

Hill was the sole witness Thursday, the fourth and final day of his disciplinary hearing before retired Supreme Court Justice Myra Selby. Since Monday, she has presided in the paneled and ornate courtroom of the state Supreme Court over testimony – sometimes graphic, sometimes emotional – about what happened at that party.

The disciplinary commission has accused Hill of touching the women in a rude, insolent or angry manner. For three of the women, the touching constitutes misdemeanor battery for unwanted contact. He is accused of grabbing the hand of the fourth woman when she tried to push his hand away and then forcing it toward her buttocks, which amounts to a Level 6 felony.

Thursday was the first time that Hill publicly gave his account of night. He was briefly called to testify on Wednesday morning by the disciplinary commissions legal team to spell out the duties of the attorney general, but did not return to the witness table that afternoon.

So when the sun filtered through the Supreme Court's stained glass windows the next day, Hill strolled into the chamber and took his seat, ready to testify in his own defense.

Under questioning by Donald Lundberg, one of his three attorneys, Hill calmly denied each of the charges leveled against him.

No, he said, he didn't grab the buttocks of Rep. Mara Candelaria Reardon, D- Munster. Yes, he might have touched her bare back—she was wearing a backless dress—but he touched a lot of backs that night as he moved through the crowd.

No, he didn't touch the rear end of Republican legislative aide Niki DaSilva but believes she was one of the women he attempted to guide through the crowd to the bar.

No, he didn't tell Democrat legislative aide Samantha Lozano that "yes, you're hot," but instead agreed with her that it was hot in the bar, which was packed with more than 100 people.

And no, he didn't rub Democrat Senate staffer Gabrielle McLemore Brock's back and doesn't even remember meeting her.

During the questioning by Lundberg, Hill sat in the chair with his legs crossed, glasses in one hand, his voice never changing pitch or wavering.

Hill said he hadn't planned to go to the party until he met a friend, lobbyist and GOP political activist Tony Samuel, at the Capital Grille. He went with Samuel to a bar at St. Elmo's and then to the party at AJ's Lounge.

Through the night, Hill said, he had a glass of wine at the restaurant and bar, and at the party had a vodka martini that he "nursed" through the night plus a shot of Fireball whisky that he "sipped on."

However, Hill maintained that at no point during the night was he impaired.

Disciplinary commission attorney Seth Pruden focused much of his attention on email chains that included Hill, Samuel and others as they talked about how to rebut the allegations as they became public.

Hill said that just because he was on the email chain, doesn't mean that he read them.

However, he did respond "thank you, very enlightening" to one email chain with the subject line "Re: Background on disciplinary committee members."

In that email, Danny Diaz, a political consultant wrote: "Any objection to pitching story to conservative media that (Gov. Eric) Holcomb cronies and liberals are driving this?"

Though the hearing is concluded, a lengthy process ensues before Hill knows his fate. First, the court reporter will prepare a record of the hearing. Then both sides will prepare their own findings, a last chance to argue their sides to Selby. Selby will reach her conclusion but the final decision is made by the Indiana Supreme Court.

If they decide Hill was at fault, the justices could issue a punishment ranging from a public reprimand to stripping him of his license to practice law – a step that would preclude Hill from remaining as attorney general.

INDIANA EDUCATION INSIGHT

HS grades: Enroll, employ, enlist

Panel paints path to new A-F accountability model – sans grad rate

The School Accountability Panel voted 12-3 to approve recommendations for modifying the high school accountability matrix. The proposed changes will be considered by the General Assembly next year.

Just as graduation pathways affords students multiple avenues to obtaining a high school diploma, the proposed accountability model recognizes an array of postsecondary outcomes that allow schools to earn maximum points whether their students are enrolled, employed, or enlisted.

Schools would be judged on whether their students earn workforce certificates or industry-recognized credentials, enroll in higher education without needing remediation, are employed in an apprenticeship or comparable on-the-job training program, or enlist in the military.

The revised framework would also grade high schools based on their students' SAT or ACT scores, and schools would be penalized if a student completes fewer than three graduation pathways.

The panel also recommended the implementation of a performance dashboard for each high school that would display a minimum of seven indicators.

Schools, in conjunction with local stakeholders, would select four of the indicators – one each from the following four categories: (1) achievement and lifelong learning; (2) school climate, culture, resources, professional inputs, and working conditions; (3) career navigation and exploration; and (4) work, learn, and earn opportunities.

The other three indicators, as recommended by the panel, would apply to all high school: (1) the number of students earning the college-ready benchmark score on the high school statewide assessment; (2) the number of students employed at a competitive wage or participating in a work and learn experience; and (3) the number of students who serve in the military.

The panel, which by statute doesn't sunset until 2021, outlined several areas for further study. Those include the feasibility of integrating the dashboard elements into school accountability grades in the future; elementary and middle school accountability; flexibility in high school diploma course requirements; whether school dashboards should replace school improvement plans; and the feasibility of replacing the eighth grade ILEARN exam with an eighth grade exam provided by the same vendor as the statewide high school assessment.

Conspicuously absent from the proposed high school accountability framework: graduation rate and student growth.

Student proficiency on the SAT or ACT would be determined in a single test administration in the 11th grade. "We are saying a single administration," emphasized House Committee on Education Chair Bob Behning (R) of Indianapolis.

The high school test has in the past accounted for 30% of the letter grade – 15% via proficiency and 15% for growth. The new proposal maintains proficiency at 15% of the letter grade but drops the growth component.

Butler presses play on esports

New arena to mix competition, academics

Butler University announces that a state-of-the-art esports arena is currently under development on campus featuring 50 gaming PCs, an array of popular gaming consoles, and broadcasting production equipment for hosting and streaming live esports competitions and tournaments.

In addition to the Butler esports team that competes in the Big East occupying the new space, Butler officials plan to incorporate gaming into the wider university curriculum.

Future possibilities include scholarships, majors, and even degree programs.

"While competitive and recreational esports is a key driver of this new space, our vision is larger," touts Butler Vice President for Strategy and Innovation Melissa Beckwith. "Our goal is to create a space that will ultimately support curricular innovation, serve the K-12 community, and align with two of the city's economic engines – sports and technology."

The 7,500 square-foot esports hub is slated to open in Fall 2020. Partnerships with K-12, other universities, and professional sports teams are all in the works.

"We said 'no growth' because we want to make sure we are not encouraging schools to become remediation factories," says Rep. Behning, who has served in the legislature since 1992.

A key objective for Byron Ernest, chair of the accountability panel, was reducing the emphasis on testing. He also chaired the graduation pathways panel, which you'll recall, precipitated the demise of the graduation qualifying exam so that rather than being stuck in an demoralizing cycle of remediation, students now have an array of opportunities to participate in more fulfilling pursuits, such as career-technical education, that lead to a high school diploma.

At the accountability panel's final meeting October 22, Dr. Ernest (the 2010 Indiana teacher of the year) professed that he would be "uncomfortable with putting growth back in if that means the test becomes 30% of the grade again."

State Board of Education Chair B.J. Watts (a teacher, coach, and administrator in the Evansville Vanderburgh School Corporation), contended that education is all about moving students "from A to B," but he agreed: "I don't want to get back to 30%."

Anyway, using a college entrance exam to measure growth during high school isn't technically possible, at least not today, conceded Indiana Higher Education Commissioner Teresa Lubbers. But she supposed that for most if not all schools, "the growth they make is important to them." Perry Township Schools Superintendent Pat Mapes (a former teacher and basketball coach) affirmed that "growth is very important to us," and asserted that "we don't have a growth factor for any of these tests at this time, but I want to have flexibility later on if the decision is made to look at growth from an eighth grade test to an 11th grade test."

As to grading high schools on whether students complete at least three graduation pathways, Senate Committee on Education and Career Development Chair Jeff Raatz (R) of Richmond posited that multiple pathways are essential in today's economy given the growing number of occupations that are or could be rendered obsolete by automation and artificial intelligence. B.J. Watts conveyed the concern that the three-or-more target could incentivize schools "to push students to take pathways that they have no interest in."

For full credit on the SAT/ACT indicator, a school would have to match the state average for the percentage of students who achieve the college- and career-ready (CCR) benchmark, but Commissioner Lubbers advocated for setting the bar higher.

With about 60-65% of students going on to higher education, Indiana would be sending a mixed signal by awarding maximum points to a school where the percentage of students that achieved the CCR benchmark only equaled the state average, warned Commissioner Lubbers, a former chair of the Senate Committee on Education and Career Development. The state average pass rate on the tenth grade ISTEP is a measly 30 percent.

As for removing the high school graduation rate from the accountability formula, Rep. Behning lamented that the grad rate calculation is highly susceptible to being gamed and that he has lost faith in its value.

He decried the large numbers of students who exit high school during the second semester of their senior year purportedly to enroll in homeschool (or virtual school). "These students are hugely deficient in terms of the number of credits they need for a high school diploma. I'm trying to do what's best for kids," said Rep. Behning.

Several others advocated for restoring the graduation rate as an accountability indicator, including Watts, who said he agreed that the homeschool loophole is a problem, but "I don't think the accountability rule is the place to address that." Rep. Behning replied, "The accountability rule is the reason they are doing that." The credibility of high school graduation rates has also suffered from credit recovery scandals.

The three panel votes against the final report: Superintendent Mapes (appointed to the panel by the Senate), Watts (appointed to the panel by the Governor), and Southport High School Principal Brian Knight.

Rep. Behning described the final recommendations as an aspirational system to push and motivate our schools.

IN General . . .

- Crawfordville-based Equitable Education Solutions registers a federal trademark for K12BOOST.
- The Indiana State Police sends a memo to schools addressing the nationwide recall of more than 50,000 Thomas Built school buses. The memo reassures officials that, "The affected buses are still safe to use." ISP adds that "Kerlin Bus Sales will contact the owners of the affected buses directly once they have established a repair procedure." The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration found that the SynTec seat backs on certain models may have been built with styrene blocks that do not comply with federal safety standards due to a lack of sufficient impact absorption.
- Indiana State School Bus Drivers Association President Ron Chew and his wife, Linda Chew, spend $101,000 of their own money to purchase a new school bus with special safety equipment - LED lighting, seat belts and a stop arm camera - during National School Bus Safety Week to benefit Henry County schools for which they drive contracted routes. Ron Chew is in his 40th year of driving; Linda is in year 37.
- Indiana Grown sets a Halloween release date for the updated version of its comprehensive buyer's guide and directory targeted to food service directors to help schools find and source school-ready products for the lunchroom grown or raised by local farmers.

IN Administration . . .

- A special investigation report of the Greenfield-Central Community School Corporation conducted by the State Board of Accounts requests that former business manager Anthony Zurwell, former associate superintendent Ann Vail, and former human resources director Christina Hilton reimburse the district a total of $651,833 for contract overpayments and under-withheld insurance premiums spanning 2010 to 2018.

□ Zurwell was responsible for computing employee salaries as part of his official duties, but the district exercised no effective oversight or review of the calculations to ensure that the correct amounts were paid and withheld, according to the State Board of Accounts.

□ Greenfield-Central has since simplified the language of all district level administrator contracts so that salary and wages are clearly stated. The district has also instituted a series of internal controls to ensure that no single person can manipulate contract compensation.

● District consolidation talks between the Northeastern Wayne School Corporation and Western Wayne Schools are “apparently now dead,” reports the Richmond Palladium-Item.

● Culver Community Schools Corporation earns an energy efficiency rebate of $43,403.35 from NIPSCO, Lockheed, and Trane from a $500,000 investment in new LED panel lighting at Culver Senior/Middle School this Summer.

● A member of the Evansville Vanderburgh School Corporation Board of Trustees asked the Indiana Public Access Counselor whether the EVSC board properly complied with the Open Door Law when it met in executive sessions on August 12 and August 26 to discuss changing the board’s approach to accepting public comment. In Informal Inquiry 19-INF-17, Public Access Counselor Luke Britt responds that the public comment policy and procedure is not an allowable topic for an executive session.

□ EVSC Board member Ann Ennis also noted that trustees meet in executive session for two hours before every regular meeting, resulting in more time spent in Executive Session per year than in the public Regular Meeting. “This office consistently advises governing bodies to use executive sessions sparingly,” responded Britt, who wrote that an executive session “likely should not be held before every meeting of the board or exist as a standing meeting on the board’s schedule unless extraordinary circumstances apply.”

IN Contracts & Compensation . . .

● Teachers in the Noblesville Schools will see an average 9.75% salary boost for 2019-2020 and a 4.15% average increase for the 2020-2021 school year – the most generous teacher pay hike here in more than 40 years. The passage of the November 2018 referendum established funds specifically earmarked for teacher compensation, and the district also spent 100% of the estimated savings from the recently reduced state pension obligation.

● Teachers in the Northeast Dubois County School Corporation will have $2,000 added to their base salary in each year of the two-year collective bargaining agreement.

● The Fort Wayne Community Schools Board of School Trustees approves a two-year agreement with the Fort Wayne Education Association to increase teacher salaries by 2.5% in the 2019-2020 school year and 1.5% in the 2020-2021 school year. In addition, teachers rated effective or highly effective will advance one row on the salary schedule, which provides a $1,175 increase.

□ The new contract includes a two-year pilot to pay teachers for classroom coverage to help manage the substitute teacher shortage. Beginning October 1, teachers will receive $50 for four hours of classroom coverage when they cover another classroom during a planning period or when principals place additional students in their classes due to the absence of another teacher.

● The Plymouth Community School Corporation adopts a collective bargaining agreement that increases the beginning teacher salary to $37,000 and provides eligible teachers with a minimum salary increase of $1,400.

● Richmond Community Schools teachers will see a base salary increase of $3,000 for the 2019-20 school year, reportedly the largest raise for teachers in RCS history. The new two-year contract provides a $500 base salary bump in the second year.

● The two-year contract between the Jasper Classroom Teachers Association and the Greater Jasper Consolidated School District increases the minimum teacher salary to $40,000 and the maximum teacher salary to $77,238.

● The Duneland School Corporation agrees to give teachers a $3,000 salary increase in 2019-2020 and a $2,500 increase in 2020-2021. Returning teachers will also receive a $1,500 stipend in year one and a $2,000 stipend in year two. Mentor teachers will again be paid $200 per mentee per school year. The starting salary for bachelor’s degree holders with zero years of experience jumps to $44,000.

● Administrators, teachers, and staff in the Middlebury Community Schools will receive a 2.0% base increase this year and next.

● The North Spencer County School Corporation agrees to provide a $1,860 raise to teachers with a bachelor’s degree and a $2,490 raise to teachers with a master’s degree.

● The new master contract in the Center Grove Community School Corporation provides a 2.35% across-the-board increase to the teacher salary schedule. However, teachers will see their health insurance premiums rise by nine percent.

● Hamilton Southeastern Schools Superintendent Allen Bourff sees his contract extended through June 30, 2021 on a 6-1 school board vote, with a 2.0% raise that will pay him an annual salary of $189,702, retroactive to July 1, 2019. His 2018-19 incentive compensation was calculated at $14,872.

IN Charter Schools . . .

- After Marian University was unable to begin serving as a charter school authorizer on the timeline that the turnaround schools needed, ReThink Forward resubmits its applications to the Indiana Charter School Board to convert Emma Donnan, Emmerich Manual, and Thomas Carr Howe into charter schools. The schools expect to continue to use the same facilities by taking advantage of the $1 building law. Ownership of the facilities would remain with IPS.

- IPS has expressed concern that use of the facilities by a charter school might meet the federal tax law definition of “private business use,” which could violate the tax-exempt nature of existing IPS bond agreements.

- A new audit report by outside auditors submitted to the State Board of Accounts says that the shaky state of finances at the East Chicago Urban Enterprise Academy “could threaten the school’s ability to continue as a going concern.”

- The audit report through June 30 noted liabilities of $665,335 – including $308,000 to cover teacher payroll during the current academic year, but only $128,531 in current assets – much of which was unavailable for disbursement – and only $13,829 in cash on hand at the end of the 2019 fiscal year. The school has a history of struggling academically as well.

IN Non-Public Schools . . .

- Scecina Memorial High School in Indianapolis announces a $6 million capital campaign for teacher salaries, 1:1 student technology, artificial turf football field, student activities field, weight room, chapel inside the school building, and a more vibrant, engaging, and hospitable front entrance.

- Big Shoulders, a Chicago-based organization that provides support and assistance to schools that primarily serve students from low-income backgrounds, expands into Northwest Indiana after receiving a $16 million gift from the Bruce and Beth White Family Foundation. Big Shoulders will focus on the elementary schools and high schools in the Catholic Diocese of Gary by providing technology and curricular resources, instructional and data coaching, and student enrichment and summer programs.

- The organization will also seek to improve the long-term viability of the Catholic schools through student recruitment activities and expanded access to financial aid.

- Tim Scully, founder of the Alliance for Catholic Education, plans to retire in January from his role as director of the Institute for Educational Initiatives at the University of Notre Dame, a position he has held since 1997. The Institute for Educational Initiatives comprises more than two dozen initiatives focusing primarily on Catholic education.

IN Programs & Curriculum . . .

- The Vigo County School Corporation launches a new Agricultural Career Pathways program.

- The Healthcare Foundation of LaPorte awards $2.8 million to eleven schools to implement substance use prevention programs that will equip more than 13,000 LaPorte County students with strategies to avoid drugs and alcohol.

- Planning and Implementation grants are awarded to La Lumiere, La Porte Community School Corporation, Michigan City Area Schools, MSD of New Durham, New Prairie United School Corporation, Notre Dame Catholic School, Queen of All Saints, Renaissance Academy, Saint John’s Lutheran School, South Central Community School Corporation, and Tri-Township Community School Corporation.

- Washington High School in the Washington Community Schools is moving forward with a College & Career Academy that will be organized into three schools – School of Applied Science & Technology; School of Health, Human & Social Services; and School of Arts, Business & Social Science. WHS invited all local and regional business and community leaders to attend a symposium at mid-month to learn about the concept and how they can become actively involved.

- The South Bend Community School Corporation explores the establishment of an Innovation Network in partnership with three existing charter schools – Success Academy Primary School, Career Academy Middle School, and Career Academy High School – and one new charter school – a Purdue Polytechnic High School, which has applied to the Indiana Charter School Board seeking to open in August 2020.

- As members of the Innovation Network, state tuition support for the charter schools would flow through the SBCSC. District leadership sees this as an opportunity to reverse their enrollment declines, which have accelerated this year.

- Purdue Polytechnic has been looking to expand its model outside the state capital (it operates two high schools in Indianapolis), and we recently told you that conversations were underway with the Hamilton Southeastern Schools. Hallmarks of the Purdue Polytechnic curriculum include project-based and design-thinking challenges with business and industry partners, paid internships, college and career pathways, competencies, and job shadowing. In lieu of a master schedule, each student’s schedule varies weekly depending on the design challenge underway at that point in time and the academic skills that student needs.

IN Referenda . . .

- Thirteen school referenda are on the ballot for November 5. That includes six for construction, six for educational and operational expenses, and one for safety and security. Three districts are seeking both a construction and education/operation referenda.

- Thirteen school referenda represents the highest number in any November election since 2010. Six construction referenda marks the most in any election since May 2015, while six education/operational referenda represents the fewest on the ballot in any election since November 2017.

IN Facilities & Construction . . .

- The Goshen Community Schools moves forward with phase six of a guaranteed energy savings construction plan. The mostly costly piece of this phase is replacement of the chiller at the high school, which will be paid for with General Obligation bond proceeds.

- The Middlebury Community Schools receives local zoning approval for construction of an equine therapy facility designed as an outlet for students who are struggling with social-emotional issues. The Goshen News reports, "Serving as the new facility's equine therapist will be current MCS guidance counselor Kori Cripe, who for the past several years has been operating a similar equine therapy operation out of her home. 'I've had my certification for almost eight years with equine therapy, and I've been working with kids on my own farm. So this is branching out, working with our schools hand-in-hand with families,' Cripe told the (Elkhart County Plan Commission). 'The animals will be taken care of by myself, of course using assistance from students for brushing, grooming, etc. And we're also hoping to work with our high school kids to give them some leadership positions in caring for watering, cleaning out stalls, all that good stuff. I already have all the animals, and they're already all certified nationally to be able to do the therapy work.' MCS received a $500,000 donation toward construction of the facility."

- The Center Grove Community School Corporation Board of Trustees approves two General Obligation bond issues totaling $8.2 million to finance traffic improvements, land for a new elementary school, and miscellaneous maintenance and technology needs.

- The North Spencer County School Corporation engages Stifel Public Finance of Fort Wayne as underwriter for a renovation project to be developed over the coming year and potentially undertaken in 2022 once existing bond debt is paid off.

- Carmel Clay Schools is seeking November bids for Carmel High School interior renovations and Woodbrook Elementary School security and access upgrades, with The Skillman Corporation overseeing the work as construction manager.

- The Northeast Dubois County School Corporation awards a $3.87 million contract to Seufert Construction for an addition and renovations to Northeast Dubois High School to ready the building to accommodate grades seven through 12. The project will include a middle school wing, storm-safe middle school corridor, Project Lead The Way addition, renovation of agriculture space, relocation of the weight room, new locker rooms, and renovation of lab space.

- A facilities assessment for the Duneland School Corporation conducted by Tria Architecture identified 1,500 items to be addressed over the next decade at a cost of $62 million. A consultant told the school board that finding 1,500 items is normal for a district of Duneland's size, reports the Chesterton Tribune. "There's no expectation that Duneland address all the items in the report, but the document is a budgeting tool that easily identifies groups of similar items that need repair, which can improve efficiency and identify opportunities to save on costs by bundling work, according to Tom Szurgot of Tria."

- The DeKalb County Central United School District School Board approves an additional $4.95 million tranche for building improvements at J.R. Watson Elementary School.

- The Auburn Star reports "The project includes a new, larger cafeteria and kitchen and renovations of an enclosed courtyard educational space. According to figures presented to the board in September, based on spring 2020 bidding, the estimated cost of the cafeteria work will be $3.46 million, courtyard renovations will be an estimated $575,000 and soft costs will be $787,875. With the costs of issuing a bond at $122,125, the total project cost will be $4.95 million, the board heard. It will be financed by a general obligation bond. The project had been part of a larger, proposed $37.6 million school facilities upgrade that voters in the school district rejected in May. That proposal had included improvements to three school buildings, upgrades to outdoor athletic fields and a new fieldhouse for activities. After the referendum defeat and a summer 'listening tour' seeking input from the public, the board identified the improvements at J.R. Watson as an immediate need."

- In a ruling released on Monday, the Department of Local Government Finance found in favor of the district in a complaint filed by a taxpayer who questioned whether DeKalb United was improperly splitting off a proposed project from a failed referendum into a separate project to avoid a new referendum. DLGF held that the proposed J.R. Watson project was "an independently desirable end without reference to another project of the district" and the district did not improperly seek to circumvent the remonstrance and referendum process. DLGF noted the estimated J.R. Watson project cost was less than the $5.17 million threshold for voter approval.

IN Transition . . .

- The North West Hendricks School Corporation appoints Scott Syverson as interim superintendent. He's the former chief talent officer for the Indiana Department of Education during the Ritz Administration, during which he served as a member of the state superintendent's cabinet and oversaw seven departments, including educator effectiveness, licensing, and school safety. Syverson is also a former principal of Fishers High School.

- Mike Springer, the recently departed superintendent of the North West Hendricks School Corporation, accepted a buyout package worth $116,631 after agreeing to step down early amid a difference of opinion on how to handle the sexual misconduct allegations against high school football coach Tyler Bruce.

- WRTV-TV Call 6 investigative reporter Kara Kenney reveals to Indianapolis television viewers that Springer, whose contract was not set to expire until June 2020, "will receive $89,480 in compensation in two distributions - one in October and another in January. The outgoing superintendent will receive a $6,000 contribution into his health savings account, as well as $11,576 for nine personal days and 17 vacation days. The board must also pay its annual contribution of $9,575 for the superintendent's annuity for the 2019-2020 contractual year. Springer and his family are eligible for the school corporation's health, dental, vision, and life insurance benefits through August 30, 2020, as stipulated in the superintendent's contract."

Dr. J. T. Coopman, Executive Director

Thank you for being a member of IAPSS!

- Maggie Lewis, majority leader of the Indianapolis City-County Council and CEO and executive director of the Boys & Girls Clubs of Indianapolis, joins the Board of Directors of The Mind Trust.

- Emily Richardson has been promoted to vice president of assessment, research, and legal at Project Lead The Way.

- House Committee on Education Chair Bob Behning (R) is selected to serve as a member of two national education boards. As a member of the Hoover Education Success Initiative Practitioner Council at Stanford University and the National Institute For Excellence in Teaching Steering Committee, Rep. Behning will work with educators and other elected officials on how to advance the teaching profession and improve learning outcomes in K-12 schools.

□ The Hoover Education Success Initiative Practitioner Council is a group of elected and appointed education officials representing a dozen states, both sides of the political spectrum, and legislative and executive government branches.

□ The National Institute For Excellence in Teaching Steering Committee consists of 14 educators and elected officials from across the country, including three members from Indiana, who will develop innovations and advance policies that have a direct impact on the classroom.

- Chiefs for Change, a national entity that seeks to advance policies and practices that make a difference for students, tapped five school chiefs to join the bipartisan network of state and district education leaders, (32 of which are district superintendents) including new Indianapolis Public Schools Superintendent Aleesia Johnson.

□ Superintendent Johnson says, "The support I received through the Future Chiefs program was critical in my journey to become the first African-American woman to lead Indianapolis Public Schools. I have deep respect for the work that Chiefs for Change is doing to ensure equity throughout our nation's schools and look forward to serving as a member of the network."

IN Politics . . .

- While on the campaign trail at assorted Democratic Party county dinners, Sen. Karen Tallian (D) of Portage, the presumptive Democratic nominee for state attorney general, lambasts Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) for not aggressively pursuing the Indiana Virtual School for "bilking" the state out of $47 million. Indiana Virtual closed in September.

- The re-election campaign of Indianapolis Mayor Joe Hogsett (D) releases a 30-second campaign ad spotlighting the Indy Achieves program and featuring a female student named Tapiwa who dropped out of college when her mother became sick and she fell behind on her tuition payments. She received an Indy Achieves completion grant to pay off her college debts so that she could return to school to complete her dental studies.

□ Another Hogsett ad features a school bus driver.

IN Government . . .

- House Speaker Brian Bosma (R) of Indianapolis and Senate President Pro Tem Rodric Bray (R) of Martinsville send a one-page letter October 23 to Superintendent of Public Instruction Dr. Jennifer McCormick (R) and the members of the Indiana State Board of Education describing their proposed solution for implementing a one-year hold harmless policy "in the most timely, least disruptive way possible" for 2019 school accountability grades and Teacher Appreciation Grant (TAG) determinations.

□ The legislative leaders' letter calls upon the Indiana Department of Education to release guidance, and for the State Board of Education to reinforce the guidance through a resolution, stating that schools may use 2018 school accountability grades and/or 2018 assessment results for this year's teacher evaluations to ensure that no teacher loses TAG eligibility as a result of the precipitous decline in state assessment scores on the ILEARN exam. This flexibility is necessary to ensure that TAG's are distributed to teachers before the statutory deadline in December. Sen. Bray and Speaker Bosma indicate that the General Assembly will codify this policy when the 2020 session gets underway in January. They also vow to fast-track legislation in January directing the State Board of Education to implement a similar hold harmless policy for 2019 school accountability grades. "In the meantime, policies dependent on school accountability grades can continue with the 2018 grades in effect until the State Board adopts new grades based on 2020 legislation," they assert.

□ Indiana State Teachers Association President Keith Gambill said in a statement that the actions outlined in the letter are a "step in the right direction." "Kids, teachers, schools and communities should not be penalized for low scores on the first year of a new test. While we appreciate considerations made for teachers who would qualify for a TAG, we also urge legislators to take steps toward adding to base salaries rather than relying on grants and stipends."

- The State Budget Committee was slated to consider release of $1.4 million for the demolition of historic Simpson Hall at the Indiana School for the Deaf at its October 25 meeting.

IN Courts & Conduct . . .

- In Madison Consol. Schools v. Thurston, No. 19A-CT-797, the Indiana Court of Appeals affirms on interlocutory appeal the Floyd County Circuit Court's denial of a Madison Consolidated Schools motion for summary judgment in a lawsuit filed by a former student severely injured in a 2014 school bus crash on I-64 in Floyd County. The appellate panel determined that there were "genuine issues of material fact" as to whether MCS should be prevented from contending that the student's parent had failed to comply with Indiana Tort Claims Act notice requirements in a dispute related to insurance issues.

- The Dearborn County Superior Court rules in favor of the Lawrenceburg Community School Corporation in a lawsuit filed by a student challenging his lengthy suspension from the high school football team after being caught with a vape pen on school grounds. "The fact that the Lawrenceburg High School Student Handbook does not specifically provide for a specific suspension for a vapor pen, does not prohibit a suspension at all pursuant to the remainder of the Handbook," wrote the judge.

- Three families are suing the M.S.D. of Lawrence Township and Community Health after students were mistakenly administered insulin shots at the McKenzie Career Center instead of the tuberculosis test they were supposed to have received.

- A member of the North Grove Elementary School PTO in the Center Grove Community School Corporation has been charged with misdemeanor conversion in Johnson County Superior Court after admitting to improperly withdrawing $1,400 in ATM transactions from the PTO checking account this Summer.

- A former Mitchell Community Schools nurse arrested in March 12 on Felony 6 charges of official misconduct and neglect of a dependent and five misdemeanor counts of neglect of a dependent pleaded guilty last week in Lawrence County Superior Court 2 under a plea agreement to theft and neglect of a dependent charge. State v. Sanders, No. 47D02-1903-F6-000468. The probable cause affidavit alleged that an elementary school nurse, Carol Sanders, substituted aspirin and other non-prescription medication for student prescription medication. Her nursing license has been suspended, and she faces sentencing in November.

- A 35-year-old former Rosedale Elementary School teacher in the Southwest Parke Community School Corporation is charged with two Felony 5 child seduction counts in Vigo County Superior Court 3 stemming from an alleged lengthy sexual relationship with a 17-year-old male Riverton Parke High School student that has also ensnared a now-dismissed teaching aide. State v. Richey, No. 84D03-1910-F5-004134.

□ Southwest Parke Superintendent Phil Harrison tells parents in a statement, "On Monday, September 30, 2019 the Southwest Parke Community School Corporation was informed of an inappropriate relationship between a former teacher and a student. Southwest Parke immediately notified the Indiana Department of Child Services, placed the former teacher on leave, and commenced its investigation. Upon learning additional information through the course of its investigation, Southwest Parke terminated the employment of a teaching assistant who failed to report the relationship, and Southwest Parke also started the dismissal process - which is set by Indiana law - for the former teacher. Southwest Parke further notified the parents. The teacher resigned on Wednesday, October 2, 2019.

□ Superintendent Harrison adds, Southwest Parke takes seriously its obligation to ensure the safety and security of its students. Accordingly, Southwest Parke takes allegations of misconduct extremely seriously and will move quickly to investigate them. Southwest Parke has cooperated fully with the law enforcement investigation and will continue to do so in this matter."

The City of Indianapolis already has a strong association with sports and technology (and the Indiana Sports Corporation is on board with and excited about, the venture), making Butler a natural fit as a collegiate esports pioneer.

"Esports is an excellent example of the collision between sports and technology in Indianapolis," says tech visionary Scott Dorsey, according to a statement released by Butler. "We are a city that embraces our sports legacy and is well positioned to leverage our explosive growth in technology and innovation. Butler's planned esports and technology park will be an important asset in our city as we build on our unique strengths and further develop, recruit, and retain top tech talent to the state."

Butler also hopes that partnerships lead to potential internship opportunities for Butler students, summer camps for community members, and mentorship programs for the esports team.

The physical space will also provide opportunities to expose students to the business side of the esports industry and to learn about and prepare for the exploding number of career opportunities that are available in the fast-growing field.

Eric Kammeyer, Butler's new director of esports and gaming technology, says, "We want to provide an end-to-end solution for those that want to pursue anything that falls under the umbrella of esports and innovative technology, from music and production, to competition, to developing the games they are playing."

IN General . . .

- Indy Achieves accounted for nine percent of the total Marion County students who enrolled in the 21st Century Scholars Program last year. With a total enrollment of more than 4,100 Marion County eighth grade students, Indy Achieves drove a five percentage-point county-wide increase in the rate of eligible students enrolling in the college promise program versus the previous eighth grade cohort.

□ For 2019-2020, Indy Achieves is on pace to more than double the number of Marion County students it enrolls.

- The Plainfield Town Council is set to vote on MADE@Plainfield, a workforce training and certification center jointly proposed by the Plainfield Community School Corporation, Ivy Tech Community College, Vincennes University Logistics & Training Education Center, WorkOne Indy, and the Hendricks College Network. The center would provide access to classrooms and laboratories for high school, college, and adult education beginning in 2021 and would be located adjacent to Plainfield High School.

- IUPUI could be expanding the Summer Bridge program to all students beginning in 2021 as a strategy to lift Fall-to-Spring retention.

□ To alleviate the financial barriers of student participation and to scale the program within existing university resources, the Summer Bridge program would transition from an eight-day program over a two-week period to a five-day program over a one-week period.

IN Enrollments . . .

- The University of Southern Indiana student newspaper The Shield reports that USI enrollment sank for the eighth consecutive year this Fall . . . and has declined by nearly 20% since 2011.

IN Administration . . .

- The University of Notre Dame has cut its carbon footprint in half since 2005. Energy conservation measures that have generated combined annual savings of more than $2 million include the largest green roof system in the state, minimum of LEED silver certification standards for all new construction, use of two natural-gas-fired combustion gas turbines with heat-recovery steam generators that are twice as efficient as a traditional electrical plant, geothermal energy sources, and solar energy arrays. Through a proposed partnership with Indiana Michigan Power that is pending approval by the Indiana Utility Regulatory Commission, Notre Dame will use 40% of the output of the South Bend Solar Project that is expected to be in operation by the end of 2020. By Summer 2021, a 2.5-megawatt hydroelectric generation facility located on the St. Joseph River in downtown South Bend will supply about seven percent of the University's electrical needs.

IN Budgets & Finance . . .

- The University of Notre Dame endowment pool returned 7.2% in Fiscal Year 2019, increasing the value of the endowment to $13.8 billion, up from $13.1 billion at the prior June 30.

IN Rankings . . .

- The Kelley Direct Online MBA program at Indiana University's Kelley School of Business has moved up to second in new 2020 rankings from Poets & Quants, a leading news site about business education. Poets & Quants' ranking of 35 online MBA programs is based on three equally weighted factors: the quality of incoming students, an assessment of the MBA experience by graduates and career outcomes of alumni.

- Purdue University will collaborate with the International Olympic Committee (IOC) starting in 2020 on a bimonthly sports information report.
- Grace College is introducing the Intense Intervention Graduate Licensure Program to meet the growing demands for special education teachers across the nation. The new online program will allow students to add the knowledge and skills necessary to interact and educate those with significant disabilities. Completion of this 15-hour program will enable students to apply for an intense intervention licensure through the Indiana Department of Education.

□ Grace College Professor of Education and Chair of the Special Education Department Cheryl Bremer will serve as program director.

- Trine University prepares for the Fall 2020 launch of an online RN-to-BSN degree by hiring Nadeena Frye as program director. Frye most recently served as dean of nursing for Ivy Tech Community College Northeast in Fort Wayne.

- Manchester University will offer a Master of Science degree in Nutrition and Nutrigenomics, with students who complete the program eligible to take the Commission on Dietetic Registration national credentialing examination for certification as a registered dietitian nutritionist.

IN Fundraising & Gifts . . .

- Indiana University receives a $60 million gift from billionaire Fred Luddy to establish a center for artificial intelligence and machine learning in the School of Informatics, Computing and Engineering - which will be renamed in his honor as the Luddy School of Informatics, Computing and Engineering. This is the second-largest private gift in IU's history. The donation will also fund construction of a new building to house the AI initiative.

● Goshen College will begin construction this Winter on a new Center for Media Arts and Journalism that will serve as the new home of the award-winning student newspaper, student radio station, and television production studio.

IN Government . . .

● U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R) teams with Rep. Derek Kilmer (D-WA) to introduce the Pell Plus Act of 2019, new legislation to promote college completion through a Pell Grant bonus to low-income students in their third and fourth years on a path to on-time graduation. The Pell bonus would be matched dollar-for-dollar by participating colleges and universities. The net effect of the proposal would be to triple the amount of Pell Grant assistance during the final two years of study for students who are on track to on-time completion. Using the 2019-2020 academic year as a baseline, the nation's lowest income students would receive an annual grant of $18,585 to attend the college of their choice.

● U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R) and Rep. Susie Lee (D-NV) join forces to introduce the Student Veteran Protection Act making schools, not student veterans, responsible for reimbursing the Department of Veterans Affairs for GI Bill overpayments. "Veterans have already sacrificed so much for our country – they shouldn't be forced to deal with the bureaucratic process of repayment," says Rep. Banks.

□ A 2015 Government Accountability Office report found that the VA made $416 million in overpayments under educational assistance programs during fiscal year 2014, affecting approximately one in four veteran beneficiaries and about 6,000 schools. By making overpayments the responsibility of schools instead of students, schools would return overpayments directly to the VA, instead of sending the payments to students who would then be responsible for reimbursing the VA. According to the Congressional Budget Office (CBO), schools return 97.7% of overpayments when a student's enrollment status changes, while students only return 87% of overpayments to the VA. By simplifying the overpayment process, CBO estimates the bill will save the VA about $120 million over 10 years.

IN Transition . . .

● The Franklin College presidential search committee is co-chaired by Robert B. Brown and Christine S. Fields with assistance from the executive search firm Isaacson, Miller.

□ Outgoing President Thomas Minar, who joined Franklin in 2015, intends to step down June 30, 2020.

● The University of Notre Dame Board of Trustees elects Rev. John I. Jenkins, C.S.C., to a fourth five-year term as president of the University, effective at the conclusion of his third term June 30. Jenkins' vision for Notre Dame is to become "one of the preeminent research institutions in the world, a center for learning whose intellectual and religious traditions converge to make it a healing, unifying, enlightening force for a world deeply in need."

● The Butler University Board of Trustees unanimously votes to extend the contract of President James M. Danko through August 2024. He was inaugurated in 2011.

● The Vincennes University Board of Trustees votes to extend the contract of President Chuck Johnson. Dr. Johnson took over as president in December 2015 after three years as provost.

● The Vincennes University Board of Trustees reappoints John Stachura for another year as board chair.

● Marissa Rowe is the new executive director of the Indiana Education Savings Authority.

● Trine University welcomes Whitney Bandemer as its first vice president for health sciences, effective November 13, the university announced in a news release. The new cabinet-level position will have total oversight for the university's Health Sciences Education Center, located on the Parkview Randallia campus in Fort Wayne.

□ Bandemer most recently served as vice president for human resources and strategic initiatives at Manchester University, where she was critical in the development, launch, and accreditation of MU's College of Pharmacy and in the construction of its Fort Wayne campus. She also served in a similar capacity at the Appalachian College of Pharmacy in Oakwood, Virginia before moving to Indiana.

● Vincennes University taps Tony Hahn for the post of vice president of government relations, effective November 1, succeeding the late Phil Rath. Hahn comes to VU from Purdue University where he has served as director of state relations and policy analysis for the past seven years. Before joining Purdue, Hahn was deputy director and chief of staff for the Indiana State Department of Agriculture. Hahn earned his bachelor's degree in agribusiness management from Purdue in 1999, before receiving his law degree from the Indiana University School of Law.

● Marc Levy will retire as executive director of the Questa Education Foundation on June 30 after eight years leading the Fort Wayne-based scholarship-granting organization.

INDIANA LEGISLATIVE INSIGHT

Cities of Dreams nightmare for Rs?

Republican mayors could become victims of their own success in 2023

Westfield Mayor Andy Cook (R) only faces a little-known Libertarian challenger, but he still airs a spot in regular rotation on cable television that largely resembles the TV spot used by Carmel Mayor Jim Brainard (R) in his own primary challenge . . . and the back story here may be one that explains the next generation of politics in Hamilton County, perhaps the county most important statewide to Hoosier Republicans.

And lest you stop reading now, we'll serve up a spoiler alert of sorts: local Republican candidates in Hamilton County may be a "Patient Zero" for other GOP hopefuls going forward (read: legislative candidates), but, more importantly, may portend similar changes for other evolving Republican cities and counties (or parts). Yes, we're looking at you, Boone, Hendricks, and Johnson counties . . . and south Lake County.

The Cook ad highlights what he portrays as Westfield's strong finances (low taxes, low debt, and a healthy rainy day fund) while he's brought in more jobs, improved community quality of life with amenities, and added more police to keep students safe in schools. A similar strategy was employed by Brainard to counter Carmel primary polling that pointed to constituent concerns about overspending, high debt, and misplaced priorities.

While Mayor Cook does not face a Democratic or independent challenger, he is still running an aggressive campaign after GOP city council compadres were surprisingly defeated in the primary litigated over similar scenarios, including big spending for the mayor's Grand Park vision, proposed physical and cultural changes for downtown, and alleged overly sweet development deals.

A shadow group of arguably establishment Republicans are now running for the council as independents, further roiling the local scene, which started to show some fractures when some Westfield Republicans went after then-Sen. Luke Kenley (R) in the 2016 SD 20 primary.

The Westfield mayoral contest is a race to watch as so-called "RINO" mayors (as well as others; don't be surprised to see Democrats launch a strong challenge next year to Rep. Todd Huston (R) in a demographically changing district) in Hamilton County find themselves defending "quality of life" initiatives - so-called "downtown Disneylands" - major projects like the Carmel Performing Arts Center and attendant Arts and Design District and Monon Center; Grand Park and an outdoor venue/park in Westfield; Federal Hill and the riverwalk in Noblesville; and The Yard culinary district in Fishers.

These GOP officials are facing an increasingly diverse electorate - moving "up" from Indianapolis or simply choosing one of the HamCo communities as they move to Indiana for new professional and high tech jobs - potentially rendering some of these officials victims of their own success from attracting jobs and development by emphasizing quality of life and unique amenities.

In just one or two elections, each of the big four municipalities in Hamilton County will no longer be reliably Republican in strictly local races that turn on things from roundabouts to development deals, or mega-million-dollar amenities that don't pay for themselves as promised to a change in pace for convenient old-school downtowns. Change (and paying for it) in Carmel, Fishers, and Westfield may be the nonpartisan issue going forward . . . while stability and lack of change in Noblesville could be just as intriguing a counter force four or eight years from now under their new incoming mayor.

Big Hill for Selby to climb

Tension-wracked AG disciplinary hearing

A dramatic week of testimony - and lots of fancy lawyering - gives Supreme Court Disciplinary Commission Hearing Officer Myra Selby lots of food for thought in the disciplinary matter involving Attorney General Curtis Hill (R).

While Hill's attorneys sought to portray their client's actions as being mischaracterized, a stream of witnesses to his behavior at the 2018 Sine Die party seemed largely confirming and damning, and testimony by the GOP legislative leaders at the time (did anyone consider how this might set a precedent for future inquiries into internal procedures of the General Assembly?) certainly didn't help the attorney general.

After all this, we expect former justice Selby to engage in a two-step analysis: (1) Assessing the nature of his conduct at the party and in response to the accusations; and, (2) Determining whether this was "offensive behavior" that is subject to discipline, or even more improper conduct not subject to vagaries in discipline. If she decides his actions were inappropriate, she will have to consider whether the conduct is appropriate for discipline, and, if so, what, form of discipline is appropriate. Team Hill raised critical vagueness and fairness issues she must address in potentially breaking new ground.

Federal Office Races . . .

● The third quarter 2019 federal campaign finance numbers are out. We've run some quick and dirty calculations to see how things shook out in key categories, beginning with where incumbents fared compared to each other. Some of the numbers are skewed by the mid-cycle decision by U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R) not to seek re-election (the averages do not include her totals), and the bifurcated fundraising by U.S. Rep. Greg Pence (R) that sees him spending lots of money on raising money, but splitting it between his campaign committee, the National Republican Congressional Committee, his personal political action committee, and the PAC supporting his brother, the Vice President. In CD 04, Joe Mackey (D) seems to have confused the cycle and quarter, so we took the liberty of trying to straighten it out (no guarantees that we're any more accurate than he was!)

□ The average incumbent Hoosier House member raised $763,576 during the current 2020 election cycle (a number that would have likely been larger had Rep. Brooks not opted out of a re-election bid). Average spending per incumbent through September 30 was $562,759, with the average net amount raised by incumbents ending the quarter at $200,818. The cash-on-hand average for incumbents (minus Rep. Brooks): $450,996. U.S. Rep. André Carson (D) leads the pack in cash on hand, and if you factor out Rep. Brooks, who hasn't had to spend as much without a 2020 race facing her, U.S. Reps. Jackie Walorski (R), Pete Visclosky (D), and Trey Hollingsworth (R) follow – in large part due to favorable committee assignments.

□ Lots of people pay attention to the burn rate, but because of the Brooks and Pence situations, you should probably toss that pair of outliers out in looking at the delegation as a whole. Rep. Pence actually posted a loss on the quarter, but that's not really an accurate picture of his finances given the octopus-like nature of his fundraising and distribution structure. U.S. Rep. Trey Hollingsworth (R) had the lowest burn rate, while U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R) was next most efficient in terms of money raised per dollar spent. U.S. Rep. Larry Bucshon (R) just broke even in what he spent versus what he raised for the third quarter.

□ Greg Pence Victory, a joint fundraising committee behind a lot of the Pence campaign email fundraising missives (some of which went to his campaign committee, some to his brother's vice presidential PAC, and some to the National Republican Congressional Committee), raised $93,218 during the third quarter, spent $28,567, and opened October with $121,352 in cash on hand . . . while Rep. Brooks decided not to seek re-election, she still spent $10,329 on "fundraising consulting" with the Virginia-based The Townsend Group and another $4,250 to Laken Sisko Consulting during the first two days of the quarter. . . . the Baron Hill For Indiana committee runs a balance of $140,213 as of September 30 . . . just seven days before suspending his CD 05 campaign, Steve Braun (R) loaned his campaign $40,000 and spent some $8,000 on consultancy and more than $21,000 on polling . . . unsuccessful 2018 CD 02 nominee Mel Hall (D) still has cash-on-hand of $91,890 . . . the campaign committee of former U.S. Rep. Todd Rokita (R) maintains cash on hand of $45,217 . . . the campaign committee for former U.S. Rep. Dan Burton (R) spent $5,782 during Q3, leaving $99,636 in the treasury after a $3,000 donation to the Ellis Island Honor Society, and $1,000 contributions each to the campaigns of U.S. Rep. Jim Jordan (R-OH) and U.S. Sen. Jim Risch (R-ID) . . . the campaign committee for former U.S. Sen. Joe Donnelly (D) boasts a September 30 cash balance of $333,947 . . . the number that makes Hoosier Democrats wince: the campaign committee for former U.S. Sen. Evan Bayh (D) maintained a September 30 cash on hand balance of $1,218,259.

● Seemingly concerned about a potential 2020 CD 01 primary challenge, the campaign of U.S. Rep. Pete Visclosky (D) hires a researcher from Maine (for ≈$6,000) apparently to build a dossier on Hammond Mayor Tom McDermott, Jr. (D).

□ A request for assorted records dating back some 15 years was made to the Mayor's Office at mid-month, a request that the Visclosky campaign characterizes as routine and not special, but which Mayor McDermott says will take several days of employee time to compile, and rhetorically questions whether similar requests were directed to the mayors of Hobart and Crown Point. "It's gonna be a real pain in the butt, and he doesn't give a crap," the mayor said on his paid political show on WJOB 1230-AM in Hammond a few days after the request was received. "He's trying to shut me up it's totally intimidation," Mayor McDermott says of the records request. "It's obvious that he's trying to intimidate me. He looks like a bully. He looks like he's a jerk. [This is] dirty politics, East Chicago dirty old school politics." He also wonders why he had to hire a researcher from out East to handle the work. "He couldn't have hired anyone from the Region to do this?" "I just don't get it. You can't find one Region person to do your dirty work?!"

● In CD 05, former Rep. Christina Hale (D) is off to an impressive start in her open seat campaign, raising more than $325,000 during the third quarter, more than any Democratic campaign has ever raised in a single quarter in this district, even in an election year, the most contributions raised by any Democratic congressional challenger in the State of Indiana in an "opening quarter" in more than a decade (since 2008), and not only tops the receipts of any of her potential Republican opponents – who must first win an increasingly crowded and caustic primary race – but also outpaces the entire Democratic and Republican field combined, and by a decent margin. She jump-started her effort with $5,700 of her own funds, and the total includes $45,500 from political committees out of the gate . . . will Hale's strong early financial performance convince any Republicans that while someone can win the GOPrimary by hewing to the right, a far more formidable than usual Democratic candidacy by Hale, with national post-primary financial support, could require a more moderate approach? And could some of the already announced candidates who have affirmatively opted to stake out a place on the philosophical spectrum concerned only about May may grow to regret some of their early public pronouncements come next Summer? . . . Krieg DeVault LLP's Deborah Daniels and former two-term Hamilton County sheriff Mark Bowen will be campaign co-chairs for State Treasurer Kelly Mitchell (R) in her bid.

State Office Races . . .

● The Governor's re-election campaign has "significantly surpassed" the number of petition signatures required to earn him access to the May 2020 Republican primary ballot. He has more than doubled the required 4,500 signatures (500 minimum per congressional district). While official records of when campaigns cross the required threshold aren't kept, Indiana Republican Party Chair Kyle Hupfer, also the Governor's campaign manager, commented that this threshold was reached faster than other Indiana presidential, gubernatorial, and senatorial campaigns in recent history.

□ Reminded about the difficulty of the task and asked about his chances for ballot access, prospective gubernatorial primary challenger Brian Roth (R) tells Ed Breen on WBAT 1400-AM's Good Morning Grant County in Marion, "We think we can get on (the ballot) in about two months. We have a lot of support; there's a lot of energy out there." He continued, "At this point I don't think they believe we'll get on the ballot, but we will. There's zero doubt in my mind. We will be on the ballot."

□ When the Westfield resident was asked why he felt he needed to run for governor, Roth's response began with "Well, I mean, um" He pledged that if elected he would not seek a second term, and that he would donate his state salary to not-for-profit organizations. During his mid-month interview, he claimed to have had "a very good three weeks" in the race, but bemoaned the uphill climb he faced running against a popular incumbent. "The Indianapolis press was very interested early; and now they won't touch me with a 10-foot pole. I think that's probably because the political system has probably gotten to them and said, 'Don't give this guy any free press if you don't have to.' So within Indianapolis, I'm getting virtually no support, and outside of Indianapolis, everybody wants to talk to me."

● The Governor's re-election campaign receives a $10,000 contribution from the Indiana Credit Union PAC at mid-month, as well as a $10,000 contribution a few days later from the Pokagon Band of Potawatomi Indians, with whom his office is now negotiating terms of a compact . . . on Thursday, his campaign accepted a $50,000 contribution from Tulsa's Joe Craft, president and CEO of Alliance Resource Partners, L.P., the third-largest coal producer in the eastern United States. This was Craft's first-ever Indiana contribution.

□ James Holdings LLC in Auburn makes a $25,000 mid-month contribution to the Lieutenant Governor's Friends of Suzanne Crouch campaign committee.

● New Marion County Prosecutor Ryan Mears (D) says that since he announced his decision at the end of September to no longer prosecute simple marijuana charges, 228 pending cases have been dismissed. To reflect this change, he adds MCPO "has allocated staff from drug prosecution to address expungements and driver's license suspension issues."

□ Look for Prosecutor Mears' action - which has not been followed by any of the state's other prosecuting attorneys - to become a catalyst for discussion of marijuana decriminalization in the 2020 race for attorney general. Sen. Karen Tallian (D), the presumptive Democratic Party nominee, will use it to promote a reasoned discussion of her decriminalization proposal, pointing out how other prosecutorial priorities can be sustained and grown by diverting resources from simple weed whacking . . . while Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) will vehemently oppose any change (you got a great preview of the Tallian-Hill debate even before Hill took office as AG at The BGD Legislative Conference in December 2016). The wild (Get Out of Jail Free) card: The prospect of someone other than Hill becoming the GOP nominee for attorney general, and agreeing with Tallian as legislative opposition to assorted marijuana laws on both sides of the aisle starts to crumble under the weight of public opinion.

IN Legislative Races . . .

● The Vectren Corporation Employees Federal PAC makes a $5,000 mid-September contribution to the Senate Majority Campaign Committee.

● Facing her first election in just about seven months as Indiana's newest senator, Sen. Stacey Donato (R) wastes no time hitting the cash circuit, holding her first fundraiser in Indianapolis last week, just five weeks after being sworn in. Sponsor levels ranged from $300 to $1,500, with the individual ask set at $300.

● Belinda Drake (D) is seeking the HD 89 Democratic nod to face Rep. Cindy Kirchhofer (R) – and she does so with a chip on her shoulder after being denied access to the ballot for the Indianapolis-Marion County City-County Council in District 13 in May. She is running on “LIFE* Platform: L - Legalization and decriminalization of marijuana throughout the state of Indiana. I - Improved common-sense gun regulation to protect our youth and communities from preventable deaths by gun violence. F - Fair and inclusive state policies to strengthen our democracy and ensure our government works for ALL Hoosiers. E - Equitable education and economic stability for all. None of this platform will be possible without environmental and climate Justice,” she explains.

IN Mayoral Races . . .

As Sen. Jim Merritt (R) launches a major personal negative attack on Indianapolis Mayor Joe Hogsett (D), a new Mason Strategies poll for IndyPolitics.org (10/14-17; 350 LVs, margin of error \pm 5.2 percentage points) shows Mayor Joe with a comfortable 57% - 23% lead (15% unsure; four percent for the Libertarian), virtually static from August's 55% - 25% showing. Hogsett enjoys a 72% approval rating (to 19% disapproval).

● In Indianapolis, Mayor Joe Hogsett (D) raised $1,652,956 during the penultimate (April 13 - October 11) pre-election reporting period and posts cash-on-hand of $972,381. More than 70% of individual contributions were $250 or less, with more than 57% at $100 or less. He has spent some $4.6 million during the course of the race, while Sen. Jim Merritt (R) raised only $515,700 during the reporting period and has about $152,000 left. The Eli Lilly and Company Political Action Committee gave $10,000 to the Hogsett effort in mid-September . . . Fort Wayne has seen $1.9 million spent in the mayor's race, although that includes dollars depleted in a competitive Republican primary race. More than $1.4 million has been expended since the May primary, with Mayor Tom Henry (D) adding $589,294 to his coffers during the period, leaving him with cash on hand of $533,261, and challenger Tim Smith (R) generating $900,462 since the primary to bring his cash stash to less than half of the Henry haul, $240,728. Smith has spent $1.4 million in 2019, vs. just $686,528 for the incumbent . . . in the open seat Muncie race, Dan Ridenour (R) outpaces the finances of Terry Whitt Bailey (D) by a 2:1 ratio . . . Anderson Mayor Tom Broderick (D) raised 10 times more cash than his GOP challenger in the quadrennially competitive Anderson race . . . the open Kokomo mayor's office sees Abbie Smith (D) raise almost $204,000 this year, vs. about $135,000 for Tyler Moore (R), and her cash on hand at the end of the reporting period doubles Moore's, in parts thanks to a $55,000 boost from the outgoing mayor's surplus campaign cash . . . effectively running unopposed, Goshen Mayor Jeremy Stutsman (D) stockpiles some $70,000, raising questions about how that might be spent in the future

IN the Presidential Race . . .

● Zionsville's Jim Bopp confirms for us that he has been retained as “special counsel for strategic and campaign finance law advice” for the Trump campaign, and his Terre Haute law firm was paid $25,000 by the Trump campaign in August.

● The President's third quarter approval rating in Indiana took a dip from the prior quarter, according to Morning Consult. He earns 49% approval (down from 51% in Q2), while 47% disapproved of his work. His net Hoosier approval has now decreased by 19 percentage points since he took office.

● The first 2020 presidential general election debate will occur Tuesday, September 29, 2020, at the University of Notre Dame.

● South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D) continues to directly take on his top competition for the Democratic nomination, following up his more aggressive and passionate CNN Ohio debate performance (an affirmative new strategy you will see as his new normal going forward – aimed at knocking down U.S. Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) and presenting himself as the “moderate” or “establishment alternative to a faltering former vice president Joe Biden (D)?) with a digital ad castigating others for backing “Medicare for All.” The “Makes More Sense” spot highlights the Buttigieg “Medicare for All Who Want It” health care plan, which his campaign claims is a “bold approach to health care [that] would not kick millions of people off their private health care, and would give them the option to choose the plan that's right for their them.” This spot followed another ad in Iowa which promoted his climate plan. “Instead of beating up some Americans over this issue, I want to recruit them as part of a new, clean energy economy,” he explains to Iowans . . . echoing their candidate's work in South Bend, the Buttigieg campaign rolls out a new Iowa television spot. “This part of the country, the so-called ‘Rust Belt,’ was gutted by corporate decisions over the course of the last fifty years,” hizzoner narrates. “Right now, so many communities are being left behind. The solutions aren't going to come from Washington” . . . the day after the Ohio debate, the campaign sent out an email to supporters proclaiming the CNN debate as “one of the biggest moments of the campaign – and today, we're matching it with one of our biggest fundraising days yet. In the past 24 hours, we've grown from 580,000 donors to more than 600,000. We've raised more than $1 million” . . . Bloomberg Government finds “Silicon Valley is donating to the 37-year-old mayor of South Bend, Indiana over the former vice president by a 5-to-1 margin” . . . while the Associated Press in Iowa queries whether Mayor Pete has the “warm fuzzies” to win hearts and minds of Democrats, TIME suggests his calm demeanor is converting 2016 Sanders voters who have matured . . . importantly, Gerald Seib writes in the Wall Street Journal the weekend after the Ohio debate that “the more-centrist candidates who had been getting less attention lately,” including Buttigieg, “found clearer voices as they challenged Mrs. Warren. Collectively, they now seem more willing to express the broader concern that has been running just beneath the surface among party leaders: that Sen. Warren is pulling the Democratic agenda and center of gravity too far left with her array of expansive policy proposals Mr. Buttigieg, though, may be the candidate who is best positioned to take advantage of this moment. President Trump's decision to pull back U.S. forces in Syria and allow Turkish troops to attack the U.S.'s longtime Kurdish allies opened the way for Mr. Buttigieg to speak out on national-security issues, where he has both strong feelings and standing because of his experience as a Naval officer who served in Afghanistan. Mr. Buttigieg said he, like the president, wants U.S. troops in the region to come home, but used his personal experience to criticize the way Mr. Trump is doing that: "When I was deployed," he said, Afghan forces "put their lives on the line just by working with U.S. forces. I would have a hard time today looking an Afghan civilian or soldier in the eye after what just happened over there. And it is undermining the honor of our soldiers." Mr. Buttigieg also has a healthy $23 million in campaign funds on hand, according to new campaign-finance reports released this week, behind only Sen. Warren and Sen. Bernie Sanders. Those funds have bought him a fairly robust staff and ground operation in the important early states of Iowa and New Hampshire" . . . Mayor Buttigieg sought to alleviate a potential mid-month controversy (and reprise of his first campaign stumble, over police shootings and the African American community), removing a prominent Chicagoan from the host list for a local fundraiser after former State House reporter Brian Slodysko wrote about the attorney's involvement in backing Chicago's former mayor in seeking to prevent release of a video of the shooting of a black teenager by a Chicago Police officer - who was later convicted in connection with the incident. The campaign also quickly announced it would return the man's contributions and other he effectively bundled . . . as for that money race, hizzoner continues to impress, with his $23,378,518 in cash on hand entering October trailing only U.S. Sen. Bernie Sanders (D-VT) and his $33,734,560, and Sen. Warren's $25,717,674. The Buttigieg booty more than doubled that of any other hopeful, and was some three times that of the former veep . . . the Buttigieg Iowa polling seems sufficient to win about 15% of the Hawkeye State's delegates . . . The State in Columbia, South Carolina, headlines that "Buttigieg focus groups found being gay 'a barrier' for some black South Carolina voters" . . . Bloomberg News reports that Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg and his wife, Priscilla Chan, have privately offered help to the Buttigieg campaign. The two attended Harvard together, and Mayor Pete was among the first 300 Facebook users. The couple reportedly suggested several potential hires to campaign manager Mike Schmuhl, two of whom later signed on to Team Pete - but Buttigieg criticized Facebook on Thursday over its no-filter policy on phony political ads . . . in an ESSENCE com exclusive op-ed, Mayor Buttigieg details a new comprehensive plan to build and secure "lasting power" for Black women in America . . . a 2019 Senate impeachment trial would keep five of Mayor Pete's top opponents from Iowa/New Hampshire.

□ "It's a new three-way race in Iowa," writes Susan Page in the lead Monday story in USA TODAY. She finds that Buttigieg, "who was initially seen as a long-shot presidential contender, has surged within striking distance of former vice president Joe Biden and Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren in the first-in-the-nation Iowa caucuses, a Suffolk University/USA TODAY Poll finds." At the end of June, this poll had Biden ahead of Sen. Warren by double-digits, with Mayor Buttigieg back in the pack with six percent. The new poll of 500 likely Democratic caucus-goers (margin of error, 4.4 percentage points): shows Biden with 18%, Warren at 17%, and Buttigieg more than doubling his support, up to 13%, more than the 11% combined for the rest of the field - and 1½ times the Sanders support. He also leads the entire pack among only Ohio debate watchers, with 19%, followed by Biden and Warren in a 17% tie . . . Buttigieg jumps to second place in Iowa State University/Civiqs poll of likely Iowa Democratic caucusgoers released Thursday. He trails Sen. Warren's 28% with 20%, jumping from fourth place in September. Sen. Sanders' 18% places him third. The Iowa State University/Civiqs poll surveys the same pool of voters each month leading up to the caucuses to understand how voter preferences are shifting. Dave Peterson, a professor and faculty fellow in political science who organized the poll, says Buttigieg's ground game in Iowa is paying off. Mayor Pete ranks ninth among candidates Iowa Democratic voters do not want to see win the nomination, lower than any of the other major four contenders . . . a new CNN poll conducted by SSRS among Democratic-leaning registered voters Buttigieg and Sen. Harris are tied for fourth with six percent support (unchanged for Mayor Pete), however, only 27% would feel enthusiastic should Buttigieg become the party's nominee, well below the "about 4 in 10 saying they'd be enthusiastic about Biden (43%), Warren (41%) or Sanders (39%)." "Among debate watchers, 74% have a favorable view of Buttigieg, vs. 54% among those who followed news instead." CNN polling also finds Buttigieg lading the President 50% - 44% in a hypothetical 2020 matchup, despite 49% of those polled claiming never having heard of him (37%), or having no opinion (12%) about the Hoosier mayor . . . Buttigieg gains 4.5 points in the past month in the RealClearPolitics Iowa average, while a pre-debate (10/08-10) Firehouse-Optimus Iowa survey places him third at 17% trailing only Sen. Warren, at 25%, and former VP Biden, at 22%, effectively within the margin of error . . . in the CBS News/YouGov Battleground Tracker (10/03-11) among Democrats in Iowa, Biden and Warren are tied at 22%, Sen. Sanders is close behind at 21%, and Buttigieg is next at 14%, but with the 4.6 percentage-point margin of error, those positions could be reversed . . . the CBSNews/YouGov national numbers in the 18 earliest primary/caucus states show Buttigieg in fifth place with five percent. The Washington Post dives below the top lines and finds that Mayor Pete retains 73% of his backers from September to October in a highly fluid contest in which Sen. "Warren was the biggest beneficiary of those changes, slicing away one-eighth of supporters" from Sen. Sanders and Mayor Buttigieg "and more than a fifth of those who'd previously backed Sen. Kamala D. Harris (D-Calif.). At the same time, Warren held more of her support than did any other candidate" . . . a mid-October (10/13-16) Emerson poll of Iowa Democrats shows Biden and Warren locked at 23% and Buttigieg next at 16%, with Sanders at 13%, again meaning that with the 5.5 percentage-point MOE, the order could again be flip-flopped . . . he remains in fifth place (behind the usual suspects and billionaire impeachment advocate Tom Steyer (D)) with five percent, unchanged in rank and percentage of the vote - for a fourth consecutive week - in the latest Morning Consult poll of all Democratic primary and caucus voters nationally, with the youngest candidate accruing the highest share of voters over 45 years old and who are white. He is down two points, however, over the week among D primary and caucus voters in Iowa, New Hampshire, South Carolina, and Nevada. He drops to a fifth-place tie with Sen. Harris, with five percent . . . Mayor Pete dips to seventh place (down from sixth) in the latest Fox News poll conducted by Beacon Research (D) and Shaw & Company Research (R) among Democrats in South Carolina, continuing to post just two percent, the same as in this poll in July and lower than the margin of error . . . a Fox News baseline Democratic Poll in Wisconsin by Braun Research finds Mayor Pete fourth with seven percent in the Badger State . . . a Quinnipiac national poll of Demo-leaning voters shows Mayor Pete staying in fourth place, but dropping from seven percent to just four percent (with a 4.7 percentage-point margin of error) from late September Quinnipiac polling, his lowest share in this poll since July . . . the Real Clear Politics moving average of several major polls finds Buttigieg fourth with 6.0% support . . . in the post-Ohio debate Morning Consult poll of all D primary and caucus voters in Iowa, New Hampshire, South Carolina, and Nevada, Mayor Pete holds on to sole possession of fourth with eight percent, a two-point gain over the week, and he is tied with Sen. Harris at six percent with one-point growth over the prior week among all Demo primary and caucus voters nationally. He sees a three-point increase in net favorability after the debate, an improvement only topped by the former veep and U.S. Rep. Tulsi Gabbard (D-HI) (and Mayor Pete assets that “there is no basis” on which to claim that Rep. Gabbard is a “Russian asset.”

□ Governor Eric Holcomb (R) holds steady in his Morning Consult third quarter approval ratings, at 51% approval, 23% disapproval, and 26% unsure. His net approval among all voters is +28, +18 among independents, and only (- 1) with Democrats. His net approval ranks midway (26th) in the national pack.

□ The Indiana Democratic Party reviews the numbers and concludes that “Nearly three years into Eric Holcomb’s term, Hoosiers still don’t know who their governor is,” as “More than a quarter of those polled have never heard of Eric Holcomb, the second highest rate in the country for a sitting governor.” He trails only Gov. Mike Parson (R-MO) in anonymity, and Gov. Parson took office at mid-term to fill a vacancy.

IN Other Political News . . .

● Attorney Stan Wruble is the new chair of the St. Joseph County Democratic Party, replacing County Councilmember Joe Canarecci (D) who resigned over job conflicts . . . and Bob Holbrook leaves his post as Noble County Democratic Party chair due to health issues.

● Hoosiers are heavily invested in Kentucky’s gubernatorial race, with about $110,000 directed by Hoosiers to the re-election effort of Gov. Matt Bevin (R-KY) and $83,000 by Hoosiers to his challenger, Attorney General Andy Beshear (D-KY). There is not as much ideological money flowing as you might expect, and there are a lot of contractor dollars in the mix. You could look at some of the usual suspects among Hoosier contributors and accurately predict toward which Kentucky candidate their money would flow, save for a maximum contribution to Gov. Bevin by Indianapolis developer Michael Browning and a five-figure passel of contributions from individuals associated with Indiana casinos to AG Beshear. The rough Indiana geographic breakdown (using zip codes):

	Northern IN	Southern IN	Total IN
Bevin (R)	$ 47K	$ 63K	$ 110K
Beshear (D)	$ 48K	$ 35K	$ 83K

□ Hoosier contributions come down much more lopsidedly on the side of the Republican nominees for attorney general and secretary of state than they do at the top of the Bluegrass State ticket.

● Hoosiers for Conservative Values, a single-candidate super PAC in support of former U.S. Rep. Luke Messer (R), made one expenditure during the third quarter, a $15,000 mid-September contribution to the “Stand with Corey” committee established to draft former Trump 2016 campaign manager Corey Lewandowski (R-NH) for the New Hampshire U.S. Senate race. The HCV political action committee ends the quarter with $11,535 in cash remaining.

● According to Morning Consult’s third quarter senator approval ratings, both of Indiana’s two U.S. senators improve marginally in approval from the second quarter.

IN Federal Circles . . .

● Both of our U.S. senators are original cosponsors of S.2602, a bipartisan bill that would exclude vehicles to be used solely for competition from certain provisions of the Clean Air Act, and both cosponsor the Graham resolution condemning the House impeachment inquiry.

● U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R), a member of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, appears October 18 on the WBAT 1400-AM Good Morning Grant County show, and under questioning from Indiana Journalism Hall of Fame member Ed Breen, does what many of his colleagues did that same week: rebuked the President over the Syrian situation without naming him in the reprimand – though he does give some of the blame – by name – to the previous administration. Sen. Young said that the President “is absolutely right to examine our enduring presence in places where those threats have been defeated,” like Afghanistan. But he says that we also learned from the Obama Administration’s “premature disengagement” in Iraq that we don’t want to create vacuums where “nefarious actors can step in.” The President “deserves great credit for defeating ISIS,” he says, but should offer more explanation and “outline in greater detail how this withdrawal will contribute to a more peaceful and stable region,” and “They have not done that.” The withdrawal is, “frankly, tragic for that region” Sen. Young adds before concluding, “It is what it is. We need to be constructive and prospective.” Looking back, he suggested, the President should consult with leaders of military and Congress, but he also noted that it was “difficult to get information from [the Obama] Administration” when he served on the Senate Committee on Armed Services . . . Sen. Young discussed the importance of the House quickly passing the United States-Mexico-Canada Agreement (USMCA) for Hoosier farmers and manufacturers during the Tuesday Republican Senate leadership gaggle. “The one thing that remains unfinished business as we look forward, that is so important to our economy, is to pass this USMCA deal,” he said, noting that Indiana is “the most manufacturing intensive state in the country. One out four manufacturing businesses in my state directly export to Canada or Mexico, resulting in roughly 60,000 jobs. So it’s important to our manufacturing workers, it’s also very important to our ag economy 95% of our farms in the state of Indiana are family farms This is about saving our rural communities. President Trump has struck a good deal, a very good deal. Nancy Pelosi needs to move forward with it to sustain our economic health,” Sen. Young contends.

● U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) delivered a Senate floor speech October 17 on the Syrian situation, tweeting a summary of his remarks: “We cannot keep fighting everyone’s wars when we run trillion dollar deficits atop 22 trillion in debt back home. I’m glad President @realDonaldTrump is disentangling us from unwise conflicts in the Middle East.” WITZ 104.7-FM in Jasper caught up with Sen. Braun in his hometown after he spoke at the Jasper Chamber of Commerce annual luncheon early this month, and found him defending the President’s decision to pull American troops out of Syria. “In one way, I didn’t like the fact that the Kurds helped us out, but, that is their dispute long-term, not ours,” said Sen. Braun. “President Trump ran on, why should we be the world’s policemen when we’re running trillion-dollar deficits, when there is no mention of the United Nations, or of our European allies – why should we put our soldiers in the crossfire of something that’s not going to be solved anyway.” Braun added more Senators would voice their support for the president’s decision, if they were able to vote on it in secret.”

● U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) led a letter signed by U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) and all the House members of Indiana’s Congressional delegation (save U.S. Rep. André Carson (D)) to the President and Vice President expressing concern with efforts by U.S. Sen. Lisa Murkowski (R-AK) – but not by name – to block production of bioengineered salmon via the FY 2020 Senate Agriculture Appropriations bill, an action that they contend would negatively impact the state of Indiana and the future of biotechnology. Bioengineered salmon was developed by AquaBounty Technologies, which has started production at a land-based contained facility in Albany. “If this provision is enacted, Hoosiers will see an immediate and detrimental impact. Dozens of jobs will be terminated, 160,000 healthy fish will be destroyed, and millions of dollars invested in transportation and infrastructure will be wasted. AquaBounty’s investment has spurred much-needed economic vitality in this rural and underserved region of our state,” the letter explains. During a Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation hearing at mid-month, Sen. Young discussed how AquaBounty’s facility is benefiting Hoosiers, while other witnesses testified that wild catch cannot keep pace with the global growth and human population, and the demand for healthy seafood. The letter reminds the President and Vice President that the Food and Drug Administration approved bioengineered salmon in November 2015 after a rigorous and decades-long review process, determining that the salmon is as safe to eat as traditional farm-raised Atlantic salmon., and that after surmounting “several other regulatory hurdles, AquaBounty began production earlier this year.” They add that a pending Senate provision “unwinds these approvals, and would immediately ban the sale and distribution of AquaBounty salmon in the U.S. if enacted. This provision imposes a costly and duplicative consumer study requirement by a federally funded advisory committee – wasting taxpayer dollars and causing irreparable damage.” They add, “We firmly believe that this provision directly contravenes the letter and intent of the Executive Order on Modernizing the Regulatory Framework for Agricultural Biotechnology Products that was issued in June 2019. This provision is not based on science, sound policy, or law, and it imposes undue regulatory burdens rather than avoiding them. Further, it sends the wrong message to industries that are working to develop innovations in agricultural biotechnology. Indiana plays a key role in the agricultural industry and strongly values the possibilities that aquaculture and biotechnology bring to our economy. More fundamentally, should this provision become law, it would undermine your commitment to facilitating the kind of innovation that undergirds our nation’s global leadership in agricultural advancements. Companies will almost certainly begin posturing to move operations overseas to commercialize their products.” The letter concludes by asking the President and Vice President “to oppose this ‘poison pill’ provision because of the numerous ways in which it will harm Hoosiers, damage U.S. innovation and agriculture, and create a dangerous precedent that will undermine confidence in our regulatory system.”

● The 354-60 House vote to oppose the President’s action on Syria had unanimous Democratic support and 129 Republican votes. Of the 60 House Republicans who voted against condemnation of the President’s actions with respect to Syria and America’s Kurdish allies, five percent were Hoosiers: U.S. Reps. Jim Baird (R), Trey Hollingsworth (R), and Greg Pence (R). Reps. Baird and Pence are the delegation’s only first-term members, and the President won CD 06 and CD 04 with his largest respective Indiana margins.

□ Both of Indiana’s Democrats and four of the seven Hoosier Republicans voted for the measure, and U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) was slated to have cosponsored the condemnation motion in the Senate.

● U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R) early this month discusses the impeachment inquiry on WBAT 1400-AM’s Good Morning Grant County. “I don’t think that there is a fair process right now as to what’s happening when I was on the Benghazi Select Committee, we had a very fair process. The other side was allowed to ask questions, was allowed to participate in any way. That is not happening as I understand it. Now I am not on the committees that are involved in this, but I am reading and I am being told this by my colleagues who are on the committees. We certainly treated the entire process with respect and the somber occasion that is, and for Adam Schiff to have even made up and parodied what that telephone conversation was was completely inappropriate it wasn’t what was in the transcript. And that’s why people are that unhappy. The fact that he’s making fun of it. This should be a really very serious and somber undertaking whenever you take on something like impeachment, and that is not how it is being handled” ... as the Syria situation unfolded earlier this month, Rep. Brooks joined more than 90 of her colleagues to introduce legislation to impose sanctions against Turkey in response to Ankara’s military offensive against U.S.-allied Kurdish forces in Northern Syria. She urged the President to immediately reconsider his decision to remove troops from Northeastern Syria arguing that his move would threaten our national security and provide terrorists opportunities to plan and launch attacks. “Withdrawing our troops in Northeastern Syria is proving to be destructive for the region and has left our Kurdish allies unacceptably vulnerable to Turkey’s hostile invasion in Syria,” said Rep. Brooks. “Our Kurdish allies need our support now more than ever to stop the growing strength of terrorist organizations, specifically ISIS, because ISIS detainees are escaping and posing a major threat to our homeland and world. I’m proud to join this bipartisan, bicameral effort to recommit to protecting our allies, establishing peace in Syria and preserving our national security.”

● U.S. Rep. André Carson (D) sees the House unanimously pass his legislation to rename the U.S. Post Office Circle City Station at 456 North Meridian Street in Indianapolis after former U.S. Sen. Richard Lugar (R). Every member of Indiana’s congressional delegation sponsored this bipartisan bill.

● U.S. Rep. Larry Bucshon (R) introduces H.R. 4734 to designate the U.S. Post Office in Dana as the Ernest 'Ernie' T. Pyle Post Office. "The art of storytelling ensures that history is remembered. It ensures the good times are celebrated and the bad times are never repeated," says Navy vet Bucshon. Dana's own Pulitzer Prize-winning "Ernie Pyle answered the call to tell the stories of America's fighting men and women on the front lines during World War II. In an age when the average American had limited access to news, Ernie Pyle risked, and ultimately gave his own life to ensure that Americans knew the stories of sacrifice and hardships our fighting men and women endured. I am pleased to introduce this bill with the support of the entire Indiana House delegation. Dedication this U.S. Post Office in the memory of this American hero and Hoosier will help ensure his story and his legacy live on" . . . Rep. Bucshon is an original cosponsor of H.R. 4700, the "Pipeline Safety Act of 2019," introduced by U.S. Rep. Fred Upton (R-MI) that would reauthorize the nation's pipeline safety program for two years and provide the Pipeline and Hazardous Material Safety Administration and the states with resources and authorities to accelerate the hiring of pipeline inspectors and better protect 2.7 million miles of pipeline infrastructure. The pipeline safety program's 2016 authorization expired October 1 . . . Rep. Bucshon issued a statement after voting against the "SHIELD Act," which his office characterizes as "an attempt by House Democrats to federalize the election process and limit the free speech of Americans." The bill passed 227-181 on a virtual party-line vote. He says of H.R. 4617, the "House Democrats' latest attempt at government overreach is a federal takeover of the election process. Their legislation is a wolf in sheep's clothing - they claim that it merely includes provisions to stop foreign influence through reasonable protections. However, in reality it will have substantial consequences on American citizens by suppressing their First Amendment rights and vastly expanding the power and reach of the federal government." Rep. Bucshon continues, "We can and must secure our election process from foreign influence through a reasonable and informed approach that does not hinder the First Amendment rights of Americans. I support strengthening the Foreign Agents Restrictions Act that targets bad actors, codifying existing Federal Election Commission regulations on internet ad sponsorship, and expanding prohibitions on donations by foreign nations. These are real steps we can take to protect our democracy without hindering the free speech of Americans, as House Democrats are so eager to do."

● U.S. Rep. Trey Hollingsworth (R), in a nod to October as Breast Cancer Awareness Month, tells constituents "In Congress, I've supported increased funds for the National Institutes of Health (NIH) and the National Cancer Institute (NCI) for cancer research and cures," and he then poses his "Question of the Week: Do you support expanding public funding for cancer research? Yes, the government should fund cancer research. No, only private companies should fund cancer research. No, only universities should fund cancer research. A combined effort from the government, private companies, and universities is necessary" . . . last week Rep. Hollingsworth told constituents that "This month is National Cyber Security Awareness Month, a collaborative effort between the government and industry to raise awareness of the importance of cyber security not only in our military, but in our personal lives and businesses as well. In the last year, more than half of small businesses have suffered a breach and billions of people were affected by data breaches in 2018." His "Question of the Week: Do you support a strong partnership between the federal government and businesses to ensure our information is better protected against cyber-attacks?"

● U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R) and 20 of his Republican House colleagues have co-sponsored legislation sanctioning Turkey for its aggression. "Turkey's ruthless assault on our Kurdish allies will leave them isolated by the international community," he tweets. "Turkey must understand actions have consequences. They've attacked a U.S. ally and will see swift bipartisan punishment just as President Trump promised in the red line he set" . . . as characterized by the Washington Post, Rep. Banks "railed against the idea of including Huawei in the (China trade) deal, tweeting that 'Our national security shouldn't be up for negotiation with #China. American companies shouldn't do business with #Huawei full stop. If we allow Huawei access to American data, that means the #CCP will have access to American data. That's unacceptable' " . . . in a Fort Wayne Journal Gazette op-ed, Rep. Banks blasts the concept floated by former U.S. Rep. Beto O'Rourke (D-TX) under which "religious institutions [would] lose their tax-exempt status if they disagree with him on same-sex marriage." He labels this "an outrageous assault on the First Amendment and our country's beautiful tradition of religious freedom. One of our foremost freedoms is freedom to believe," writes Rep. Banks. "We can have an internecine debate about it in the public square. That's fine. But when the government begins to choose who is 'orthodox' and who is 'unorthodox,' that is an affront to American tradition and a violation of our First Amendment." Under the Beto plan, "the federal government would hold effective control over the religious beliefs and traditions of all Americans. Churches that dissented to government doctrine on social issues such as marriage and sexual orientation would soon find themselves in a financially impossible situation. How could the Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception, the 160-year-old church downtown, hope to pay its property taxes? It simply would not be able to. O'Rourke's proposal, in addition to being unconstitutional, would pit churches with millions of American members against the U.S. government. If the federal government began officially discriminating against the Catholic Church, each of its 70 million American members would be forced to choose a side. And the devout would have their love for this country stolen from them" . . . Rep. Banks is named a co-chair of the Future of Defense Task Force by the chair and ranking member of the House Committee on Armed Services U.S. Rep. Seth Moulton (D-MA), until recently a presidential candidate, is his co-chair. "Since he entered Congress," Rep. Banks "has been focused on the national security issues that will define the next generation," said Ranking Member Mac Thornberry (R-TX). "He's sounded the alarm on the national security threat posed by China through adversarial companies like Huawei and ZTE, and he's provided constructive solutions to recharge our own organic defense innovation base. Rep. Banks' fresh-thinking will be a boon to this Task Force." The bipartisan eight-member panel is chartered to review U.S. defense assets and capabilities and assess the state of the national security innovation base to meet emerging threats. "The future is coming, and we need our military to be ready. I am honored to be tapped to lead this important Task Force and help our country brace for new, complex national security threats coming from China and Russia," said Rep. Banks. The panel's first hearing is October 29 . . . Rep. Banks teams with a fellow member of the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs, U.S. Rep. Susie Lee (D-NV) (whose husband runs the company that owns the Ohio County casino), to introduce the bipartisan "Student Veteran Protection Act," a measure that would change how GI Bill overpayments are reimbursed by making schools, not student veterans, responsible for reimbursing the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs for GI Bill overpayments. "Veterans have already sacrificed so much for our country - they shouldn't be forced to deal with the bureaucratic process of repayment,” says Rep. Banks. “This common-sense and bipartisan bill would ensure veterans won’t have to endure unnecessary financial hardship or bureaucratic red-tape.” Their bill would shift the financial burden from the student veteran to the school, where the duo says it belongs. According to the Congressional Budget Office, schools return 97.7% of overpayments when a student’s enrollment status changes. However, students only return 87% of those overpayments to VA – causing veterans to lose benefits over time. Simplifying the overpayment process, should save VA some $120 million over 10 years . . . just a few short weeks after he and National Public Radio engaged in a tiff of sorts over what the network considered to be Rep. Banks’ mischaracterization of some impeachment matters and remarks during an All Things Considered broadcast, Rep. Banks stepped back into the Lion’s Den, joining NPR’s Lulu Garcia-Navarro on Weekend Edition Sunday, October 20, to discuss Syria. He called his vote on the non-binding resolution to condemn the President’s withdrawal of U.S. troops from Syria as “less as a rebuke of the Administration, and more as a voice of support of our maintained efforts in Syria as we combat the threat of ISIS and to stand with our Kurdish allies” He explained that “when you read the script of the resolution, there’s nothing in the resolution that necessarily condemns the Administration unless the Administration completely abandon the situation in Syria. And that’s what I would disagree with. I don’t want to see us abandon a situation in an area where if we did, the imminent return of ISIS would be the dominant situation that we would be dealing with for the years to come I supported the resolution because I don’t believe we can afford to turn our backs on this region. But the impetus for that is the threat of a returned and resurged ISIS. And that’s what is most concerning to me. If we see a resurgence of ISIS as many of us are worried and predict that we will, this will be a decision by this Administration that we will live to very much regret.” He adds that he is concerned about Russia moving in – “very much so. And many of my colleagues on the Armed Services Committee were fully aware that the Russians are very much aligned with Turkey and President Erdogan. And that vacuum that we create when we pull out of situations in this area is often filled by not just Russia but China, our greatest adversaries on the world stage. So, again, that’s why I and so many Republicans – that’s why we supported this resolution calling on the Administration to maintain a central focus on this region” . . . also on NPR, asked about the President’s reversal on hosting the G-7 Summit at his Doral property in Florida, Rep. Banks said he was “glad to read that he reversed that decision the distraction that it created I think alone shows that the President ... probably made a very wise decision to retreat from holding it at one of his properties, to hold it somewhere else where we’ll be far more productive I appreciate that the President made that decision. Whether that sets any norm moving forward, it shows that the President is taking the advice of his advisors to do so. And I appreciate that type of leadership” . . . Rep. Banks pens an op-ed for The Federalist about revisiting Section 230 of the Communications Decency Act (CDA) of 1996 and scrutinizing Big Tech’s legal protection. The headline: “If Big Tech Can Censor Political Speech, It Can Police Illegal Speech.” He begins his missive by declaring “Major technology companies, a.k.a. ‘Big Tech,’ have too much power. For too long Big Tech companies have been allowed to operate under a double-standard that has padded their wallets and eroded the liberty of American citizens.” He attributes this to § 230, and bemoans the fact that “immunity protections are upheld despite well-documented evidence of illicit activity conducted on Big Tech platforms, such as drug trafficking, terrorist recruitment and coordination by the Islamic State and Hamas, distribution of sexually explicit content, including that involving minors, and more. Enter the double-standard. Big Tech’s claim that they cannot possibly remove illegal content runs hollow given the time and effort they spend censoring lawful political speech. Since the 2016 presidential election, tech companies – namely, Google, Facebook, and Twitter – have begun to censor the online content of many dissident conservative pundits, news organizations, and other accounts. In addition to outright banning from platforms, methods of censorship include ‘shadow-banning’ (using algorithms to make content hard to find), ‘demonetization’ (refusing to allow content creators to receive ad revenue or donations from the platform), rescinding advertisements for Republican politicians, and more. For online content creators, such censorship means the loss of thousands if not millions of impressions, followers, and dollars they rely on. Facebook and Google have also censored liberals who oppose their agenda such as Rep. Tulsi Gabbard and Sen. Elizabeth Warren. Regardless of one’s thoughts on the politics of the people Big Tech targets, it is harmful to our national discourse and representative government when certain viewpoints are muzzled and even excluded from the free exchange of ideas. As to the consequences of online censorship, Big Tech’s biases will no doubt affect the 2020 election.” Rep. Banks believes that “This should not be a partisan issue. Why should we entrust control of our elections to a few tech companies who face little accountability? As a conservative, I distrust any centralized entity that imperils the constitutional rights of Americans, whether from Washington D.C. or Silicon Valley.” He writes that “It is time for Section 230 to be revisited. Big Tech needs to be held accountable for this double standard. As they ensnare virtually every dimension of our public and private lives, it is time for their business models to be scrutinized” . . . Banks uses a Washington Examiner website op-ed to take on a Democratic colleague at the point of the impeachment inquiry sword: “Even the staunchest opponents of this president should at least admit that those leading the impeachment process should behave as trustworthy and non-partisan as possible. Impeachment is a weighty process. It could result in the removal of a duly elected president, the victor of a free and fair election. Democrats need to convince the public this impeachment is not just a partisan attack on a sitting president ahead of the 2020 election. By leaving (Adam) Schiff installed as the head of this impeachment inquiry, they hurt their case.” He contends that House Democrats have decided that “Schiff can lie and get away with it,” explaining that “By striking down the Republican resolution to censure Rep. Adam Schiff, congressional Democrats just sent a loud and clear message that you can lie in Congress and get away with it. They impugned not just the impeachment inquiry but the entire House of Representatives.” He cites “three clear instances of Schiff lying,” and suggests that impeachment talk cease and “we should get back to business as usual and pass legislation” . . . Rep. Banks tells Ed Breen Wednesday on WBAT 1400-AM’s Good Morning Grant County show in Marion, “It’s frustrating” in Washington these days, whether you like the President or not. He is not pleased about what he portrays as the Democrats’ “sham process,” a “make it up as you go” affair behind closed doors just one year from the election. He explains to listeners, “All the while the Senate and Mitch McConnell say ‘Even if you do that in the House, we’re not going to do it in the Senate,’ which tells the American people how much of a farce all of this is, as far as it goes in the House. This not about removing President Trump. This is about injuring a presidential candidate and overturning the will of the electorate in 2016, preventing a fair election in 2020. That’s what it’s about; it’s not about removing a president.”

● U.S. Rep. Jim Baird (R) introduced the “VA DROP Act” on Thursday, legislation to direct the Secretary of the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs to ensure that VA medical facilities with an on-site pharmacy or with a law enforcement officer present to monitor the disposal location, have physical locations for the disposal of controlled substance medications. He calls H.R. 4817 “commonsense legislation (that) provides for the secure disposal of controlled substances by creating a safe, anonymous, and continuously available way for veterans to easily dispose of unwanted medications.” Rep. Baird notes that “VA patients are at a significantly higher risk to suffer from an opioid-use disorder than the general public,” and adds, “I’m proud Indiana’s Roudebush VA Hospital has led on this effort and is the model for this legislative proposal.” U.S. Reps. Jim Banks (R), Greg Pence (R), Larry Bucshon (R), Pete Visclosky (D), Jackie Walorski (R), and Susan Brooks (R) are original cosponsors; like Rep. Baird, Reps. Banks, Bucshon, and Pence are military veterans . . . according to the Lafayette Journal & Courier, Rep. Baird was one of the cadre of House Republicans who asserted what they saw as their rights to intrude upon a closed-door impeachment-related hearing which many of their fellow GOP colleagues were already attending, as expressly allowed under House rules set by Republicans.

● The Indiana Department of Environmental Management abruptly cancels an RFP to select a vendor that would fill the State’s need for implementing all components of an underground storage tanks (UST), petroleum remediation, and the excess liability trust fund (ELTF) management system.

● Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) was a speaker at the mid-October Allen County Right to Life Uniting Our City for Life Banquet, where he offered an update on the status of the investigation into the recent discovery of more than 2,400 fetal remains on the properties of Dr. Ulrich (George) Klopfer and other relevant court cases. Of interest: there already was a nationally prominent keynote speaker for the 22nd annual banquet, but General Hill was accommodated in a speaking spot in a key area of the state for social conservatives, who will comprise the bulk of the Northeast Indiana Republican state convention delegation.

● Indiana is in line to receive $4.4 million from the $117 million multistate settlement with Johnson & Johnson and its Ethicon surgical products unit over allegations that the medical product manufacturer deceptively marketed its pelvic mesh products.

● This year’s Indiana Society 114th Annual Dinner on December 7 will honor Indiana University, celebrating its 200th anniversary on January 20, 2020; and the Simon Family will be honored as 2019 Hoosier of the Year. The event will be held at Loews Chicago Hotel, a new venue this year. For only the second year, the Indiana Society will present a special Hoosier Hero Award. This year’s recipient, Tyler Trent, will be honored posthumously for his courage while battling osteosarcoma. Governor Eric Holcomb (R) and First Lady Janet Holcomb will help kick off the program. Proceeds from the 2019 event go to scholarships for Chicago-area students attending IU.

● Up to $3 million in funding appropriated to the Governor’s Next Level Recovery initiative will support the launch of up to six comprehensive addiction recovery networks across the state over the next two years. Three regional partnerships – one each in northern, central, and southern Indiana – are awarded grants from the first round of funding, totaling up to $1.5 million, to support completion of their recovery network.

□ The Division of Mental Health and Addiction will award contracts to the Health and Hospital Corporation of Marion County (Central Region), Southlake Community Mental Health Center, dba Regional Health Systems (Northern Region), and Community Mental Health Center, Inc. (Southern Region) for DMHA comprehensive addiction recovery centers Health and Addiction. The estimated eight-month value is $1.5 million ($500,000 for each region). The evaluation team received nine proposals.

● In Indiana Vote by Mail, et al. v. Indiana Election Comm’n, et al., No. 1:19-cv-04245, the nonprofit entity Indiana Vote by Mail and five Hoosier registered voters filed suit in U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana against the Indiana Election Commission and Secretary of State’s Office seeking state decertification of direct-recording electronic (DRE) voting machines lacking a verifiable paper trail, and which they allege are vulnerable to hacking. DRE machines are used by 58 counties. The State plans to retrofit 2,000 electronic machines – about 10% of the total – before May to enable them to produce a paper record. The Office of the Secretary of State is doing the work with about $6 million, less than 10% of the $75 million sought for the project in budget negotiations.

● On November 25 (Thanksgiving week), the Bureau of Motor Vehicles will hold a public hearing on the controversial proposed rule concerning procedures to change gender information on a driver’s license or identification card. BMV asserts the proposed rule “will streamline the process for amending an individual’s gender information on a driver’s license or identification card and ensure uniformity in the records maintained by the Bureau of Motor Vehicles and the Indiana State Department of Health. The proposed rule change will create a more consistent process and makes minor nonsubstantive amendments to bring further clarity to the rule.”

● Following a difficult week defending his law license before a Supreme Court Disciplinary Commission hearing officer, how does beleaguered Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) plan to unwind?

□ Look for him to travel to Evansville Saturday, October 26, after we headed to press with this issue, to be the featured speaker at the monthly meeting of the Second Amendment Patriots, the group founded and led by Sen. Jim Tomes (R).

● We recently told you about the Indiana Office of Technology readying a major project to create a shared service for customer/constituent relationship management (CRM), which manages various aspects of agency-public interactions, and the State Budget Committee Friday was slated to allocate the release of a small sum ($690,000) to jumpstart the initial effort. The scope of this project includes the build out of a CRM solution for four state agencies as well as the creation of uniform framework that can be rolled out to subsequent agencies as needed.

● Sensing the final opportunity for redistricting change in the coming census cycle, Common Cause is making plans on Organization Day “to pack the State House with citizens calling for reform” and making “the process more transparent and open to citizen participation” . . . and the Indiana State Teachers Association is seeking to turn out as many advocates as possible for a “Red for ED” Action Day at the State House on Organization Day.

□ While SEA 750-2019 requires counties to cease use by 2030 of voting machines that do not provide a verifiable paper trail, the plaintiffs want that date moved up by the courts due to the exigencies of the situation. They are represented by a team that includes election lawyer Bill Groth of Indianapolis and Jim Harper of Valparaiso, the 2018 Democratic nominee for secretary of state. "Mounting evidence indicates that foreign actors, including agents of the Russian government, have tried and will continue to try to hack into American voting machines," explains Groth. "Cybersecurity experts agree that the most important steps that states can take is to adopt machines with a paper trail and to conduct random, risk-limiting audits. Unfortunately, most Indiana counties do not take either of these steps."

□ According to the complaint itself, "There is a concrete and non-trivial risk that voters in those Indiana counties that continue to use DRE voting systems without a [paper trail] will be less likely to cast an effective vote, and to have that vote counted, due to the fact that votes cast on DRE voting systems may be altered, lost, corrupted, diluted, or effectively not counted on the same terms as Indiana voters who cast their ballots using voting equipment with a [paper trail], which unlike DRE voting systems, enable a meaningful manual recount procedure and/or a risk limiting audit."

● The Indiana Public Retirement System commits $200 million to a trio of alternative investment strategies, according to Pensions & Investments. INPRS awards $100 million to multistrategy reinsurance manager Hudson Structured Capital Management, a new manager for the Fund that invests in property and casualty, auto, and other insurance sectors. That team replaces reinsurance manager Nephila Capital, which was managing $44 million in a diversified reinsurance portfolio. INPRS will retain its $122 million investment in Aeolus Capital Management's Aeolus Property Catastrophe Keystone Fund, another reinsurance fund. "From the pension fund's $1.8 billion real estate portfolio, investment officials committed $75 million to a net-lease real estate fund managed by Angelo, Gordon & Co., an existing manager. The fund focuses on buying properties considered critical to a company's operations and leases them back to the company on a long-term basis," and a team that "seeks industrial, high-yield companies with improving credit." In the private equity portfolio, INPRS commits $21 million to PCP MT Aggregator Holdings, using an initial $15 million in proceeds from the sale of Millennium Trust Company (a co-investment made in 2015 alongside buyout fund Parthenon Investors IV) to Abry Partners. PCP MT Aggregator Holdings is invested in the new buyer holding company.

● Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) joins Indiana in a New York-led bipartisan investigation by 47 state attorneys general into possible antitrust violations by Facebook, saying "corporations must be held accountable for following the law," and "we must follow the facts to determine whether Facebook has engaged in anti-competitive behavior in violation of state and federal antitrust laws." He says that anticompetitive behavior may hurt consumers by leaving them with fewer choices and higher prices. A social media company, for example, might be able to charge higher prices for advertising if it successfully thwarts competitors from gaining a foothold in the marketplace. "To protect consumers and the free market, we must promote conditions under which all entities may compete on a level playing field in accordance with the rule of law," General Hill said. The multistate investigation is also examining whether Facebook has compromised consumers' personal data and privacy.

● Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) joins a bipartisan coalition of 46 state and territory attorneys general in calling on Facebook, Craigslist, and eBay to take proactive measures against alcohol sales on their platforms that they contend frequently violate state laws. He explains that "When making purchases like these online, you never fully know what you're getting. It could be extremely dangerous and detrimental to consume alcohol that might not be tested and regulated by the appropriate agencies." In a letter, the attorneys general note that the 21st Amendment invests the right to regulate the sale of alcohol to each state and points out concerns that unlicensed, unregulated, and untaxed alcohol sales are taking place on digital platforms. The letter asks the platforms to take the following specific actions: (1) Review the current content posted to the companies' websites and remove illegal postings for the sales and/or transfer of alcohol products; and (2) Develop and deploy programming to block and prevent platform users from violating state law by posting content for the sale and distribution of alcohol products on their websites. The AGs also invited the companies to join with them to form a working group with stakeholders from government and industry to further explore how to establish practical and effective protocols for preventing illegal alcohol sales.

● As an interim study committee wrestled with the decision to recommend additional taxes for vape products and, if so, the best way to tax the products, a new report from the Urban-Brookings Tax Policy Center reiterates that a tax increase on so-called "sin" products doesn't always translate to revenue growth, as the behavioral changes that may be sought by imposition of such taxes (such as discouraging youth vaping) may result in limited revenue potential and render such tax streams unreliable . . . but after three Hoosiers have died due to lung issues linked with e-cigarettes, any incremental tax revenue (perhaps some $2. million annually) may take a back seat to discouraging Hoosier youth from vaping.

● Box v. Planned Parenthood of Indiana and Kentucky, Inc., No. 18-1019, the appeal over an Indiana law question whether a state, consistent with the 14th Amendment, may require an ultrasound as part of informed consent at least 18 hours before an abortion, was on the conference list for the Supreme Court of the United States for a sixth time on October 18 . . . and will find itself relisted now for a seventh time (apparently leading the SCOTUS field this term) as the justices did not make a decision on granting or rejecting a writ of certiorari.

IN the Economy

● The unemployment rate in Indiana dropped by one-tenth of a percentage point – for a fourth consecutive month, the longest such stretch in almost 2½ years – to fall to just 3.3% for August. The last time Indiana’s unemployment rate was lower than 3.2 percent was in the 11th year of Democratic gubernatorial domination – December 2000 (although back then we wrote the preliminary seasonally adjusted December unemployment rate was 2.8%, up from 2.6% in November, and 2.4% in October, numbers that were ultimately jacked up in the benchmarking). The current rate constitutes the lowest monthly unemployment rate Indiana has experienced since the peak of the national financial crisis in July 2009, when unemployment in the state soared to 10.6 percent.

□ Indiana’s unemployment rate has decreased 7.4 percentage points since July 2009. September resulted in an unemployment rate three-tenths of a percentage point lower than the 3.5% unemployment rate posted one year earlier in September 2018. Indiana is tied for 18th among the 50 states and Washington, D.C. for lowest monthly unemployment – up three slots from the August finish of 21st, and our best showing of 2019 (better than the 20th place for lowest unemployment in January). There were 28 states and the District of Columbia with higher September unemployment rates than the Hoosier State.

□ Indiana’s unemployment rate continues to hold below the national unemployment rate, which decreased by two-tenths of a percentage point from August to September (and by the same amount over the year), down to 3.5% after sitting at 3.7% for three consecutive months. With the exception of two months when it was equal (in October 2014 at 5.7% and April 2019 at 3.6%), Indiana has hovered below the U.S. rate for more than 5½ years (69 out of 71 prior months). Indiana’s unemployment rate is now seven-tenths of a percentage point lower than in January 2017, when the new administrations assumed office both nationally and at the state-level. Indiana’s decrease, however, comes at a lower rate than that seen in the national unemployment rate, which has decreased by 1.3 percentage points since January 2017. Our rate of decrease is also well below the rate of decline that most of our neighboring states have enjoyed over the same period (though Indiana’s unemployment rate in January 2017 was far lower than what our surrounding states posted at the time, giving our surrounding states more room to fall).

Rate of Change in Unemployment Rate

	09/19	01/18	01/17	vs. 01/18	vs. 01/17
Indiana	3.2%	3.3%	3.9%	(- 0.1%)	(- 0.7%)
Illinois	3.9%	4.4%	5.2%	(- 0.5%)	(- 1.3%)
Kentucky	4.4%	4.3%	5.2%	0.1%	(- 0.8%)
Michigan	4.2%	4.5%	5.0%	(- 0.3%)	(- 0.8%)
Ohio	4.2%	4.5%	5.2%	(- 0.3%)	(- 1.0%)
National	3.5%	4.1%	4.8%	(- 0.6%)	(- 1.3%)

□ Indiana maintained the lowest monthly unemployment rate for September compared to our immediate neighbors, phenomenon we’ve now catalogued for 37 consecutive months. Only Illinois joins Indiana in enjoying a decrease in the unemployment rate from August to September, while Kentucky experienced a one-tenth of a percentage point over-the-month increase. On a year-over-year basis, Indiana and all of our surrounding states recorded unemployment rate decreases, as did the national average. For a second consecutive month, Illinois recorded an historically low unemployment rate, at 3.9% – but note that Indiana has not been at or above 4.0% since February 2017.

Monthly Unemployment Rates, Indiana vs. Neighbors

	09/19	09/18	08/19	07/19	06/19	05/19	Monthly	Annual
Indiana	3.2%	3.5%	3.3%	3.4%	3.5%	3.6%	(- 0.1%)	(- 0.3%)
Illinois	3.9%	4.2%	4.0%	4.2%	4.3%	4.4%	(- 0.1%)	(- 0.3%)
Kentucky	4.4%	4.3%	4.4%	4.3%	4.1%	4.0%	0.0%	0.1%
Michigan	4.2%	3.9%	4.2%	4.3%	4.2%	4.1%	0.0%	0.3%
Ohio	4.2%	4.6%	4.1%	4.0%	4.0%	4.2%	0.1%	(- 0.4%)

□ Indiana’s total labor force – the number of people who have a job or are actively looking for one – posted a net decrease of 2,722 from August to September, constituting the fifth consecutive monthly decrease – a continuing contraction which should be cause for concern, particularly given that it is the longest such stretch since early 2017 (the combined decreases in May through August totaled 32,268). The Department of Workforce Development attributes the September decrease in the labor force to a loss of 2,934 unemployed residents and an increase of 212 employed residents. Indiana’s total labor force effectively remains at 3.38 million – just as it did from July to August, putting a halt to the slippage we have seen in the three months prior, which, in turn, followed an impressive 27-month labor force expansion streak. The labor force in September is down from the seasonally adjusted record high of 3.42 million set in April. An estimated 109,340 Hoosiers are unemployed and seeking employment, up marginally from August.

□ The state’s 64.5% labor force participation rate dipped from August to September, but the rate continues to remain above the national rate of 63.2%, which remained constant over the month. Indiana’s labor force participation rate has now outperformed the national average for 64 consecutive months (more than five full years).

□ Private sector employment in Indiana declined for a third consecutive month (down by 3,400 from August), the longest such streak this year. Prior to April, private sector employment had grown over prior-month levels for nine consecutive months. Much of the September decline can be attributed to job losses in the Leisure and Hospitality (- 2,000, following a loss of 1,600 such jobs in August, which led the state) and the Manufacturing (- 1,000, after being down by 1,500 jobs in August) sectors, although these losses were partially offset by gains in the Construction (1,700) and the Financial Activities (400) sectors. On a year-over-year basis we have seen private sector job growth on the order of 21,500 jobs. Total private employment of 2,737,700 stands 5,600 jobs above the historic peak of 2,732,100 seen in December 2018. September saw the lowest unemployment insurance claims in the reference week (12th of the month).

□ Fayette County leads the state in September unemployment rate at 4.4%, followed by Vermillion County at 4.3%, and Lake County at 4.2%, the same three counties that paced the state in August, but Vermillion and Fayette were tied (and at higher 4.7% rate). Only those three counties ended September at or above 4.0% unemployment down from six in August, and from nine counties from July. As recently as January, more than 50 counties had recorded 4.0% or higher unemployment. Seventy counties enjoyed a September unemployment rate at or below 3.0%, up from 44 in August and only 28 in July. As recently as May there were 55 counties that experienced unemployment below a rate of 3.0 percent. At just 1.9%, Dubois County posts the lowest unemployment rate in Indiana; it had been second in August at 2.3% (and July's rate here was 2.6%). Bartholomew County, which had been lowest in the state in August at 2.3%, down three-tenths of a percentage point from July's 2.6% rate, sees its rate decline to 2.0%, but shares honors for second-lowest rate statewide with Boone County and Tipton County.

● State General Fund revenue collections for September of $1.71 billion smashed the April forecast by $91.1 million (5.6%) and soared on a year-over-year basis by $101.9 million (6.3%). On a year-to-date basis, General Fund tax collections exceed the FY 2020 first quarter estimate by $151.7 million (4.0%) and have improved by $113.2 million (2.9%) over the same three-month period in the prior fiscal year.

□ Sales tax collections in September totaled $710.6 million, topping the estimate by $33.9 million (5.0%) and growing over the year by $52.7 million (8.0%). The individual income taxes contributed $683.7 million, beating expectations by $40.7 million (6.3%) and improving vs. September 2018 by $55.2 million (8.8%). Corporate taxes chipped in $186.8 million, which exceeded the monthly estimate by $900,000 (0.5%) but declined compared to the prior year by $17.2 million (- 8.4%).

□ Gaming contributed $32.4 million in tax revenue to the state General Fund during September via riverboat and racino wagering taxes and the riverboat supplemental wagering tax (September was the first month in FY 20 in which riverboat supplemental wagering taxes were separately broken out and reported by the State Budget Agency). Fiscal year-to-date gaming taxes of $59.7 million represent 1.5% of state General Fund revenues. Through the first quarter of the fiscal year, the three silos combined are down from the same point in FY 2019 by $3.3 million. Add in the $813,103 in September sports wagering tax dollars (a partial month with not all retail sports books open), and September gaming tax revenues top $33.3 million. The sports wagering tax numbers are not broken out separately in the State Budget Agency monthly collection rubric, but our sister Hannah newsletter, INDIANA GAMING INSIGHT, ran (and double-checked!) the math for you.

● Cummins Inc. Vice President of Global Research and Technology Wayne Eckerle testified Wednesday before the U.S. House Committee on Energy and Commerce Subcommittee on Environment and Climate Change. The hearing addressed the challenges and opportunities of decarbonizing medium and heavy-duty vehicles, aviation, rail, and maritime shipping, and focused on transporting key industrial products, as well as people, cargo, and the products we use in our everyday lives. Subcommittee members heard how manufacturers like Cummins are developing new products and systems for low- or zero-carbon transportation, and how these critical innovations don't happen in a vacuum, but rather are driven by policy.

□ Cummins' Eckerle specifically observed that customers globally are increasingly demanding "not just dependable power at a fair price, but power emitting fewer greenhouse gases that contribute to climate change," and his work at Cummins in developing technology options to help meet this "growing demand." He explained that "The future of power requires a multi-faceted strategy. Our customers need the right vehicles and equipment to do their work. The integrated power solutions must be reliable, efficient, flexible and sustainable to meet the evolving demands for powering our communities and the infrastructure and equipment that shape our world. They also must comply with stringent emission regulations, help address climate change and be part of the solution for the energy and environmental challenges facing the planet. To deliver on our promise of powering a more prosperous world, both economic growth and environmental sustainability must be achieved. That is why we advocate for policies, laws and regulations that enable the power of choice, recognizing that there is not a one-size fits all solution for every challenge. Our strategy for reducing the greenhouse gas impact of our products is to continue an intense focus on research and development to provide substitute technologies in applications where they work well, and to reduce greenhouse gases by improving the fuel economy of products in applications without substitute technologies." Eckerle served up more than one-dozen detailed policy recommendations.

● His company's name is atop the largest office tower in the State of Indiana, and has benefited from millions of dollars of state incentives, but Mark Benioff, CEO of Salesforce, recently told Poppy Harlow of CNN that capitalism is dead, and it's time for a more sustainable and equitable form of capitalism.

● Indiana and Wisconsin have competed for decades in the category of largest percentage of manufacturing jobs in their respective economies, and now Wisconsin seems to be feeling an employment hit at a time when Indiana's unemployment rate is on the decline. The unemployment rate rose by at least 0.2 of a percentage point in September from the average rate recorded in the first half of the year, in Wisconsin and four other states (including Kentucky), according to a Wall Street Journal massage of U.S. Department of Labor data. "Wisconsin had the tenth-lowest unemployment rate in the country in the first half of 2019, at 2.9%. The rate edged up to 3.2% in September, 18th lowest," reports WSJ's "Real Time Economics" newsletter Monday. "Of particular concern for Wisconsin is that the unemployment rate is increasing at a time when slightly fewer people have or want jobs. The state's labor force declined by 3,900 in September relative to its first half average, suggesting the unemployment rate rise reflects cautious employers." This is a trend that Hoosier business leaders are watching for signs of here.

● The adjustable Indiana gas tax for November is set at 13.9¢ per gallon, ending a four consecutive month streak in which the tax had declined from the prior month. The 0.5¢ increase from October is the largest since the May to June growth; June began the run of progressive decline in the adjustable tax. The 2.2¢ decline over the prior year lags the 2.4¢ over-the-year diminution we saw in October. The 13.9¢ November 2019 rate is still higher for any November in the past five years other than 2018. The new November rate is also still higher than any month during the first one-third of 2019. While we noted earlier in the year that the tax in each of the first four months of 2019 was lower than it was during any month in 2018, that positive phenomenon ended in May, but only two months since have topped the equivalent month in 2018.

● The 127th Cyber Protection Battalion, the nation's fifth National Guard cyber battalion, will be located in Indiana. The unit will be comprised of almost 100 soldiers whose mission will be focused on cyber security and cyber warfare. The soldiers will have access to the U.S. Department of Defense's only live, full-scale cyber range at Muscatatuck Urban Training Center in Jennings County. The unique center affords access to realistic simulations with live environments for cyber and electronic warfare testing and training, and continued training via Ivy Tech's Cyber Academy at Muscatatuck.

□ StateScoop.com reports that "The Army Guard considered 19 states and territories before settling on Indiana, according to DoD, but ultimately selected the location based on its existing cybersecurity capabilities, partnerships with industry and academia, and its ability to recruit and retain soldiers." This will be the nation's first cyber battalion not located on the East Coast. Two are currently in Virginia, one in South Carolina, and one in Massachusetts.

● The 17th annual edition of the Tax Foundation's State Business Tax Climate Index measures how well states structure their tax systems, analyzing more than 120 variables in the five major areas of taxation – corporate taxes, individual income taxes, sales taxes, property taxes, and unemployment insurance taxes – and Indiana ranked 10th nationally, above any of our neighboring states, an first in the Midwest.

● U.S. Department of Agriculture Undersecretary for Trade and Foreign Agricultural Affairs Ted McKinney – Indiana's former agriculture commissioner – led a large trade mission to Vietnam October 15-18, joined by close to 80 industry and government representatives seeking ag export opportunities.

● The Wall Street Journal finds that with the strike at General Motors "stretching into a second month, the impact is intensifying across the Midwest economy, hitting more businesses and auto-parts suppliers reliant on GM's U.S. factories for work," and "the financial toll is mounting for both the company and states – like Michigan and Indiana – where GM has a concentration of unionized workers. Economists say the cascading effect of lost wages, production and employment will likely linger even if the strike ends, weighing on regional economies already straining from the tariff dispute with China." That's effectively what we forecasted for you at the outset of the strike.

● S&P Global Ratings lowers its long-term rating on (Hamilton County) Clay Township's ad valorem property tax-supported debt one notch to 'AA-' from 'AA'. At the same time, S&P Global Ratings assigned its 'AA-' long-term rating to $63 million series 2019B Indiana Bond Bank's special program bonds consisting of series 2019 B capital appreciation bonds and series 2019B current interest bonds ultimately issued for and secured by Clay Township and its ad valorem property tax pledge. The outlook on all ratings is stable.

□ The downgrade reflects S&P Global Ratings' view of Clay Township's "increased financial leverage," noting that following this issuance, the township's direct debt burden will triple, making its debt profile no longer comparable to that of its 'AA' rated peers." While reserve and liquidity positions are healthy now, "the higher debt will reduce the ratio of cash to debt. The total liquidity is also projected to decline in 2019 leaving less cushion against potential extended periods of stress. S&P also notes that the scope of the township's financial operations will get even smaller after the City of Carmel assumes the remaining financial fire service function from the township in 2020," making township's operations "even more focused on servicing debt. Because the proposed and rated debt is supported by the township's dedicated debt service levy generated from "a large and wealthy tax base, and factoring the limited scope of township operations," S&P doesn't believe the very high carrying charges warrant a rating below 'AA-' now.

● Wisconsin-based Regal Beloit Corporation looks to close its helicopter bearing factory in Valparaiso, a decision that is likely to mean an end to as many as 170 local jobs . . . General Housewares Corporation's Columbian Home Products, LLC plans to close its 850,000 square-foot enameled cookware production and headquarters facility in Terre Haute, a sprawling complex opened in 1902, by early December, ending more than 80 local jobs.

● LifeNet Health, a global provider of life sciences and regenerative medicine solutions, plans to add more than 80 new jobs at its new Plainfield location by the end of 2023. The Indiana Economic Development Corporation offers LifeNet Health up to $1.25 million in performance-based tax credits, and $100,000 in training grants. The Town of Plainfield will consider additional incentives . . . Ingram Micro, a global provider of technology and supply chain products and services, plans to add some 70 new jobs at its Plainfield facility by the end of 2023 with the help of up to $975,000 in performance-based tax credits from IEDC. AK Industries, Inc., a producer of fiberglass and polyethylene products for the wastewater industry, asks the Plymouth City Council to designate the 67,500 square-foot Hehr International building it recently purchased as an Economic Revitalization Area as a condition precedent to seeking a property tax abatement on an investment of $500,000 in the real estate and $1.5 million planned for new equipment and machinery as the company adds an injection molding division and resin transfer system, and moves hydro-action operations into the newly acquired building which will be expanded. AK Industries expects to add 40 jobs . . . Red Star Contract Manufacturing, a provider of injection molding and sterile packaging services for the medical device industry, plans to invest $1.6 million in real estate improvements and equipment in its Larwill facility, with the help of up to $175,000 in performance-based tax credits from IEDC, and 10-year real and business personal tax abatements courtesy of the Whitley County Council. The expansion is expected to result in almost 20 new jobs . . . Ireland-based Aptiv PLC, a mobility tech company (formerly known as Delphi Automotive), plans to invest more than $9 million to open a 53,000 square-foot engineering lab in the Westfield Business Centre, expecting to create 50 new jobs paying an average of almost $80,000 annually . . . Chicago-based Peer Foods, which also owns Mariah Foods in Columbus, plans to invest $13.6 million in a new 54,000 square-foot facility in northwestern Bartholomew County and add $2.4 million in equipment. BDX-Indiana, a sister company to Indianapolis-based Biodynamic Ventures (the largest hemp grower in Indiana) plans to invest more than $24 million (and potentially up to $50 million in succeeding phases) to establish and equip a cannabidiol extraction business in Westfield that would create more than 40 initial jobs with average annual wages of $70,000. Ultimate employment could hit 100. The Westfield City Council offers a five-year property tax abatement . . . PPG Industries seeks to invest $14 million in an expansion of its Brazil operations by building a 20,000 square-foot bonded powder coatings plant . . . A Barnes & Thornburg federal lobby registration released his month by federal officials says that Hershman will "Assist with federal government relations" for the Secretary of State's Office, and the contract documents explain that he will be "Monitoring and advising on developments in federal election law and federal election security initiatives" for Secretary of State Connie Lawson (R), with whom he served in the Senate (he served on the Committee on Legislative Apportionment and Elections when she chaired that panel early this century), and who recently led the National Association of Secretaries of State as NASS was intimately involved in election security issues at the federal level.

The agency has a satisfactory, productive +15-year engagement with Barnes & Thornburg for legislative monitoring and and counsel. The agency has an efficient and effective working relationship with the firm. As a result of the long-term relationship the firm has an in-depth knowledge of the agency’s responsibilities and interests. In view of the complexities of the issues involved, the agency believes the professional services rate is commercially competitive.

U.S. KILLS ISIS LEADER BAGHDADI: The shadowy leader of the Islamic State group who presided over its global jihad and became arguably the world's most wanted man, is dead after being targeted by a U.S. military raid in Syria, President Donald Trump said Sunday (AP). "Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi is dead," Trump announced at the White House, saying the U.S. had "brought the world's number one terrorist leader to justice." As U.S. forces bore down on him, Trump said al-Baghdadi fled into a tunnel with three of his children and detonated a suicide vest. "He was a sick and depraved man, and now he's gone," Trump said. "He died like a dog, he died like a coward." The announcement comes as Trump has been on the receiving end of bipartisan criticism in Washington following the recent pullback of U.S. troops from northeastern Syria. Critics fear that move will allow the militant group to regain strength after it had lost vast stretches of territory it had once controlled. A senior Iraqi security official told the AP that Iraqi intelligence played a part in the operation. Al-Baghdadi and his wife detonated explosive vests they were wearing during the U.S. commando operation, according to the official, who was not authorized to publicly discuss the sensitive information and spoke on condition of anonymity. He added that other IS leaders were killed in the attack.

GM STRIKE ENDS: A contentious 40-day strike that crippled General Motors' U.S. production came to an end Friday as workers approved a new contract with the company (AP). GM workers voted 57.2% in favor of the pact, passing it with a vote of 23,389 to 17,501, the union said in a statement. Picket lines came down almost immediately after the vote was announced, and some of the 49,000 striking workers were expected to return to their jobs as early as Friday night. Some skilled trades employees such as electricians and machinists were to enter the plants to get machinery restarted in preparation for production workers to return as early as today.

4TH USS INDIANAPOLIS COMMISSIONED: The Navy has commissioned its new USS Indianapolis combat vessel at Burns Harbor along Lake Michigan. The ceremony Saturday drew dignitaries, Navy officials, four survivors of the ship's namesake sunk during World War II and family members of current crew members (AP). Gov. Eric Holcomb, a Navy veteran, noted the Freedom-class littoral ship was made with Indiana steel. He also says the ship carries a "historic legacy" of the second USS Indianapolis that was sunk by a Japanese submarine in July 1945 while returning from delivering key components for the Hiroshima atomic bomb. Only 317 of its nearly 1,200 crewmen survived the sinking and days in shark-infested waters. The new ship will be based near Jacksonville, Florida. It's designed to be highly maneuverable for missions such as mine-clearing and anti-submarine warfare.

SONDLAND TESTIMONY ACKNOWLEDGE TRUMP/UKRAINE QUID PRO QUO: A top U.S. diplomat told House committees last week that efforts by President Trump and his allies to press Kyiv to open investigations in exchange for a White House meeting with Ukraine's president amounted to a quid pro quo, his lawyer said (Wall Street Journal). Gordon Sondland, the U.S. ambassador to the European Union, told House committees that he believed Ukraine agreeing to open investigations into Burisma Group—a gas company where Democrat Joe Biden's son once served on the board—and into alleged 2016 election interference was a condition for a White House meeting between Mr. Trump and Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky, Mr. Sondland's lawyer Robert Luskin said. Asked by a lawmaker whether that arrangement was a quid pro quo, Mr. Sondland cautioned that he wasn't a lawyer but said he believed the answer was yes, Mr. Luskin said. Mr. Trump has repeatedly denied the existence of a quid pro quo related to his push for Ukraine to open investigations.

SENS. YOUNG, BRAUN SIGN ANTI-IMPEACHMENT RESOLUTION: The resolution calls on the House of Representatives to hold a full vote of its members to formally open an impeachment inquiry of President Trump (Pinsker, Indiana Public Media). "Well I think due process is really important, that's something we learned during the Kavanaugh hearing, a lot of emphasis on following the appropriate process," Young says. "I would look back to the Clinton impeachment, the Nixon impeachment." The resolution says President Trump is not being given the same due process President Clinton was afforded during his 1998 impeachment. It also calls for the House to allow President Trump to confront his accusers and provide his own witnesses. Young says while he supports the resolution, he wants to focus on workforce development, which was the purpose of his trip to Indianapolis Friday. Indiana's Junior Senator Mike Braun also signed the resolution.

KELLY FEARED IMPEACHMENT IF TRUMP HAD 'YES MAN' AS CoS: John F. Kelly, the former White House chief of staff who during his tenure made it clear he detested the job, expressed regret on Saturday about leaving and implied that he could have helped stave off the impeachment inquiry now threatening Mr. Trump's presidency (New York Times). Mr. Kelly, who left barely on speaking terms with the president, said he warned his boss to pick a successor in his mold, meaning someone who would push back against him. "I said, whatever you do, don't hire a 'yes man,' someone who won't tell you the truth — don't do that," Mr. Kelly said, according to The Washington Examiner, which covered his remarks at a political summit it hosted in Sea Island, Ga. "Because if you do, I believe you will be impeached." "I have an awful lot of, to say the least, second thoughts about leaving," Mr. Kelly said. "It pains me to see what's going on, because I believe if I was still there or someone like me was there, he would not be kind of, all over the place.” “I worked with John Kelly, and he was totally unequipped to handle the genius of our great president,” the press secretary, Stephanie Grisham, said in a statement.

HILL CASE MAY TAKE MONTHS TO RESOLVE: It will be months before a final decision comes in Attorney General Curtis Hill’s disciplinary case over allegations he groped four women (Smith, Indiana Public Media). The nearly week-long hearing featured 26 witnesses, hours of testimony and dozens of pieces of evidence. That must be compiled into one record both sides review. The parties then file what’s called their proposed findings with the hearing officer, former state Supreme Court Justice Myra Selby. All of that will probably take a couple months. And at that point, things are in Selby’s hands for a while. She’ll make a recommendation on what should happen to Curtis Hill, which could be anything from no action to a reprimand, probation to suspension of his license to disbarment. But that’s not the end. Whichever side doesn’t like Selby’s recommendation petitions the Indiana Supreme Court to review the case. The five justices will make the final decision - but it will likely be well into 2020 before they do.

FEDERAL DEFICIT UP 26%: The United States federal budget deficit jumped 26 percent in the 2019 fiscal year to $984 billion, reaching its highest level in seven years as the government was forced to borrow more money to pay for President Trump’s tax and spending policies,” the N.Y. Times reports (Axios). The deficit has now swelled nearly 50 percent since Mr. Trump took office and it is projected to top $1 trillion in 2020. The grim fiscal scorecard shows how far the Republican Party, under Mr. Trump, has strayed from conservative orthodoxy.

SPENCER PRIDE COMMITTEE CRITICIZES OWEN COMMISSIONERS: Spencer Pride is accusing the Owen County Commissioners of targeting its annual Pride festival in an open letter released Friday. This comes after the commissioners moved ahead with a beefed-up ordinance proposal this week that would make it difficult to hold a special event on county property (Legan, Indiana Public Media). Controversy arose about the ordinance changes after form letters surfaced describing the Spencer Pride Fest as inappropriate for children. The commissioners originally tried to pass them off as a petition from taxpayers complaining about costs. Bullet b.12 of Section Six of the ordinance states, “Displaying any sexually explicit or suggestive materials, items, or images is prohibited. No vendor may sell or display any sexually explicit materials, items, or images on county grounds.” Spencer Pride President Jonathan Balash says the vagueness throughout the ordinance will likely make it subject to lawsuits. “It’s gonna be up to someone – [Owen County Commissioners President] Jeff Brothers, perhaps – to decide, based on his moral compass, what is or is not sexually suggestive. For us, that is a major issue, because many of them have expressed that even to identify as LGBTQ – that is overly sexual. So someone who has that as their belief is going to find everything that we do at the festival to somehow be tied into that really vague term ‘sexually suggestive.’” Brothers said at this Monday’s Commissioners meeting that someone dressing “inappropriately” at a festival could be a danger to children.

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: May Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi burn in hell. His ISIS was the embodiment of pure evil, and his defiling of American hostage Kayla Mueller (as well as the deaths of James Foley and Peter Edward Abdul-Rahman Kassig of Indianapolis) were some of the worst atrocities committed this century. - *Brian A. HOGSETT HAS 30% LEAD OVER MERRITT: With just under two weeks to go before Election Day, a new poll by Indy Politics and Mason Strategies shows incumbent Mayor Democrat Joe Hogsett enjoying a comfortable lead over Republican challenger Jim Merritt, 57% to 23%, with 11% undecided. The survey of 350 likely voters shows also shows Libertarian Doug McNaughton earning around four percent. There is a +/- 5.2% margin of error. These numbers are virtually unchanged from our August poll where Hogsett led 55% to 25%. “With just over 10 days left, the fundamentals of the race haven’t changed from this summer,” said Stephen Spiker, owner of Mason Strategies. “Joe Hogsett is cruising on strong job approval ratings and confidence in the direction of the city, while Jim Merritt just hasn’t had the resources necessary to convince voters that a change in leadership is needed.”

Q&A FOR ELKHART’S MILLER, ROBERSON: The South Bend Tribune publishes unedited answers from the candidates for Elkhart mayor in the Nov. 5 election. How would you positively influence the perception of the Elkhart Police Department and increase community involvement with department oversight? Miller: As you recall while I was Mayor, I brought forth accreditation to the Police Department. Unfortunately, a previous administration let it lapse. I support accreditation efforts to provide transparencies which will benefit the citizens of Elkhart. The members of the police force should be empowered to serve at higher levels of professional standards. I believe in our police, fire and emergency responders. As a community we must know they are well-trained and they are equipped for any circumstance. In rare incidences, they may make mistakes. When they do, proper action up to termination must take place. With proper procedures and the right tools, personnel and leadership, I believe that all matters can be handled justly and efficiently. I will work with all first responder leadership to assure we are absolutely aligned and working together. Roberson: My top priorities include transparency, accountability, and communication in order to continue building positive relationships with the community. The police department is the city's front facing department and their standard has to be above reproach. In collaboration with the department, I will review the information from the analysis that is currently being done by the City of Elkhart. It is critical to have practices and procedures in place to address situations such as those the department faced this year.

LOTTER PROFILED BY POLITICO: Marc Lotter, director of strategic communications for President Donald Trump's reelection campaign, celebrated a milestone birthday recently and was profiled by Politico (Francisco, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). In that article, the Snider High School grad talked about his start in politics: "Stuffing envelopes in 1979 at age 9 for a friend of my father who was running for mayor of my hometown of Fort Wayne (as a Democrat). He won and went on to serve as a state representative. Decades later, while I worked for the Republican governor, he jokingly reminded me that I got my political start working to elect a Democrat." That person was Winfield Moses, and the 50-year-old Lotter still remembers Moses' campaign slogan: "When Win wins we all win."

BANNON SAYS PELOSI IMPEACHMENT STRATEGY IS 'WINNING': Steve Bannon, a former White House chief strategist and longtime ally of President Trump, said in a radio interview broadcast Sunday that Speaker Nancy Pelosi's (D-Calif.) impeachment strategy is "winning." In the interview with John Catsimatidis on "The Answer" in New York, Bannon expressed his deep concern for the president and his administration amid the impeachment inquiry, stating that Pelosi will "impeach the president of the United States on two counts: one, abuse of power; the other, obstruction of justice." He went on to say that many of Trump's supporters are "in shock" that the president is going through this process and that they need to "wake up" to what he says is a campaign of untruths.

CLAPPER SAYS ISIS ISN'T DEAD: Former National Director of Intelligence James Clapper warned Sunday that the U.S. can't "stop worrying about ISIS" after the death of the group's leader Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi's death. Clapper, who served under former President Obama, said the death of al-Baghdadi had "a huge symbolic meaning" but cautioned that the ISIS ideology extended beyond Baghdadi and said his death will not end the terrorist group. "ISIS is more than just Baghdadi, as important as he was," Clapper told Jake Tapper on CNN's "State of the Union."

EDUCATION: TEACHER LICENSING SWITCH - Indiana is switching up its teacher licensing program in response to complaints about low pass rates under the current testing program, in hopes of addressing a shortage of teachers in the state (AP). ETS, a nonprofit organization, will replace Pearson beginning September 2021 as the provider of licensing tests for prospective teachers, said Indiana Department of Education spokesman Adam Baker. The move comes after Republican state Sen. Jean Leising, of Oldenburg, introduced legislation this year that required the state Board of Education to adopt a program that's administered nationally. "I'm anxious to see what kind of results we get and I'm going to be monitoring this very closely after we have a couple years of data to see if pass rates improve over what we've been seeing on the current test used," Leising said, adding that the change is a step in the right direction in dealing with the teacher shortage in Indiana.

ENERGY: NIPSCO TO BUILD WHITE COUNTY WIND FARM - The vast expanse of wind turbines in northwest Indiana appears to be set for expansion. Northern Indiana Public Service Co., a subsidiary of Merrillville-based NiSource (NYSE: NI), and Texas-based EDP Renewables North America LLC have agreed to collaborate on a 302-megawatt wind farm in White County (Mills, Inside Indiana Business). EDP Renewables says around 80 wind turbines will be erected at the Indiana Crossroads Wind Farm. NIPSCO says the companies executed a Build & Transfer Agreement for the Indiana Crossroads Wind Farm in White County, the second joint effort wind turbine project for the two firms. The utility is not giving a price tag.

STEEL: ALARMS OVER OVERCAPACITY - Nineteen steel industry associations from across the globe, including those that represent ArcelorMittal USA and U.S. Steel in Northwest Indiana, have again sounded the alarm on global steel excess capacity (Pete, NWI Times). The American Iron and Steel Institute, the Steel Manufacturers Association, the Canadian Steel Producers Association and steel trade groups from across the Americas, Europe, Africa and Asia urged governments of steelmaking countries worldwide to take urgent action. Some industry observers estimate steelmaking overcapacity exceeds 500 million tons worldwide, largely as a result of the unprecedented growth of the state-sponsored steel industry in China, which went from making 142 million tons of steel in 2000 to an estimated 1 billion tons last year.

ANTELOPE CLUB: NEW BOARD CHOSEN - New board members for the Antelope Club were announced on Saturday (Howey Politics Indiana). Several candidates opted to send observers. These observers unanimously verified the process was followed and we now have our results for this year's board election. As there are five open seats, in accordance with our bylaws, the top three vote-getters will serve full 3-year terms. The fourth top vote-getter will serve the open 2-year term. The fifth top vote-getter will serve for the open 1-year term. Serving on the board for full 3-year terms: Tom Sutton, Mark Pryor, Ashley Miller. Serving on the board for a 2-year term: Jon Lewis. Serving on the board for a 1-year term: Charlie Turk.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SEEKS TO END ANOTHER RUSS TREATY - The Trump administration has taken steps toward leaving a nearly three-decade-old agreement designed to reduce the risk of war between Russia and the West by allowing both sides to conduct reconnaissance flights over one another's territories, U.S. officials said (Wall Street Journal). The withdrawal would mark a further step toward dismantling the post-Cold War arms-control framework, already buffeted by the demise of the Intermediate-range Nuclear Forces Treaty and the uncertain fate awaiting the New START accord on U.S. and Russian long-range nuclear arms, which expires in 2021. President Trump has signed a document signaling his intent to withdraw the U.S. from the 1992 Open Skies Treaty, two U.S. officials said.

WHITE HOUSE: NBA'S SILVER RESPONDS TO PENCE - NBA Commissioner Adam Silver said Thursday he hoped the league can "bring people together" hours after Vice President Mike Pence blasted the NBA as acting as a "wholly-owned subsidiary of China" (Fox News). Pence, during a speech Thursday afternoon, accused the NBA of siding with China in "silencing free speech" nearly three weeks after a tweet from Houston Rockets' general manager Daryl Morey supported pro-democracy protesters in Hong Kong. The tweet started a firestorm that engulfed the league as it prepared to open the 2019-20 season with a preseason trip to China. "We're going to double down on engaging with the people of China and India and throughout Africa, throughout the world regardless of their governments," said Silver, who appeared on TNT's broadcast of "Inside the NBA." "Certainly [if] we get to a point where the U.S. government tells us we shouldn't be doing business in certain territories or countries, we won't."

WHITE HOUSE: CHAS. BARKLEY BLASTS PENCE - Retired NBA star Charles Barkley has never been shy about expressing his opinion, no matter what the subject. On Thursday night, Barkley harshly criticized Vice President Mike Pence -- saying Pence "needs to shut the hell up" -- after the vice president earlier in the day slammed the NBA for cowardice and hypocrisy regarding the Hong Kong-China controversy (Fox News). During a speech in Washington, Pence said he was disappointed that NBA players and executives didn't speak out on behalf of Hong Kong's pro-democracy demonstrators, and seemed more interested in protecting their money-making opportunities in communist China. Vice President Pence needs to shut the hell up, number one," Barkley said to a panel of his TNT colleagues as well as NBA commissioner Adam Silver. "All American companies are doing business in China. I thought the criticism of commissioner Silver and LeBron James was unfair."

WHITE HOUSE: MORRISON VOWS TO TESTIFY - Tim Morrison, a National Security Council official who has been identified as a witness to one of the most explosive pieces of evidence unearthed by House impeachment investigators, plans to testify Thursday even if the White House attempts to block him (Politico). "If subpoenaed, Mr. Morrison plans to appear for his deposition," his attorney, Barbara Van Gelder, said. A slew of high-profile witnesses have defied White House, State Department and Pentagon orders not to cooperate with the impeachment probe. In each case, lawmakers have issued a subpoena, which the officials have relied on to justify testifying over the administration's objections. Morrison, however, would be the first currently serving White House official to testify. He's also the first official believed to be on a July 25 phone call between President Donald Trump and Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky during which Trump pressed his counterpart to investigate former vice president Joe Biden.

WHITE HOUSE: CHINESE GDP FALLS 5.3% - Profits at China's industrial firms contracted for the second straight month in September as producer prices continued their slide, highlighting the toll a slowing economy and protracted U.S. trade war are having taken on corporate balance sheets (Reuters). Industrial profits fell 5.3% in September from a year earlier to 575.6 billion yuan ($81.48 billion), data released by the National Bureau of Statistics (NBS) on Sunday showed. That compared with a 2% decline in August.

PENTAGON: MICROSOFT GETS CLOUD CONTRACT - The Pentagon awarded Microsoft a $10 billion cloud computing contract, snubbing early front-runner Amazon, whose competitive bid drew criticism from President Trump and its business rivals. Bidding for the huge project, known as Joint Enterprise Defense Infrastructure, or JEDI, pitted leading tech titans Microsoft, Amazon, Oracle and IBM against one another (CBS News). An Amazon Web Services spokesperson told CBS News the company is "surprised" by the decision. "AWS is the clear leader in cloud computing, and a detailed assessment purely on the comparative offerings clearly lead to a different conclusion. We remain deeply committed to continuing to innovate for the new digital battlefield where security, efficiency, resiliency, and scalability of resources can be the difference between success and failure," the spokesperson said.

CRIME: BUTINA OUT OF PRISON; DEPORTED - A Russian gun rights activist who admitted being a secret agent for the Kremlin and trying to infiltrate conservative U.S. political groups while Donald Trump rose to power was released from federal prison on Friday, officials said (Politico). Mariia Butina left a low-security facility in Tallahassee, Florida and was placed in the custody of federal immigration authorities. She is expected to be immediately deported to Russia now that she has finished her 18-month sentence.

MEDIA: NBC ROILED OVER FARROW BOOK - Rachel Maddow is far from the only one. Her extraordinary MSNBC segment on Friday — covering the allegations in Ronan Farrow's "Catch and Kill" that are roiling NBC News — gave voice to other staffers who have concerns about management (CNN). Maddow also interviewed Farrow on Friday night, ending a two-year period when he wasn't booked on any NBC-owned channels. Questions about NBC are coming back to the forefront. Chiefly: Why won't the network open itself up to an external investigation? The concerns are about two separate but possibly related issues: NBC's handling of Ronan Farrow's reporting about Harvey Weinstein in mid 2017, and the Matt Lauer sexual misconduct scandal that erupted later that year.

TEXAS: 2 KILLED, 14 WOUNDED AT PARTY - Two people have been killed in a shooting at an off-campus Texas A&M University-Commerce party that also left at least 14 others injured, a sheriff's official said (Washington Post). The shooting took place just before midnight Saturday in Greenville, around 15 miles (24 kilometers) southwest of the Commerce campus, Chief Deputy Buddy Oxford of the Hunt County Sheriff's Office said. The shooter remains at large, Oxford said. He said the shooting began around 15 minutes after deputies arrived outside the venue, responding to reports of illegal parking.

MICHIGAN CITY: PD CHIEF RESIGNS AFTER MAYOR'S STEPSON ARREST - The city's police chief and two assistant chiefs resigned this week after Michigan City Mayor Ron Meer alleged his stepson's arrest on drug charges was politically motivated (South Bend Tribune). In his letter of resignation dated Tuesday, Chief Mark Swistek said Meer directed him on Tuesday to remove the department from the LaPorte County Drug Task Force and reassign his officers working the task force. Swistek said the order would violate his oath to serve with "honor, integrity and professionalism as a public servant committed to the protection of all the people who make up the Michigan City community." "Although my resignation is made without hesitation," Swistek wrote, "it is not made in haste." Assistant chiefs Kevin Urbanczyk and Royce Williams also stepped down.

BLOOMINGTON: COUNCILWOMAN FLIPS OFF COLLEAGUE - Bloomington Councilwoman Allison Chopra is standing by her actions after Community Access Television Services captured video of her making an obscene gesture to a fellow councilmember Tuesday night (Legan, Indiana Public Media). The hearing was on the city's proposed Unified Development Ordinance. The meeting focused extensively on the possible addition of multifamily "plexes" into the city's core neighborhoods. The public comment period had lasted for nearly two hours when council began discussing how long to continue. Council put a time limit of four hours on each meeting because of the controversial nature of the UDO. Chopra was against extending the meeting, saying it was unfair to those who were expecting the scheduled time to be kept. "Why set a rule if you're not gonna freaking follow it?" Chopra asked at the meeting. "What's the point? We do this all the time. It's embarrassing." "Well, go home then," Councilman Chris Sturbaum responded. That's when Chopra turned to her left, extending her left middle finger in Sturbaum's direction.

CUMBERLAND: NEW PD CHIEF - For the first time, a woman has been appointed to serve as the Chief of the Cumberland Metropolitan Police Department (WRTV). Chief Suzanne Woodland was appointed Tuesday in an unanimous vote by the Cumberland Board of Metropolitan Police Commissioners, according to a release from the town. She has been with the department for 11 years. Woodland served as the interim chief since April after former Chief Michael Crooke retired, according to the release. He was the chief of police for more than 10 years.

BUTTIGIEG CREATING IOWA BUZZ: The mayor of a mid-sized Midwest city whose name no one could pronounce at the start of this year has come a long way in the Democratic primary. For a rising star in the party, vastly over-performing expectations in a crowded presidential field would easily be considered a victory in its own way. But there's real reason to think Pete Buttigieg could yet win this nomination outright (Iowa Starting Line). One such rather plausible scenario is starting to develop right before our eyes. It starts, as these things so often do, in Iowa. Two polls this past week had good news for Buttigieg in the lead-off caucus state. A Suffolk University and USA Today poll had the Mayor in third place at 13%. More importantly, he was just five points off Joe Biden's first-place lead of 18% (there were a lot of undecideds in this survey — 29%) and four behind Elizabeth Warren's 17%. Bernie Sanders had fallen back to fourth at 9%. Even better for Buttigieg, an ISU/Civiqs poll put him in second, with 20% saying he was their first choice for the caucus. In this survey, Buttigieg trailed Warren, who was at 28%. Sanders had 18% and Biden was at 12%. The latter poll isn't one that usually breaks big news in Iowa politics, but it's always noteworthy when multiple polls, regardless of their stature, point to the same thing in the same week. And that's what anyone on the ground can see clearly here: Buttigieg has a ton of energy and enthusiasm on his side in Iowa. And now is just about the time you want to get hot as we enter the final 100-day stretch.

PENCE DODGES QUESTIONS ON INQUIRY: Vice President Mike Pence on Sunday refused to say whether he believes U.S. officials were lying in testimony bolstering the case that President Donald Trump pressured Ukraine to investigate his political rivals in exchange for his administration's support (Politico). CBS "Face the Nation" moderator Margaret Brennan repeatedly asked Pence about statements made by officials under oath that they had knowledge of a deal being offered that made military aid contingent on Ukraine opening an investigation targeting former Vice President Joe Biden. House Democrats have been gathering the testimony as part of an impeachment inquiry. Pence was pressed on the matter Sunday after U.S. diplomat William Taylor told House investigators that Trump tried to withhold military aid and refuse a White House meeting with Ukraine's president as part of the effort. "I can only tell you what I know," Pence said on CBS, denying that there was any quid pro quo. Pence would not give a clear yes-or-no answer when asked if witnesses were lying or whether he had any knowledge of the arrangement being alleged. "I'm telling you, all of my interactions with the president, all of my conversations with [Ukraine President Volodymyr Zelensky], were entirely focused on issues of importance to the American people, ending corruption, enlisting more European support and supporting Ukraine in a way that would restore its territorial integrity and stand by Ukraine for its sovereignty," Pence said.

PENCE SAYS U.S. 'UNRELENTING' ON TERROR, ISIS: Vice President Mike Pence hailed the death of ISIS leader Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi during a U.S. special forces raid as an important victory in the Trump administration's strategy to weaken and dismantle the global terrorist group, which has come under scrutiny after the president's controversial decision to withdraw U.S. troops from northern Syria (CBS News). "Last night, the president of the United States proved to the world that our fight against ISIS is unrelenting and by killing the leader of ISIS — the active operational leader of ISIS, who is reported just two weeks ago as giving orders to ISIS fighters in Syria — we believe will have a measurable impact on the effectiveness of that terrorist organization," Pence said on "Face the Nation" Sunday. "We're not going to let up," the vice president added. "We're not going to stop the fight."

SEN. BRAUN SEES 'DEATH BLOW' TO ISIS; CARSON DISAGREES: Sen. Mike Braun (R) praised the U.S. special forces who forced Baghdadi to blow himself up in a tunnel in Syria as U.S. special forces were closing in on his location (WIBC). Braun tweeted: "Today we thank US Special Forces for their bravery in killing #Baghdadi, author of untold suffering to Christians, Americans, & countless innocents worldwide. President @realDonaldTrump's decimation of ISIS is a message to all that America's enemies are always brought to justice." Braun later called Baghdadi's death a "death blow to ISIS." Rep. Andre Carson (D) cannot agree. He retweeted fellow Democrat Congressman Adam Schiff, who said just because Baghdadi is dead does not mean ISIS has been defeated.

TRUMP GREETED WITH JEERS, 'LOCK HIM UP' AT WORLD SERIES: President Trump's low-profile appearance Sunday night at Game 5 of the World Series drew loud boos and jeers when he was introduced to the crowd (CBS News). Wearing a dark suit and a tie, Mr. Trump arrived at Nationals Park just before the first pitch of the Houston Astros-Washington Nationals matchup. Hours earlier, he had announced that U.S. forces had assaulted the hiding place of Islamic State leader Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi, who was killed in the raid in northeast Syria. At the same time, a divisive impeachment inquiry into the president is underway in Congress. Mr. Trump and first lady Melania Trump entered a lower-tier box to the left of home plate as the game was beginning. At that point, his presence hadn't yet been formally announced, but baseball fans in the section just below his suite turned to look toward the box as he arrived. Some waved at the president as he smiled and gave a thumbs-up. At the end of the third inning, the president stood and waved to the crowd, and ballpark video screens carried a salute to U.S. service members that drew cheers throughout the stadium. When the video on the Jumbotron cut to the president and his entourage — which included a number of GOP lawmakers — and the loudspeakers announced the Trumps, cheers abruptly turned into a torrent of boos and heckling from what sounded like a majority of the crowd. Chants of "Lock him up!" broke out in some sections, including one below where the president was sitting.

TRUMP MENTIONS PETER KASSIG: President Donald Trump remembered Butler graduate Abdul-Rahman (Peter) Kassig Sunday in his statement about the death of the group's leader, Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi (WTHR-TV). "Baghdadi and the losers who worked with him – in some cases people who had no idea what they were getting into and how dangerous and unglamorous it was – killed many people," part of the statement read. "Their murder of innocent Americans Jim Foley, Steven Sotloff, Peter Kassig, and Kayla Mueller were especially heinous. The shocking publicized murder of a Jordanian pilot who was burned alive in a cage for all to see, and the execution of Christians in Libya and Egypt, as well as the genocidal mass murder of Yazidis, rank ISIS among the most depraved organizations in history." Abdul-Rahman Kassig was an American humanitarian worker held hostage for more than a year before he was killed in November, 2014. The then-26-year-old from Indiana, formerly known as Peter Kassig, was taken captive while doing aid work in Syria. ISIS claimed responsibility for Kassig's beheading in a graphic video.

KAYLA MUELLER FAMILY REACTS TO BAGHDADI DEATH: The family of Kayla Mueller, a humanitarian worker from Arizona who was held captive, tortured and killed by ISIS, said it brought them great solace to know that the U.S military operation that ended with the death of the terrorist group's leader had been dedicated to her (ABC News). President Donald Trump announced the death of the ISIS leader and founder Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi in a Sunday morning address that mentioned Mueller by name, calling her a "beautiful young woman" who died while trying to "help people." Sitting beside his wife, Marsha Mueller, in an emotional interview at their home in Arizona, Carl Mueller, also revealed that the couple once traveled to Irbil for a face-to-face meeting with Umm Sayyaf, wife of ISIS militant Abu Sayyaf. Delta Force killed Abu Sayyaf in May 2015 and captured Umm Sayyaf, who previously held Kayla Mueller captive in their home for al-Baghdadi to sexually assault. "When we talked to Umm Sayyaf, we found we got more information out of her, not just us, the people backing us - they got information from her that neither the Kurds or the US government had got in the two days that we were there," Carl Mueller said. "We learned from women that were ransomed out by their governments that she said she was held in many cold, dark places, she was raped by al-Baghdadi, we know that to be a fact," Carl Mueller said.

IRAQ PRESIDENT DOESN'T KNOW IF HE CAN TRUST U.S.: Iraqi President Barham Salih — long known as a pro-American leader — says he is no longer sure he can rely on the U.S. as an ally and may be ready to "recalibrate" Iraq's relationship with other countries, including Iran and Russia (Axios). In an extraordinarily candid interview with "Axios on HBO," Salih said he still values his country's alliance with the U.S. 16 years after the U.S. invasion of Iraq. He wants to keep that alliance — but made clear that the Trump administration's policies are making that difficult. "The staying power of the United States is being questioned in a very, very serious way," Salih said. "And allies of the United States are worried about the dependability of the United States."

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: It was disheartening to hear chants of "lock him up" when President Trump was introduced at the World Series Sunday night. But it's the classic "what goes around, comes around," as this hostile crowd mimicked a similar chant featured at Trump's MAGA rallies. In more than 220 years, the basis of this republic has been the peaceful transfer of power in a country where we do not "lock up" politic opponents. We are losing something precious in this era of coarse politics. - Brian A. Howey

BUTTIGIEG COMMENTS ON BAGHDADI OPERATION: Pete Buttigieg responds to operation against Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi (Howey Politics Indiana): "Clearly this is a real blow against ISIS and a positive step in the fight against stateless terrorism, and credit should go to all who were involved. And I think it's an example of what our special operations and intelligence personnel are capable of around the world."

BUTTIGIEG SCHEDULE: Pete Buttigieg will join Tommy Vietor and Ben Rhodes for a conversation at the J Street National Conference. On Tuesday, Pete will host a grassroots event in Boston. On Wednesday, Pete will begin a two-day swing through New Hampshire by filing for the state's First-In-The-Nation Primary. On Friday, Pete will host a rally in Des Moines and speak at the Liberty and Justice Celebration. Following the Liberty and Justice Celebration, Pete will kick off a three-day bus tour across northern Iowa.

BIDEN DEFENDS HIS SON ON '60 MINUTES': Joe Biden said his son did nothing wrong while serving on the board of a Ukrainian gas company while the former vice president was serving under the Obama administration. In an interview with "CBS Evening News" anchor and managing editor Norah O'Donnell for "60 Minutes," the 2020 presidential candidate said he did his job without any concern about his son Hunter's role with Burisma (CBS News). "I don't tell my grown son what he can do, as long as whatever he's doing is appropriate," Biden said. O'Donnell pressed Biden on whether he considered the optics of his son working for a Ukrainian company during his years in the White House. Biden contended that Hunter was already on the board when he took office. "And he's a grown man," Biden said. "And it turns out he did not do a single thing wrong, as everybody's investigated." Hunter Biden was reportedly paid $50,000 to $80,000 a month for several years while serving on Burisma's board. O'Donnell asked the former Delaware senator about Hunter's claim that the only thing his father said to him about the job was, "I hope you know what you're doing." "What I meant by that is I hope you've thought this through," Biden said. "I hope you know exactly what you're doing here. That's all I meant. Nothing more than that because I've never discussed my business or their business, my sons' or daughter's. And I've never discussed them because they know where I have to do my job and that's it and they have to make their own judgments."

PENCE LAUDS BAGHDADI KILLING: Top Trump administration officials took to the Sunday shows to praise President Trump and U.S. special operations forces for the death of ISIS leader Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi, but they and others stressed the need for continued vigilance in dealing with the terror group. "It's a tribute to the courage of our armed forces, special forces that executed the raid on the compound last night, but it's also a tribute to the decisiveness of President Donald Trump," Vice President Pence said on CBS's "Face the Nation." Defense Secretary Mark Esper called it a "great day for America," saying on ABC's "This Week" that the raid "was a brilliantly executed operation" and that Trump "deserves credit for giving it the green light." "These are always inherently risky, and, as I like to say, our folks make the complex and the dangerous look simple and safe," he added. National security adviser Robert O'Brien similarly hailed it as a "great day," telling NBC's "Meet the Press" that it was "great news for us, great news for the American people, great news for everyone in the world."

PENCE DODGES QUESTIONS ON BAGHDADI RAID, PELOSI: President Donald Trump said this morning that he did not notify Speaker Nancy Pelosi in advance about the raid that took out Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi. On Fox News Sunday, Chris Wallace spoke with Vice President Mike Pence and said the successful operation is a victory for America (Mediaite). He also questioned the VP on Trump saying he didn't inform Pelosi in advance, with "the implication seeming to be that Pelosi or members of Congress would leak this." "Does the President not trust the Speaker of the House with sensitive national security information?" Wallace asked. Pence disputed that was the implication, saying Trump's "total focus was on a successful mission" and on the safety of the troops. Wallace again asked why Pelosi wasn't informed. Pence again defended the moves the administration took ahead of the raid and didn't address it directly. "No American casualties and al-Baghdadi is dead," Pence said. "We all applaud that. I do want to ask you, though, it's my job as a newsman, sir, respectfully, why didn't the president notify the Speaker of the House?" Wallace again asked. Pence again heralded the success of the operation but did not directly answer.

ESPER SAYS RAID 'BRILLIANTLY EXECUTED': Defense Secretary Mark Esper said Sunday that the raid that resulted in the death of ISIS leader Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi "was a brilliantly executed operation" (The Hill). "This is a great day for America. It's a great day for the world," Esper, who was in the Situation Room with President Trump monitoring the Saturday night raid, said. "The president made a bold decision to launch this raid, and our military service members and our interagency partners executed brilliantly."

THORNBERRY 'UNCOMFORTABLE' WITH TRUMP DESCRIPTION: Rep. Mac Thornberry (R-Texas), the ranking member of the Armed Services Committee, said he was "a little uncomfortable" with President Trump's description of ISIS leader Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi's death. "Oh, it probably makes me a little uncomfortable to hear a president talking that way," Thornberry said Sunday on CNN's "State of the Union." "But, again, Baghdadi was the inspirational leader for an ISIS network across the world from Africa to Southeast Asia. If you can take a little of the glamour off you, if you can make him less inspirational, then there's a value to that for all of these folks who are on their computers or in these networks looking to attack," he added.

THORNBERRY SAYS ISIS NOT DEFEATED: The top GOP member of the House Armed Services Committee warned that ISIS leader Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi's death "does not mean ISIS is defeated." Rep. Mac Thornberry (R-Texas) applauded the president and the special operations forces who took out al-Baghdadi, saying it was a "big deal" and Trump "deserves a lot of credit for authorizing the raid" on CNN's "State of the Union." But he said his death does not eliminate all cause for concern about terrorist attacks. "That does not mean ISIS is defeated anymore than getting bin Laden that al Qaeda was defeated," he said. "We've taken something valuable away, but you still have these networks. You still have people who will take the place of anybody we remove, and they continue to work to attack America."

ROGERS SAYS KURDS HELPED WITH FINDING BAGHDADI: Former Rep. Mike Rogers (R-Mich.) said there was "no way we could have done" the mission to kill ISIS leader Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi without the help of Kurdish troops. Rogers, the former chair of the House Intelligence Committee, told Jake Tapper on CNN's "State of the Union" that having the Kurds as allies and retrieving intelligence from them enabled the U.S. to successfully carry out this mission. "There's no way we could have done this," Rogers said. "Remember those Kurdish forces were pushing back on ISIS." "All of that, Trump should understand how impactful that was," he added. "That was a change in operating in Syria and it did make a significant difference to push back and eliminate their land holding."

SCHIFF SAYS BOLTON WILL BE IMPORTANT WITNESS: House Intelligence Chairman Adam Schiff (D-Calif.) said President Trump's former national security adviser John Bolton is a "very important" witness in the ongoing impeachment probe. Schiff added on ABC's "This Week" that Bolton has emerged from testimony others have given during closed-door depositions as a key witness. "Obviously he has very relevant information and we do want him to come in and testify," Schiff added.

GOWDY CALLS HEARINGS A 'CIRCUS': Former Rep. Trey Gowdy (R-S.C.), the onetime chairman of the House Oversight and Reform Committee, defended the use of private congressional hearings and said he instead took issue with the leaks from the House's impeachment proceedings. CBS's Margaret Brennan on Sunday played a clip of Gowdy in 2018 describing public House hearings as a "circus" and a "freakshow." She then asked Gowdy whether he still believed that. "One hundred percent," Gowdy said on CBS's "Face the Nation," adding, "I'm a rule follower. I threw a Republican out of a hearing because he was not a member of the committee. If you're going to have private investigations with unlimited time for questioning and cross-examining witnesses, that's a good thing."

KLOBACHAR CALLS TRUMP FOREIGN POLICY A 'DISASTER': Minnesota Sen. Amy Klobuchar, a Democratic candidate for president, conceded that the U.S. special forces operation over the weekend that led to the death of ISIS founder and leader, Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi, represents a political victory for President Trump. But she stressed that she believes Mr. Trump's foreign policy — which has veered from both traditional Republican and Democratic orthodoxy — has been filled by consequential mistakes. "Look, I have in the past, for instance, when the president made the decision to respond to Assad's use of sarin gas, I commended him for that decision," Klobuchar said on "Face the Nation" Sunday. "But just because you make some decisions — and you must as a commander in chief and you must make those decisions for the security of this country — doesn't mean that his foreign policy overall has not been a disaster."

Congress

YOUNG REACTS TO BAGHDADI: Sen. Todd Young (R) released this statement: "At this watershed moment in the battle against terrorism, we thank the special operation forces who carried out the mission and the thousands of men and women who have led the fight against ISIS. We think of Hoosier Marine Jordan Spears and his family, who represent the great sacrifice by many of our nation's finest, and their families, to defeat ISIS. We also remember Hoosier Peter Kassig and his family, who represent the unspeakable human toll that ISIS' top leader brought to our fellow American citizens and their families, and to countless innocent men, women and children."

BANKS EXTOLS TRUMP IN RAID AFTERMATH: Northeast Indiana's congressman echoed President Donald Trump on Sunday by tweeting that the death of Islamic State leader Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi was "even bigger" than when Navy SEALs killed Osama bin Laden, who planned the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks in the United States that killed nearly 3,000 people (Francisco, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). Rep. Jim Banks, R-3rd, also wrote on Twitter that he supported Trump's decision to withhold advance notice of the U.S. military's raid Saturday on al-Baghdadi from congressional Democrats out of fear they would leak the information. "Consider that killing al-Baghdadi even bigger than killing Bin Laden," tweeted Banks, a member of the House Armed Services Committee. "Baghdadi both spiritual leader & chief recruiter of ISIS. Hard to estimate how many lives saved by killing who many ISIS fighters/recruits thought immortal," he tweeted, using another name for the Islamic State.

REP. KATIE HILL TO RESIGN: Freshman Rep. Katie Hill is resigning from Congress after facing allegations of inappropriate sexual relationships with staffers in her office and on her congressional campaign, according to two Democratic sources (Politico). She's set to resign by the end of the week. Hill was under investigation by the House Ethics Committee for allegations of an improper sexual relationship with a male congressional staffer, a claim she denied. Hill admitted to and apologized for an "inappropriate" relationship with a female campaign staffer earlier this week.

INQUIRY TO ACCELERATE THIS WEEK: The pace of House Democrats' investigation into President Trump and Ukraine will accelerate this week with a series of hearings from key administration officials, including a highly anticipated appearance from a top official on the National Security Council, Axios' Alayna Treene reports. Tim Morrison, the NSC's Russia and Europe director, will be the first currently serving White House official to testify before the committees on Thursday. He's also the first official who is believed to have been on the July 25 call between Trump and Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky, which is at the crux of Democrats' inquiry.

INQUIRY SCHEDULE: The following current and former administration officials are also scheduled to testify this week: Tuesday, Oct. 29 at 9:30 am: National Security Council Director for European Affairs Lt. Col. Alexander Vindman. Wednesday, Oct. 30 at 9:30 a.m.: Acting Assistant Secretary of Defense for International Security Affairs Kathryn Wheelbarger. Former Deputy National Security Adviser Charles Kupperman was subpoenaed by the House committees to appear on Monday. However, Kupperman filed a lawsuit on Friday asking a federal judge to rule on whether he can testify, given that Trump has asserted that he is immune from the congressional process and instructed him not to testify.

KUPPERMAN REPORTEDLY WON'T TESTIFY: Charles Kupperman, the deputy to former national security adviser John Bolton, was scheduled to appear before the joint committees carrying out the impeachment inquiry, but according to his attorney, he will not be testifying Monday (CBS News). Kupperman, who was subpoenaed by committees, has also been told by the White House that he could not appear before the committees. Torn between the legislative and executive branch directives, Kupperman filed a lawsuit last week in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia requesting that the court decide for him whether he "should comply with the House's subpoena or with the President's assertion of immunity and instruction that he not appear and testify," Kupperman's attorney, Charles Kupperman said in a statement last week.

HOUSE SCHEDULE: The House is expected to vote on a bipartisan package that would impose sanctions on Turkey for invading Syria. This comes despite President Trump declaring victory in the region and directing the Treasury Department to lift all sanctions imposed on Turkey on Oct. 14.

SENATE SCHEDULE: The Senate will vote on a package of appropriations bills to fund federal agencies and departments, including: Department of Commerce, Department of Justice, Science-related agencies, NASA, Department of Agriculture, Food and Drug Administration, Commodity Futures Trading Commission, Department of the Interior, Environmental Protection Agency, Forest Service, military construction activities of the Department of Defense, Department of Veterans Affairs, Department of Transportation and Department of Housing and Urban Development.

FORMER REP. CONYERS DIES: Long-serving former Democratic Congressman John Conyers Jr., who was a founding member of the Congressional Black Caucus and first introduced Martin Luther King Jr. Day as a holiday, but had to step down in 2017 amid allegations of sexual misconduct, has died. He was 90 (CBS News). A family spokeswoman confirmed Conyers's death to CBS News, while two other people in touch with his family Sunday said that Conyers died in his sleep at his Detroit home of natural causes.

GOVERNOR: NYT COVERS A STATEHOUSE WEDDING (& HENRY) - Hannah Elizabeth Brown and Jared Michael Bond were married Oct. 26 at the Indiana Statehouse in Indianapolis. The Rev. Matthew R. Barnes, a Baptist minister, officiated (New York Times). Mrs. Bond, 31, is the deputy finance director for the Indiana Republican State Committee, for which she oversees scheduling and fund-raising events for Gov. Eric J. Holcomb and the first lady, Janet Holcomb. She graduated from Anderson University in Anderson, Ind. She previously served on the staff of Vice President Mike Pence when he was a congressman and later governor of Indiana. She is the daughter of Yevonne A. Brown and Kenneth J. Brown of Lapel, Ind. The bride's father, who is retired, was a social studies teacher at Elwood Middle School in Elwood, Ind. Her mother, also retired, was an elementary schoolteacher at Elwood Community Schools for 43 years. Mr. Bond, 33, is the communications manager and public information officer for the Indiana auditor of state, Tera Klutz, for whom he oversees the communications strategy and media relations. He graduated from Purdue. He previously served as a director of the Tippecanoe County Board of Elections and as the Indiana press secretary for Representative Todd Rokita, a Republican who served from 2011 to 2019.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP WATCHED BAGHDADI TAKEDOWN - In describing the death of Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi on Sunday, President Trump used dramatic, even cinematic language to portray the daring American commando raid that brought down the Islamic State leader who, the president said, died "screaming, crying and whimpering" (New York Times). Mr. Trump described the video footage he watched from the White House Situation Room as "something really amazing to see." The experience, the president said, was "as though you were watching a movie." What the president saw, according to military and intelligence officials, was overhead surveillance footage on several video screens that, together, provided various angles from above, and in real time. The videos included heat signatures of those moving around — which analysts labeled friend or foe — at the al-Baghdadi compound near Idlib, Syria.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP NEEDED ASSETS HE ESCHEWED - To kill Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi — arguably the most important national security accomplishment of the Trump presidency, along with wiping out ISIS' caliphate — the U.S. relied on many tools President Trump has spurned, Axios' Jonathan Swan writes. The raid's planners needed a U.S. ground presence in Iraq, where the mission launched and returned. They depended on intelligence from Kurdish partners on the ground. And they needed America's engagement on the ground in Syria for intel and situational awareness.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP/PENCE SCHEDULE - President Trump's schedule, per a White House official: Monday: Trump will leave the White House at 8 a.m. for Andrews, where he'll fly to Chicago. He will arrive at O'Hare at 9:20 a.m. and fly to Soldier Field, before heading to the McCormick Place Convention Center. He will arrive at the International Association of Chiefs of Police Annual Conference and Exposition at 10 a.m. Central time, and he will sign an executive order and speak at 10:25 a.m. At 11:20 a.m., he'll leave for the Trump International Hotel & Tower Chicago, where he'll have a fundraiser. He is scheduled to fly back at 1:35 p.m. At 5:45 p.m., he will host Halloween at the White House. Tuesday: Trump will have lunch with Secretary of State Mike Pompeo. He will also join a roundtable with supporters and speak at a Washington, D.C., fundraiser. Wednesday: Trump will have lunch with Vice President Mike Pence. He will also present the Medal of Honor to Master Sergeant Matthew Williams for his service during Operation Enduring Freedom. Friday: Trump will host a rally in Tupelo, Mississippi.

AUTOS: UAW SHIFTS TO FORD - General Motor's four-year deal will now be used as a template in bargaining with crosstown rival Ford Motor, the union's choice for the next round of bargaining, followed by Fiat Chrysler (Fox News). "We can confirm the UAW today notified Ford it plans to negotiate with us next," Ford said in a statement. "As America's No. 1 producer of vehicles and largest employer of UAW-represented autoworkers, we look forward to reaching a fair agreement that helps Ford enhance its competitiveness and preserve and protect good-paying manufacturing jobs." A contentious 40-day strike that crippled GM's U.S. production came to an end Friday as workers approved a new contract with the company.

SPORTS: TIGER TIES PGA RECORD - For Tiger Woods, it all comes down to consistency. Surgeries on his knee and back and a crisis in his personal life have cost him opportunities to play his best golf over the past decade. But when he's been healthy and free from off-course distractions, he's always found ways to win (ABC Sports). And now, he's won as much as anybody on the PGA Tour. Woods completed a wire-to-wire victory at the Zozo Championship on Monday, equaling Sam Snead's PGA Tour record of 82 victories. "It's a big number," Woods said. "It's a lot of consistency and doing it for a long period of time, Sam did it into his 50s and I'm in my early to mid-40s, so it's about being consistent and doing it for a very long period of time. I've been very fortunate to have the career I've had so far."

SPORTS: COLTS WIN ON VINATIERI FG - Indianapolis Colts coach Frank Reich was so confident in Adam Vinatieri, he opted to play for a long field goal Sunday (AP). Even after the NFL's career scoring leader opened the game by missing a 45-yard field goal wide right. Even after the league's best clutch kicker missed the tying extra point in the third quarter. Eventually, Vinatieri rewarded Reich's faith. In his 200th career game with the Colts, Vinatieri made a 51-yard field goal with 22 seconds left to give Indy a 15-13 come-from-behind victory over the Denver Broncos.

SPORTS: BEARS LOSE ON MISSED FG - One week after Chicago managed just 17 yards rushing on a franchise-low seven attempts in a 36-25 loss to New Orleans, RB David Montgomery had 27 of the Bears' 38 carries. He scored his third career touchdown on a 4-yard run in the third quarter, giving Chicago a 16-7 lead (AP). But the Bears (3-4) were unable to close out the Chargers (3-5), who had dropped three in a row and five of six. Mitchell Trubisky threw an interception and lost a fumble, helping Los Angeles rally. But he scrambled for 11 yards to move the Bears to the Chargers 21 with about 40 seconds left. Rather than try to move closer, coach Matt Nagy had Trubisky take a knee and called his last timeout with 4 seconds left. Eddy Pineiro then missed a 41-yard field goal as time expired, giving the Chargers the dramatic victory.

MICHIGAN CITY: MEER TO ANNOUNCE NEW PD CHIEF - The mayor of Michigan City will name a new police chief this week after the resignations of three senior officers (AP). Mayor Ron Meer says he'll hold a news conference Tuesday. Police Chief Mark Swistek and assistant chiefs Royce Williams and Kevin Urbanczyk announced their resignations last week after a disagreement with the mayor over the Laporte County Drug Task Force. Swistek says Meer directed him to end the department's participation in the task force. The mayor later apologized for what he said during a "private, heated discussion." He says he won't pull Michigan City out of the group. Meer says he's been under stress since the arrest of a stepson on a drug charge.

INDIANAPOLIS: CITY PAYS $6M IN LAWSUITS - A Call 6 Investigation has uncovered the City of Indianapolis has paid out $6.17 million since January 2018 to settle lawsuits and claims for things like excessive force, police shootings, pothole damage, and car crashes involving city vehicles. As part of a four-month investigation, Call 6 analyzed the more than 180 settlements the city has paid out with your tax dollars over the last year and a half. RTV6's Kara Kenney found convicted murderers, burglars and violent felons in prison have received those settlements after they filed claims with the city.

LOGANSPOUR: CHICAGO DEVELOPER BUYS MALL - Logansport leaders are working to revitalize the city. Mayor Dave Kitchell is hoping the recent purchase of the Logansport Mall will help (WFLI-TV). Longtime Logansport residents remember the rise and fall of the mall. "It was nice to get it here, we were really excited we didn't have to go to Lafayette or Kokomo so much anymore, back in the day when it first got here," said Roberta Sturgeon, Logansport resident. "Then it all kind of dwindled. Now it's practically empty and it was pretty depressing, it really was." Mayor Kitchell calls it the mothership that brought retail and economic development to the east end of the city, and after more than 30 years the mall is now being repurposed. "The Penney's building, that will be sold off as a separate parcel and it will be developed for hotel property, what this enables the developer to do is to use that money to put more investment into their mall site," said Kitchell.

Duke Energy facing rate-hike pushback

October 25, 2019 | John Russell

KEYWORDS DUKE ENERGY / ENERGY & ENVIRONMENT / INDIANA UTILITY REGULATORY COMMISSION / UTILITIES / UTILITY RATES

In a career spanning nearly 40 years, Glenn Watkins, a utility consultant based in Virginia, has analyzed hundreds of rate cases and provided expert testimony to regulators and courts in 23 states.

But when reading through a filing by Duke Energy Indiana in recent weeks, he grew puzzled in trying to understand the utility's request for a 15% increase in customer rates. Duke's exhibits and work papers, he said, were not documented, cross-referenced or linked in any way.

Watkins, president of suburban Richmond-based Technical Associates, was hired by the Indiana Office of Utility Consumer Counselor to analyze the case. He said he and his staff spent more than a month trying to understand, follow and verify Duke's forecasts.

Frustrated, he wrote this to the Indiana Utility Regulatory Commission on Oct. 15: "I cannot verify, reconcile, or understand how Duke's revenues were derived or even if they are consistent with forecasts."

Another outside expert, Jonathan F. Wallach of Resource Insight Inc. in Boston ran into similar problems. Hired by consumer group Citizens Actions Coalition of Indiana, Wallach said he found that some of Duke's work papers in the rate case did not contain any formulas he could analyze—just tens of thousands of rows of data pasted in from a proprietary software model he could not verify. He said Duke could not explain how the model worked, or where to find supporting information.

Pinegar

"In my experience, I have never seen a rate filing that compares to this in terms of the unsupported, inadequate, unorganized and undocumented presentation of evidence," Wallach wrote to the IURC on Oct. 11.

Other key parties in the case—including huge customers Walmart Inc., Kroger Co. and Nucor Steel-Indiana, along with the OUCC and Citizens Action Coalition—have asked state regulators to order Duke to refile all its work papers and exhibits, with formulas and linked spreadsheets. The IURC has yet to rule on the motion.

It's been only three months since Duke filed the rate request. But already, the case is getting huge pushback from customers, environmentalists, consumer groups and outside utility experts.

Many are accusing Duke, the state's largest electric utility, of making it difficult to examine key financial information, thus obstructing the normal give and take of the regulatory process. Some of them also say the rate increase seems unjustified and extraordinary.

The pushback could be a huge challenge for Duke, which says it needs to raise rates to improve the reliability of electric service, offset costs of generating cleaner energy and serve a growing customer base.

The company said the rate increase, if granted, would generate an additional $395 million in annual revenue, a significant boost. Last year, Duke Energy Indiana had operating revenue of $3.04 billion, up less than 1% from 2017.

If the utility receives state permission to increase rates, more than 800,000 customers could see their monthly bills jump—but by different amounts. A typical residential customer using 1,000 kilowatt hours a month could see a monthly increase of 20.4%, or about $23. A commercial business would see an average increase of 18%.

A heavy-industrial consumer, such as a steel mill, would see rates climb about 13%, while a light-industrial customer, such as a metal shop, would see an 18% increase.

'More than transparent'

In trying to make the case it needs the money, Duke Energy Indiana, which is part of Charlotte, North Carolina-based Duke Energy Corp., said it has turned over voluminous amounts of data to interested parties. And rather than obstructing the flow of information, the utility said it has responded to more than 80 sets of discovery requests, comprising more than 1,000 individual data sets. It said it has provided even more information through conference calls and emails, exceeding the state's rules in order to help outside parties.

"We feel we've been more than transparent, more than accommodating to the other parties," Stan Pinegar, Duke Energy Indiana's president, told IBJ. "We've got a lot of issues in this case. We understand that."

Utility rate cases are normally adversarial affairs, with lawyers on both sides taking testimony, examining witnesses and introducing evidence.

But in recent years, utility cases have grown even more complex, as regulators have granted "intervenor status" to a wider circle of interested parties, such as large customers, environmental groups and labor councils. That gives the intervenors the right to examine the company's filings and challenge any evidence.

Greg Ellis, who worked as an administrative law judge at the IURC for six years before joining the Indiana Chamber as vice president for energy and environmental policy, said the cases are growing more expensive as a result. And in the process, he said, many of the utilities' regulatory costs get rolled back into higher rates.

Ellis

"A lot of these cases have gotten so complicated, with lots of lawyers all around," he said.

But some intervenors say they're playing a critical watchdog role in demanding utilities provide all relevant information to prove they need extra funds.

Citizens Action Coalition said it has been trying to dig into Duke's filings in this case but has been frustrated by inconsistent data or a lack of information. As one example, it said the residential connection charge and energy rates shown in one exhibit were different from those in a companion work paper.

"Generally speaking, it is messy, disorganized, riddled with errors, and essentially embodies the largest electric utility not putting forward enough organization and resources to make this case transparent or logical," said Jennifer Washburn, a Citizens Action Coalition attorney.

When asked about that by IBJ, Duke said that, due to a prior agreement with the parties, it filed multiple work papers under various methods.

"This was clearly delineated in our testimony," the company said in a statement. "In addition, we have pointed this out to the parties on at least two occasions."

'Serious deficiencies'

Citizens Action Coalition said certain parties began to uncover "serious deficiencies" in Duke's case in late August, or nearly two months after the utility filed its rate-increase request. In early September, it reached out to Duke for more information to show how it classified and allocated costs—a requirement in rate cases.

According to a rule published by the U.S. General Accounting Office in state utility matters: "To the extent a forward-looking test year employs a model, that model must be completely transparent, the assumptions fully explicit, and the results fully replicable by any party and by Commission staff."

Citizens Action Coalition said Duke's response—an offer to view the complete cost-of-service study, a critical submission, at Duke's Plainfield office—was unacceptable. In a motion filed Oct. 15, the coalition asked state regulators to order Duke to refile paperwork and supporting documents with links.

In response to complaints from outside experts that the cost-of-service study had no intact formulas, just voluminous amounts of data pasted in from another model, Duke said

Duke Energy Indiana

Headquarters: Plainfield

President: Stan Pinegar

About the rate increase

- ▶ Duke Energy wants to raise rates in two steps: 13% in mid-2020 and an additional 2% in 2021.
- ▶ Together, the increases would generate $395 million in annual revenue.
- ▶ A typical residential customer using 1,000 kilowatt hours a month could see a monthly increase of 20.4%, or $23, as a result of both steps of the increase.
- ▶ A typical commercial customer would see an average increase of 18.1%
- ▶ A typical heavy industrial customer would see an increase of 13.2%, while a typical light industrial customer would see a 17.9% increase
- ▶ Duke had its last rate case in 2004, when the company was known as PSI/Cinergy.

it used a “sophisticated proprietary model” to run the study, and provided the inputs and results to the parties in its initial filings.

“We have made the model available on site and via Skype to the parties,” the utility said in a statement. “We also created a replica cost of service study in Excel format so they could see the formulas and have agreed to perform cost of service model runs for them.”

Other parties in the rate case, including Walmart, Kroger and Nucor Steel, did not return calls to IBJ, although they filed motions asking Duke to furnish more information.

Parties that have joined CAC’s motion to have Duke provide more information are the Indiana Office of Utility Consumer Counselor, the Indiana Community Action Association, the Indiana Laborers District Council, the Sierra Club and the Environmental Working Group.

Duke said it has met all of Indiana’s requirements in its filing, and has been timely in its responses. It said other parties overstepped their deadlines in challenging the company’s information, because they were required to file challenges within 20 days of the filing, “yet they made their claims 105 days after the filing.”

“Furthermore, we’ve taken additional steps to assist the parties, including the creation of data in different formats to try and accommodate their requests and have had multiple information conversations over the phone and in person with them,” the utility said in a statement.

Pinegar, the utility’s Indiana president, said the utility has attended three public-comment forums around the state to hear issues and engage with customers.

“I have complete confidence in this case,” he said. “I’m satisfied with everything we have to do to be as transparent as possible.”•

Editorial: Investment hub idea is a good step toward goal of regional cooperation

October 25, 2019

KEYWORDS EDITORIALS / OPINION

We've long been advocates of regional cooperation—a concept traditionally viewed as benefiting Indianapolis more than its neighbors. So it's encouraging that Fishers Mayor Scott Fadness is taking the lead in promoting the latest proposal: the creation of investment hubs that would allow cities and towns to raise and spend money collaboratively on capital projects.

There's much to like about the idea, which comes from Accelerate Indiana Municipalities, formerly known as the Indiana Association of Cities and Towns.

Two or more municipalities with combined populations of at least 100,000 could join forces to create an investment hub, a 12-year commitment to impose a new sales, income or food and beverage tax to raise money for regional capital projects.

"My goal before I leave this office is to see our region collectively act together," Fadness told IBJ. We applaud Fadness for being dedicated to regional cooperation. And we agree that the state needs a regional funding mechanism formal enough to survive changes in local political leadership but flexible enough to allow cities to raise and spend funds as they choose.

State legislators should be receptive. It's a reasonable follow-up to the 2015 Regional Cities Initiative, which split $126 million in tax amnesty funds among three regions. Although it was a popular program that leveraged more than $1 billion in investment, it was funded by one-time source. Legislators shouldn't be surprised that cities and towns want to replicate Regional Cities' success and make it available to municipalities statewide.

While we like the investment hub idea, it's not without flaws.

Only half the revenue collected by the investment hub would go to regional capital projects. The other half would be distributed to the participating municipalities to use as they see fit. Devoting only half the money to whatever regional project the money is being raised for seems to shortchange the program's potential.

It's also unclear to what extent the program could be used to address existing problems. Using investment hub money to turn White River into a regional amenity would be a win, but a redeveloped riverfront might not deliver on its full potential if Indy roads are still a minefield.

Indeed, infrastructure needs in Indianapolis have been the flashpoint for recent discussions of regional cooperation. When Indianapolis Mayor Joe Hogsett earlier this year proposed capturing a portion of income tax growth in Marion and eight surrounding counties for infrastructure improvements, the idea was criticized by other mayors in the region, who complained that Indianapolis would get an unfair share of the proceeds. They also felt blindsided by the proposal.

Hogsett might have done a better job of communicating the plan, but no one can argue that Indianapolis doesn't face the biggest infrastructure challenges.

A truly regional approach would prioritize directing investments where the need is greatest rather than arguing over which city gets the most money.

But we realize that's wishful thinking. For now, the very idea that suburban mayors are interested in regional cooperation is a good sign. We hope the debate gains traction and delivers a plan that works. What emerges won't be perfect, but any plan that encourages regional thinking is better than nothing at all. •

Employers say they're up for challenge of hiring seasonal help

Before she got her job as a senior administrator in UPS' human resources department, Khisha Gleaves started with the package-delivery giant as a seasonal worker.

The higher-ups noted during those two years that she always went above and beyond, and was punctual and reliable, so they offered her a full-time position.

"I was overwhelmed with excitement, joy and a peak of accomplishment," she said. "I prayed for this job for years. Thanks to UPS, I was able to start my career path."

UPS is hoping to find many more Khisha-Gleaves-type employees as the holiday season nears. In October, the company put out the word that it wants to hire 800 workers in Indianapolis and 100,000 nationwide during the upcoming peak months.

But with the unemployment rate at 3.2% and growing competition as other companies also ramp up hiring, finding that many seasonal employees will be a challenge.

Consider some of the other seasonal hiring announcements around Indianapolis in the past month or so. FedEx said it needs 1,700 employees in Indianapolis. Radial fulfillment and transportation company is looking for 1,800 workers at its Brownsburg center. The U.S. Postal Service is advertising for an unspecified number of carriers and clerks throughout Indiana.

The Indiana Department of Workforce Development doesn't collect information specific to holiday hiring, but a spokesman said that, based on other sources, this appears to be a strong holiday hiring season. Over the past three holiday seasons—the fourth quarters of 2016, 2017 and 2018—retail jobs increased 2% or more every year.

"The seasonal hiring for this year will be extremely tight and competitive," said Seth Morales, president of locally based Morales Group, a recruiting and staffing agency. "Employers who have attractive pay rates and creative retention tactics will win this season."

“Most employers will see wage pressures and therefore need to raise rates for the seasonal surge or be left empty-handed,” he said. “We see all kinds of wage tactics like sign-on bonuses, a referral bonus and retention bonuses.”

Morales

Many of the companies and organizations looking to hire use those tried-and-true recruitment methods—signing bonuses, competitive hourly wages, offers of full-time work in the new year. Atlanta-based UPS boasts of offering tuition reimbursement of up to $1,300 for college students who work for the company seasonally as well as flexible, around-the-clock shifts so applicants can choose the hours that work best with their schedules.

In addition, Katie L. Chapman, Ohio Valley area human resources supervisor for UPS, said the parcel service offers the chance for many seasonal employees to come back permanently in January. About 31% of UPS’ global workforce began with the company as seasonal employees, and 35% of its seasonal hires traditionally stay on permanently.

Many companies also make it easy to apply online or in person. Greensboro, North Carolina-based Fresh Market, for example, held a local job fair Oct. 18-19. The result: 20 applicants and eight hires, spokeswoman Nicole Chabot said. And the chain hired 250 seasonal employees across all its stores. Chabot called those results a success.

But job fairs and an easy application process might not be enough, Morales said. “Most of these moves are standard across the board and expected by almost all employers who seek to hire seasonal labor.”

Morales said that, because of low supply and high demand, many workers who are productive are already employed, leaving hiring managers in a jam, stuck with what’s left over.

Chapman

He said he’s seen companies fly into Puerto Rico to recruit workers. Employers also have targeted a city like Orlando, Florida, which has a large resettled population from Puerto Rico, and offered what he calls “the Midwest cost-of-living opportunity” for relocation.

Companies are pushing their digital recruiting strategies, with some aggressively advertising on Facebook and other social media sites. And some employers are providing a workforce development program as an opportunity for workers to enhance their skill sets.

Employers, though, seem undaunted by needing to hire so many workers all at once. Garey Cozad, director of operations at Pennsylvania-based Radial’s Brownsburg location, said Radial has years of experience scaling up for seasonal hiring surges.

“It’s one of the reasons retailers choose to work with us,” he said. “We spend much of the year planning for peak.”

To find 1,800 workers in Brownsburg—and 21,000 seasonal workers nationwide—Radial has dedicated marketing and PR efforts, and it partners with multiple experienced staffing partners such as Adecco to reach potential hires through personalized social media ads, broadcast segments, billboards and more.

Still, Cozad said, sometimes hiring is just a matter of getting the word out. That's how Darryl Smith and Radial found each other. Smith was shot last year and was out of the workforce for a while to recuperate. He heard that Radial was opening a new center in Indiana through a report on WXIN-TV Channel 59 and interviewed with the company as a way to jump-start a new career.

Smith started as a fulfillment associate—the same job the seasonal workers Radial needs in Brownsburg will be doing. In four months, he was promoted to a lead and is now in the process of interviewing for a supervisor position.

"I got up to speed very quickly," Smith said, adding that he was interviewed and then hired quickly, and began learning on the job. "It's clear to me that perseverance is rewarded here," he said. "They want to see you succeed."

'This is our season'

To attract seasonal workers in the Indianapolis area, the U.S. Postal Service uses a combination of salary perks—hourly wages of $16 to $17.29—and easy online applications, along with a story spokeswoman Mary Dando tells about Anitra Robinson.

Dando

Dando said Robinson went to the usps.com site, found a vacancy for a rural carrier associate and applied. Within a short time, she had completed the test on her phone, did the drug test, and in three weeks, was hired. After a week of training at the Rural Carrier Academy, she was assigned to the Zionsville Post Office.

Though rural carrier associate is a non-career position with limited benefits, vacation days and access to health insurance, many non-career employees become regular employees after a short time.

"I don't know what I'd like to do," Robinson said, "but I am learning so much as an RCA. I am happy to stay in this job for a while so I can be fully prepared when I become a regular carrier."

Despite the tight labor market, Dando said the postal service fully expects to be able to hire the workers it needs to make sure everyone's letters and packages get delivered in time for the holidays.

"This is our season," she said. "We've been helping holidays happen for more than 244 years. It's what we do."

UPS said the same.

"Being in business since 1907, UPS has gained quite a bit of experience hiring for the holiday season year after year," UPS' Chapman said. "We're confident we'll hire all the help needed this holiday season."•

Hemp for profit? New crop faces questions over market viability, sustainability

Jay Berry of Grant County is one of approximately 200 Indiana farmers who grew and harvested hemp this year. "I think a guys have been sold a bill of goods about how much money they can make on this," he says. "If it sounds too good to be true is."

MARION — One of the most notable elements in the farm bill signed by President Donald Trump last December was the legalization of industrial hemp.

At the time, the bill's provision removing industrial hemp from the Controlled Substances Act was hailed by advocates and environmentalists as a measure that would allow farmers to diversify their crops and maintain profit margins in the face of droughts and market volatility.

But now that approximately 200 Indiana farmers who were granted special permits to grow it this season have largely finished harvesting the state's first legal hemp crop since World War II, uncertainty remains over how lucrative it will be, even as new uses — and thus new markets — for hemp are uncovered.

Jay Berry, a farmer in Grant County who built one of the first ethanol plants in the Midwest, said he quickly saw potential in growing a fiber variety of hemp which can be used in oil, automotive interiors and in building reinforced door panels.

"I'm a risk taker," said Berry, who planted and harvested about 50 acres of hemp this season. "There's a lot of similarities between hemp and ethanol, and with my experience in the ethanol (industry), I thought, hey, these are two are very similar, I'd like to be in the forefront and one of the first ones involved on the hemp side of things."

But the potential windfall for farmers — cultivating industrial hemp could generate as much as $300 more per acre compared to corn and soybeans, according to the Purdue Hemp Project — is balanced by several likely drawbacks. For example, caring for and harvesting hemp is considerably more labor intensive, Berry says. It is also sensitive to moisture and temperature and must be planted in precise conditions in order to produce the best growth and results. The anticipated end use of the hemp can also be a consideration in planting decisions.

Beth Vansickle of the Purdue Extension Madison County office said that, although no local farmers applied for hemp planting permits this season, there is interest in the product, and she expects more inquiries next year.

Agricultural experts say that, as with any new product, many farmers are taking a wait-and-see approach to see which markets develop — and how quickly — before investing in hemp.

"Hemp could be considered risky since we are still in the infancy stages of this industry," said Marguerite Bolt, a hemp extension specialist in the Department of Agronomy at Purdue University. "A lot of farmers will only plant what they can afford to lose, which is still a cautious approach."

Another issue, Berry says, is a lack of resources to process the hemp, once it's harvested, into the various components needed for end-use products.

"The hardest part isn't the growing. There's no one out there to process it right now," he said. "I think a lot of guys have been sold a bill of goods about how much money they can make on this. If it sounds too good to be true, it is."

'A LEARNING PROCESS'

The Indiana Legislature has been equally circumspect on its path to allowing the state's farmers to grow hemp. When Gov. Eric Holcomb signed Senate Bill 516 into law in May, it represented a marker in what has been "a learning process," according to state Sen. Tim Lanane, D-Anderson. Lanane, the State Senate minority leader, said the bill took at least "a couple years" to work its way through the General Assembly.

"A lot of recommendations were put into the bill," said Lanane, who sat on the Committee on Commerce and Technology, which heard testimony from Indiana State Police officials and others on the topic. "We were pretty careful in terms of trying to set up a structure that could be regulated and is all on the up and up."

Because of hemp's similarities to marijuana, Lanane said legislators had to work through several misconceptions, especially since marijuana has been legalized for recreational use in 11 states, including neighboring Illinois.

"Any fears that this could allow a whole bunch of pot to be grown were really dispelled," Lanane said. "There was a person brought in from another state (to testify) who had utilized industrial hemp production and had had a lot of practice with it. I think the committee and everyone involved did their homework and really studied the issue."

The law as it's written is almost certain to be amended, Lanane said, as legislators hear additional feedback from farmers, law enforcement officials and stakeholders in industries where hemp becomes more widely used.

"What I'm hearing is 2020 is when we're really going to find out if it takes off," Lanane said. "As far as hemp production goes, 2020 I think will be the year we really find out more about it, and we'll go from there."

Barring another spring of record-setting rainfall, Bolt said next season should provide a much more accurate barometer on whether hemp truly becomes a mainstay of Indiana's agricultural inventory.

"I think we will find out how hemp can fit into our crop rotations and if it really is going to be a sustainable part of our farm economy in Indiana," she said.

As more states legalize hemp, the opportunity to grab a piece of what is already a $1.2 billion industry, according to the Hemp Business Journal, will likely entice many more farmers in Indiana to consider planting it, at least on a trial basis. Officials with the Midwest Hemp Council said farmers in the state planted about 3,000 acres this season, and that figure is expected to double or triple next year.

"Our most innovative farmers are always evaluating opportunities to diversify their farms for additional stability," said Indiana Farm Bureau President Randy Kron. "For some farmers, hemp will become just that. It's an individual decision for each farmer whether hemp will work for their business, but it's great to have another option for a crop."

What's next

Indiana farmers harvested about 3,000 acres of hemp this fall, the state's first legal hemp crop in more than 50 years.

As is the case with any new legalized crop, considerable research into the viability of new markets is taking place in order to provide farmers with information to make informed decisions on whether adding hemp to their crop rotations is wise.

"We need to be sure we establish the markets and see where this has the potential to go," Mark Boyer, a Miami County farmer and owner of Healthy Hoosier Oil, told the Indiana Farm Bureau. "Hemp has so many diverse uses, but how many of those uses are economically viable for us? We just don't know because we haven't had the time to test it out. The markets will develop and we will get there, but it takes time and plenty of work."

Commercial hemp production is expected to launch fully in 2020 pending the approval of national regulations by the USDA and approval of Indiana's state program.

PARTY LINE HOUSE IMPEACHMENT VOTE: The House passed a resolution almost entirely along party lines laying out the framework for the next phase of the impeachment inquiry, the first significant vote since the investigation into President Trump's actions regarding Ukraine began last month (Wall Street Journal). The resolution passed on a vote of 232-196 Thursday morning, with all Democrats except two supporting the measure and all Republicans rejecting it. The Indiana delegation voted along party lines. The one independent in the House, Rep. Justin Amash of Michigan, voted to back the resolution. The resolution sets out a road map for the probe and will make the investigation more public, though there is no time frame given for when that will happen. The resolution authorizes the House Intelligence Committee to release transcripts from past interviews and gives more power to Republicans, including the right to call witnesses, though those requests are subject to approval by Democrats. "If we don't have a system of checks and balances, we might as well all just elect a president and go home," House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D., Calif.) said ahead of the vote. She waved away GOP complaints, saying: "These rules are fairer than anything that has gone before in terms of an impeachment proceeding." The two Democrats who voted to oppose the measure were Reps. Jeff Van Drew of New Jersey and Collin Peterson of Minnesota, who both represent districts that Mr. Trump won in 2016.

REP. PENCE TAKES CENTER STAGE IN IMPEACHMENT DRAMA: U.S. Rep. Greg Pence took center stage in the impeachment drama on Thursday, though he didn't say a word. Pence stood conspicuously behind House Republican leadership as they decried the vote to impeach President Trump (Howey Politics Indiana). The older brother of Vice President Mike Pence is towing the line for President Trump's defense, and Trump World is watching. Any speculation that the veep might be separating from Trump as this crisis grows happens under glaring lights. When Rep. Pence tweeted, "After seven weeks of running a communist-style, ultra-partisan effort to undo the 2016 election results under the disguise of a sham impeachment process, @SpeakerPelosi claims she wants to now add transparency to a widely discredited process," one of those who "liked" his stance was Eric Trump, son of the president. If President Trump were to be convicted in the Senate - still unlikely at this point, it would be Mike Pence who would be the 46th president. But at this point, the Pences are all in on the defense of a president in this self-inflicted crisis. Pence, sent a fundraising email to supporters declaring the impeachment effort a "petty political fight" and "another ugly, drawn-out conflict" Americans will be forced to watch. "It's Halloween, and the scariest thing on my mind is unhinged Democrats trying to overturn the results of the 2016 election," Greg Pence said. "They're determined to impeach President Trump before he wins re-election, and it's up to us in the conservative grassroots to stop them."

43% OF HOOSIERS BACK IMPEACHMENT: The odds are if you're a Democrat, you approve of the impeachment inquiry. If you're a Republican, it's just the opposite. Those are the results of an Old National Bank/Ball State survey, that says Hoosiers are divided right down the middle on impeachment (Davis, WIBC). "It's a very partisan issue," said Chad Kinsella, assistant professor of Political Science at Ball State. "It mirrors very closely with Trump approval." In the telephone survey of 600 adult Hoosiers, only 43 percent of those responding approved of the House impeachment inquiry compared to 48 percent who disapproved. "Unlike recent national polls, which indicate a slight majority of Americans approve of the House impeachment inquiry against President Trump, this statewide survey shows that Hoosiers are less supportive of the inquiry" said Kinsella. "The survey indicates that 77 percent of Republicans disapprove of the impeachment inquiry, independents are evenly split on approval and disapproval of the inquiry at 44 percent each way, and 82 percent of Democrats approve of the impeachment inquiry," Kinsella said. "Clearly, this is a divisive issue among Hoosiers as it is nationally and will set the stage for the upcoming presidential election in 2020."

BUTTIGIEG SAYS 'THUMPING DEFEAT' BETTER THAN IMPEACHMENT: On the same day when congressional Democrats took their first formal vote on the impeachment inquiry, Pete Buttigieg, South Bend, Ind., mayor and 2020 Democratic presidential candidate, said in an interview with the Boston Globe that there would be 'a lot of benefit' for the country if President Trump had a 'thumping defeat' in the 2020 elections instead of being removed from office. "The impeachment process is based on a constitutional standard and needs to run its course accordingly," Buttigieg said after wrapping up two days of campaign events in New Hampshire. "I will say that there would be a lot of benefit to Trump and Trumpism getting a resounding, thumping defeat at the ballot box because I think that is what will be required for congressional Republicans to be reunited with their conscience."

THIS IMPEACHMENT MORE POLARIZED THAN 1998: When the Republican-led House voted in 1998 to begin an impeachment inquiry into President Bill Clinton, 31 Democrats sided with Republicans, and the White House breathed a sigh of relief that the number was not significantly larger. In today's hyper-polarized Washington, defections of that magnitude on the question of impeachment would be considered a tsunami (New York Times). Not a single House Republican on Thursday joined Democrats in supporting a resolution outlining the parameters for the next stage of impeachment proceedings, despite having demanded such a vote for weeks. Just two Democrats broke from their party to oppose the investigation. The stark division in the 232-to-196 vote made clear that the accelerating impeachment inquiry will continue to be highly partisan as it moves into its more public phase, with the two parties pulling ever further apart as they dig in deeper on the righteousness of their respective causes. Democrats say it is their constitutional duty to hold a lawless President Trump to account even if he is unlikely to be removed from office. Republicans are determined to defend a president they say is being persecuted for political gain. Little evidence has emerged that either side is willing to give an inch, and the certainty of facing a major political backlash for doing so would seem to decrease chances of that prospect even further.

JUDGE TO RULE ON WHETHER SUBPOENAS SHOULD BE ENFORCED: Attorneys representing President Donald Trump, the House of Representatives and Charles Kupperman, the president's former deputy national security adviser, appeared in federal court Thursday in a case in which Kupperman is asking a judge to decide whether he must submit to questioning in the House impeachment inquiry (ABC News). The hearing was expected to be a perfunctory and procedural exercise, but when Justice Department attorneys asked the court for more time to build their case, the federal judge overseeing the lawsuit fired back. "When it's a matter of this consequence to this country you roll up your sleeves and get the job done," U.S. Judge Richard Leon said. Attorneys representing the House condemned the Justice Department for its "attempt to delay" proceedings and notified the court of its intention to file a motion to dismiss the suit by next Tuesday. Justice Department lawyers also said they intend to file a motion to dismiss.

FSSA SUSPENDS MEDICAID WORK REQUIREMENT: The Indiana Family and Social Services Administration announced Thursday that it is temporarily suspending the work requirements of Indiana's Medicaid expansion program (Kelly, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). About 440,000 low-income Hoosiers are on the Healthy Indiana program, which is funded by federal dollars but requires a financial contribution by the participant. Indiana began implementing the work requirements Jan. 1 and was set to begin suspending the coverage of individuals who have not met the work requirements Dec. 31. But Indiana Legal Services and the National Health Law Program filed suit in September on behalf of four Indiana residents whose health care benefits are in jeopardy. One of those Hoosiers is a Fort Wayne woman. Three other states face similar suits. FSSA said Thursday it would temporarily suspend enforcement of the provision to allow time for the lawsuit to be resolved, and so the court can address the challenge to HIP after similar legal challenges to programs such as Gateway to Work in other states have worked their way through the appeals process. "We remain committed to operating the Gateway to Work program and to continuing to build on the early successes of the program, through which HIP members are reporting successful engagements in their workplaces, schools and communities," Indiana Medicaid Director Allison Taylor said.

SMITH REFUTES HENRY TV AD: The campaign for Fort Wayne's Republican mayoral candidate has taken issue with one of Mayor Tom Henry's many campaign ads, accusing the mayor of intentionally misleading voters regarding Tim Smith's connection to the city (Francisco, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). The specific ad ran on TV and was posted to Facebook Wednesday. In it, Henry accuses Smith of "twisting facts and distorting the truth," and touts the city's bond rating and cites data from Greater Fort Wayne Inc. that states Fort Wayne has one of the lowest tax rates for a city its size, as well as a study from WalletHub that ranked Fort Wayne as one of the country's best-run cities. "Tim Smith moved into Fort Wayne just over five years ago and now he's running a negative smear campaign for mayor," Henry says, looking directly into the camera. "Maybe where Tim's from, people accept negative campaigns, but in Fort Wayne, we expect better from our candidates." In a news release Thursday, Joe Knepper, communications director for the Smith campaign, criticized the ad, touching on Smith's contention that the city's long-term debt has increased 230% and that wage growth is much lower than the national average. "The truth is, Tom Henry knows of Tim's history and deep roots in Fort Wayne; yet he would rather mislead voters than tell the truth in an attempt to hold onto power," he said.

UAW CHIEF, AIDE FACE EMBEZZLEMENT CHARGES: United Auto Workers President Gary Jones and a top aide were accused Thursday of conspiring to embezzle as much as $700,000 in member dues and splitting the money, according to a new criminal filing that marked a dramatic escalation of a years-long corruption investigation (Detroit News). The allegation was outlined in a criminal case filed against Edward "Nick" Robinson, 72, of St. Louis, president of a regional UAW community action program council. He was charged with conspiracy to embezzle union funds and conspiracy to defraud the United States, felonies punishable by up to five years in federal prison. The criminal case deepens an alleged conspiracy involving the top echelon of the UAW and aired new allegations involving Jones, who prosecutors refer to in court filings as "UAW Official A." Sources familiar with the investigation have said that official is Jones, who has not been charged with wrongdoing and continues to lead the UAW.

BUTTIGIEG, COACH STEVENS IN HALLOWEEN SWITCH: I'm not saying they're the same person, but have you ever seen South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg and former Butler basketball coach Brad Stevens in the same room? The politician tweeted a photo Thursday — on Halloween — of him wearing a Boston Celtics hat while campaigning for the Democratic Party nomination for President in New Hampshire and said, "Game on" (WTHR-TV). A couple hours later, Tracy Stevens tweeted a photo of her husband accepting the challenge with his white dress shirt and blue tie and said, "Game on @PeteButtigieg." Stevens, who was born and raised in Zionsville and attended DePauw University, coached the Butler men's basketball team to two consecutive national championship games in 2010 and 2011. Stevens became head coach of the Boston Celtics in 2013 and has led the team to the NBA Playoffs each of the last five seasons.

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: In yesterday's weekly Howey Politics Indiana, Fox News analyst Judge Andrew Napolitano explained, "The proof is largely undisputed, except by the president himself. It consists of admissions, testimony and documents, which show that Trump sought to induce the government of Ukraine to become involved in the 2020 presidential election. Specifically, Trump held up $391 million in American military hardware and financial aid to Ukraine until Ukrainian prosecutors commenced a criminal investigation of former Vice President Joe Biden and his son, Hunter. That is a mouthful of facts to swallow in one bite, but the legal implications are straightforward and profound." Conservative legal scholar Cass Sunstein laid out a similar narrative a few weeks ago. So with the House passing an official impeachment inquiry on a virtual party line vote, the question for Senate Republicans and the American people is whether their fidelity to the once GOP pillar of the "rule of law" stands, or whether it is consumed by a cult of personality presidency which will profoundly change American politics; where foreign influence will be invited into future elections. It's the ultimate slippery slope for the republic. Will we keep it? - Brian A. Howey

Campaigns

HOGSETT RECEIVES BIG DONATIONS FROM IRSAY, DeHAAN: As Election Day nears, incumbent Indianapolis Mayor Joe Hogsett has raised nearly a six-figure sum in a seven-day time span. Campaign finance records show that Hogsett, a Democrat seeking a second term, raised $93,250 from Oct. 24 through Wednesday. Hogsett's opponent, Republican state Sen. Jim Merritt, raised $19,367 in the same time frame (Erdody, IBJ). DeHaan, who is the founder and former CEO of not-for-profit Christel House International, has regularly donated to politicians, but typically has given more to Republicans. Some Republicans she has supported in the past include Gov. Eric Holcomb, Secretary of State Connie Lawson, former Gov. Mitch Daniels and the Indiana House Republican Campaign Committee. But she also has supported some Democrats, such as state Rep. Greg Porter, who represents part of Indianapolis. Hogsett also received $10,000 from Jim Irsay, owner of the Indianapolis Colts, and $1,000 from the Indianapolis Colts during the past week. Merritt has repeatedly been out-fundraised by Hogsett, who had nearly $1 million cash on hand at the end of the last reporting period earlier this month, while Merritt had about $150,000.

TERRE HAUTE MAYORAL RACE IN HOMESTRETCH: The 2019 Terre Haute mayoral race is in the homestretch (Modesitt, Terre Haute Tribune-Star). With two independent candidates — one of whom began campaigning in early 2018 — a Republican incumbent and a Democratic nominee arising from the City Council, there have been plenty of chances to see and talk to at least three of the four candidates. Incumbent Duke Bennett, Democratic challenger Karrum Nasser and independent candidate Pat Goodwin all have hit the public events and forums, spoken at nearly every chance, advertised and addressed the mainstream media, while independent candidate Shane Meehan has been less of a public presence.

MAYOR FEWELL FACES 22-YEAR-OLD IN GREENFIELD: A 22-year-old has his name on the ballot for mayor of Greenfield (Nye, WTHR-TV). Zachary LaFavers is challenging 76-year-old incumbent Chuck Fewell in race where a generation gap and experience separate the candidates. Republican Chuck Fewell seeks his second full term as mayor of Greenfield. "I'm going to want to run the city for the next four years on the same path that we're on right now to keep jobs coming here, to keep people working, to keep this place safe and to keep it clean," said Fewell. Fewell was first selected by a caucus of precincts on December 30, 2013, to finish the term of previous mayor Richard Pasco, who died in office. Fewell ran unopposed in the general election four years ago.

REP. HATCHER TO SEEK MELTON SENATE SEAT: State Rep. Ragen Hatcher, D-Gary, will not run for re-election to her Indiana House seat in the hope of succeeding state Sen. Eddie Melton, D-Gary, in the Senate (Carden, NWI Times). The first-term lawmaker, and former Gary city councilwoman, confirmed Thursday she is running next year in Senate District 3, which has no incumbent since Melton is seeking the 2020 Democratic nomination for Indiana governor. "My decision to run for state Senate is grounded in my desire to serve the great people of Northwest Indiana," Hatcher said. The daughter of former Gary Mayor Richard Hatcher, who led the Steel City from 1968 to 1988, already has the backing of Gary's current mayor for her Senate campaign. "I am excited to support her candidacy for state Senate and know that she will distinguish herself in the tradition of Senators Earline Rogers and Eddie Melton," said Mayor Karen Freeman-Wilson.

MITCHELL NAMED TO GOP YOUNG GUNS PROGRAM: Kelly Mitchell's Republican 5th CD campaign got a national boost on Wednesday (Howey Politics Indiana). "Yesterday, the National Republican Congressional Committee announced that we met their goals and benchmarks and named us as an "On the Radar" candidate for their Young Guns Program," Mitchell said. "This isn't going to be easy. The Democrats are going to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars to try and win this seat and maintain their majority. But we cannot let that happen."

TRUMP APPROVAL STEADY IN AP POLL: President Donald Trump's approval rating is holding steady as the House presses forward with an impeachment probe that could imperil his presidency, according to a new poll from The Associated Press-NORC Center for Public Affairs Research. But there are warning signs in the survey for Trump. Overall, 42% of Americans approve of Trump's handling of the job, in line with where he has been throughout his tenure. Just 7% of Democrats have a positive view of Trump as president. Republicans are so far sticking with him, with 85% saying they approve of Trump. Though Trump remains overwhelmingly popular within his own party, some Republicans have a critical view of the president's honesty, his discipline and his respect for America's democratic norms. Overall, 61% of Americans say Trump has little or no respect for the country's democratic institutions and traditions, an issue that strikes at the heart of the impeachment inquiry focused in part on whether he sought a foreign government's help for personal political gain. Even fewer Republicans have a positive view on Trump's level of self-control, with just 39% saying "disciplined" is a very good way to describe the president, who often lashes out at critics and airs a myriad of grievances. Another 29% say it describes him moderately well, but about as many say it doesn't describe him well.

ONLY 30% BELIEVE TRUMP WILL BE IMPEACHED: Only 3 in 10 Americans say they think it's even somewhat likely that Donald Trump will be ousted from the presidency, a new HuffPost/YouGov survey finds (Huffpo). Just 14% say they think it's very likely that Trump will be impeached and removed from office, with 16% saying it's somewhat likely, 24% that it's not very likely and 32% that it's not likely at all. The survey was taken before Democrats voted Thursday to formalize the impeachment process.

TRUMP GETS BAGHDADI CREDIT IN POLL: A majority of Americans say President Trump deserves credit for the death of Islamic State leader Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi, although this past weekend's successful raid has failed to improve ratings for Trump's strength as a leader, a Washington Post-ABC News poll finds (Washington Post). The public also offers mixed reactions to Trump's withdrawal of American troops from the border between Syria and Turkey, with over 4 in 10 saying the move will weaken U.S. efforts against the Islamic State while others predict little negative impact. The Post-ABC poll conducted Sunday through Wednesday finds a 54 percent majority of Americans saying Trump should get a great deal or "some" credit for Baghdadi's death after ordering a nighttime military raid of a compound in northwest Syria on Saturday. Trump said Baghdadi fled into a dead-end tunnel where he detonated a suicide vest that killed him. No U.S. troops died or were injured in the raid.

BUTTIGIEG TWEETS ON IMPEACHMENT VOTE: South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg tweeted: "This president took an oath to protect and defend the Constitution. So did every member of Congress. This president violated that oath, betraying our country and leaving our representatives with no choice but to uphold their own. Congress must move forward with impeachment."

BUTTIGIEG GATHERS MAYORAL SUPPORT: As Pete Buttigieg works to prove the leader of a city of roughly 100,000 people is ready to assume the American presidency, he's relying on help from politicians who would know best: his fellow mayors (AP). The South Bend, Indiana, mayor has amassed a network of roughly 60 "Mayors for Pete," a collection of local leaders pushing for his underdog bid. The group includes mayors from former industrial cities, thriving metros and tiny towns of just a few thousand people. It includes the mayor of Dayton, Ohio, a Rust Belt city like the one Buttigieg leads, and the mayor of West Sacramento, California, a rising progressive leader. About a third are from swing states Democrats need to win to take the White House. But just three are from the early voting states Buttigieg needs to win to become Democrats' presidential nominee.

BUTTIGIEG TO MEET WITH MAJOR DONORS IN IOWA: Pete Buttigieg's senior campaign staff will meet with major donors for a series of strategy events in Iowa over the weekend, according to a schedule obtained by POLITICO. The events are scheduled around Buttigieg's speech at the Iowa Democratic Party's Liberty and Justice Celebration dinner this weekend in Des Moines, where senior staff will brief Buttigieg backers at a series of dinners and strategy sessions. Buttigieg's campaign held similar donor retreats ahead of the Democratic National Committee's first presidential debate in June and the Polk County Steak Fry, an Iowa political tradition, in September. Buttigieg, a fundraising juggernaut in 2019, has leaned on high-dollar donors to help fuel his campaign, bringing in more than $19 million during the third quarter — though he has also raised significant money in smaller amounts online.

BANKS OPPOSES IMPEACHMENT INQUIRY: U.S. Rep. Jim Banks tweeted (Howey Politics Indiana), "I will vote NO on today's impeachment resolution. It gives Adam Schiff near-total control of the #impeachment process and allows Democrats to continue holding secret depositions. And we still haven't heard any high crime or misdemeanor the president supposedly committed... Sham!" Banks also tweeted, "It's too bad @SpeakerPelosi & @RepAdamSchiff don't like the president. But there are plenty of Americans who proudly cast their vote for Trump, and he won in a free and fair election. Not liking someone isn't a reason to impeach and overturn election results. Sorry not sorry!" In a third tweet: "The background of the #whistleblower is relevant. The public deserves to know where these allegations are coming from and the motivations behind them. That's why secret, closed-door hearings are very unhealthy. The American people deserve to know the facts."

BROOKS OPPOSES INQUIRY: U.S. Rep. Susan W. Brooks (R-IN05) provided the following statement regarding her opposition of the impeachment inquiry authorization (Howey Politics Indiana): "As history illustrates, impeachment proceedings should only be commenced under the gravest of circumstances, which is why it has only happened three times before in our Nation's history. When impeachment proceedings are initiated in the House of Representatives, the process laid out must be fair, transparent, and afford due process to the President. Previous impeachment inquiries set this standard, and I am disappointed Speaker Pelosi chose politics over a fair process. This entirely partisan resolution allows Chairman Schiff to act as the sole arbitrator over what information is heard, viewed, or considered. Process, fairness, and learning all the facts matters, but are not being considered by Speaker Pelosi or Chairman Schiff," stated Congresswoman Susan W. Brooks. "For these reasons, I voted against this unprecedented impeachment process. Every American deserves to know their Member of Congress is equipped with all the necessary facts and information needed to cast a vote for their constituents on what is considered the gravest of constitutional questions, removal of a President of the United States from office."

BUCHSHON AGAINST INQUIRY: U.S. Rep. Larry Bucshon, M.D. (IN-08) released the following statement after voting against House Democrats' resolution (H. Res. 660) an illegitimate attempt to impeach the President without due process (Howey Politics Indiana): "House Democrats are eroding the Constitutional foundation of due process and fairness through secret, closed door hearings and the presumption of guilty until proven innocent. The complete lack of transparency and leaking of select documents by a handful of Congressional Democrats is merely an attempt to undue the results of the 2016 election and take away the votes of the millions of Americans who voted President Trump into the presidency. The American people are the real victims of this shameful process – while Washington plays politics, real work that can improve the lives of Americans on Main Street has taken a back seat. House Democrats have squandered an opportunity to advance positive change for the American people and neglected the opportunity to work on a bipartisan basis to enact into law prescription drug price reform, infrastructure improvement, funding for our troops and the modernization of trade deals."

CARSON BACKS INQUIRY: U.S. Rep. André Carson, a senior member of the House Intelligence Committee, released the statement below following passage of H.Res. 660, which provides the path forward for public hearings, the next phase of the ongoing impeachment inquiry (Howey Politics Indiana). "The vote I took today to advance the public phase of our impeachment inquiry was done with a heavy heart, but with the strongest sense of urgency and necessity. Here in "The People's House," we have a constitutional and a moral obligation to ensure we hold all public servants accountable to those they serve. We must affirm the truth that nobody, not even the President of the United States, is above the law. I am deeply saddened that we have embarked on this impeachment inquiry to hold the President accountable to the laws he swore an oath to uphold, but we have no choice but to act now. He asked a foreign country to investigate a political rival, using hundreds of millions in U.S. aid, approved by both the House and Senate, as a bargaining chip. This is a betrayal to the American people, and a serious threat to our national security. We cannot and we will not let this behavior go unchecked. On behalf of all Hoosiers, I will continue to conduct this inquiry with the utmost care. The soul of our Democracy is at stake."

VISCLOSKY VOTES FOR INQUIRY: U.S. Rep. Pete Visclosky, D-Gary, joined nearly every House Democrat on Thursday in voting to formalize the impeachment inquiry into abuse of power and other misdeeds allegedly committed by President Donald Trump (Carden, NWI Times). House Resolution 660 directs the six committees that have been investigating the Republican president — particularly in connection with claims that Trump demanded Ukraine provide dirt on a political opponent in exchange for military aid — to continue their work. "This resolution will further reinforce the abilities of the House committees to conduct their investigations in a manner that is transparent and accessible to the American public," Visclosky said. "It also ensures that the process and presidential protections are consistent with prior precedent, including the impeachment procedures for Presidents Nixon and Clinton." Visclosky said following the vote that he supported the resolution because "I believe a judicious collection of the facts is warranted." "I remain concerned about the president's unethical and inappropriate actions," Visclosky said.

McCONNELL TELLS TRUMP TO BACK OFF SENATE ATTACKS: During a face-to-face meeting last week, Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell had some blunt advice for President Donald Trump: Stop attacking Senate Republicans (CNN). His presidency could depend on it, McConnell conveyed to Trump, according to a person familiar with the meeting, which was first reported by Politico. If Trump is impeached by the House of Representatives, the Republican-controlled Senate will decide whether he should be removed from office. As the House votes Thursday on a resolution guiding the impeachment process, Trump faces new pressure to keep Republicans on his side as he weathers the political crisis. But neither he nor his team have offered their allies much in the way of strategy. And their key argument against the impeachment effort -- that it began, illegitimately, without a vote -- was undercut with the Democrats' resolution.

BANKS, WALORSKI AUTHOR FETAL REMAINS BILL: U.S. Reps. Jackie Walorski (R-Ind.) and Jim Banks (R-Ind.) today introduced legislation to ensure the remains of aborted children are always treated with dignity (Howey Politics Indiana). Following the discovery of more than 2,200 human fetal remains on the property of longtime Indiana abortionist Ulrich Klopfer, the Dignity for Aborted Children Act (H.R. 4934) would hold abortion providers accountable if they fail to provide for the proper burial or cremation of aborted fetal remains (Howey Politics Indiana). "Every life is precious, and every person deserves to be treated with dignity and respect," Congresswoman Walorski said. "The sickening discovery of thousands of human fetal remains in Ulrich Klopfer's garage was a tragic reminder of the terrible cost of abortion. "I'm proud that Indiana is leading the way to federally mandate respectful treatment of abortion victims," said Congressman Banks. "Dr. Klopfer's crimes were unspeakably horrific and they affected me on a very deep and personal level. I hope that his crimes have also awakened my Congressional colleagues to the importance of preserving the dignity of all human life -- including aborted children. The legislation introduced by Rep. Walorski and I aims to achieve this in the most simple and common-sense manner."

FFA TO HONOR YOUNG, BUT SCHEDULE CANCELLED: U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R-Ind.) will receive an Honorary American degree from the National FFA Organization for introducing the National FFA Organization's Federal Charter Amendments Act, which was signed into law by President Trump last February today (Howey Politics Indiana). Young will not attend, citing travel delays in a statement today. His roundtable discussion with Indiana Farm Bureau members at Lankford Farms in Martinsville has also been cancelled.

GRAHAM TO GIVE JUDICIARY CHAIR BACK TO GRASSLEY: Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.) plans to hand the chairmanship of the Senate Judiciary Committee back to Sen. Chuck Grassley (R-Iowa.) in the next Congress (Politico). Graham took over the panel this year from Grassley, who left to chair the Senate Finance Committee. In an interview Thursday, Graham said Grassley asked to come back after his tenure on the Senate Finance Committee. Graham responded "absolutely." "Love Chuck Grassley. That's the way the Senate works," Graham said. "He took the Finance Committee so I could be chairman, and he'll come back and fill out his time, and I'll come back, and somebody else will come along."

REP. HILL GIVES FINAL SPEECH BEFORE RESIGNING: In her final speech from the House floor on Thursday, Rep. Katie Hill apologized for her mistakes but also condemned the "double standard" and "misogynistic culture" that she said forced her to resign (Washington Post). The 32-year-old California congresswoman, who had been seen as a rising star in the Democratic Party, announced Sunday that she was stepping down amid an ethics inquiry into allegations that she had an improper relationship with a staffer. The claims surfaced on conservative websites, which also published nude photos of Hill and details of her sex life with her estranged husband. Hill said Thursday that she had decided to leave Congress because she no longer wanted to distract from the impeachment inquiry or be used as a "bargaining chip" in the "dirtiest gutter politics that I've ever seen." She added that she had received thousands of threatening emails, calls and texts that left her fearing for her life.

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB NAMES BEDEL TO HEAD NEW AGENCY - Gov. Eric J. Holcomb and Lt. Gov. Suzanne Crouch announced today that Elaine Bedel will serve as secretary and CEO of the newly established Indiana Destination Development Corporation (IDDC) (Howey Politics Indiana). Bedel currently serves as president of the Indiana Economic Development Corporation (IEDC), the state's lead economic development agency. "Elaine will excel as Indiana's first chief destination officer to bring our public and private sectors together to best tell Indiana's story," Gov. Holcomb said. "In her new role, Elaine will work collaboratively to develop marketing strategies that will enhance economic development, attract new talent to our workforce and enhance our state's profile as a great destination for visitors." Bedel will remain a member of the Governor's cabinet and begin reporting to Lt. Gov. Crouch on Nov. 11 to initiate planning for the transition. Secretary of Commerce Jim Schellinger will assume the responsibilities of the role of president of the IEDC. Weisensteiner will continue her leadership of the Office of Tourism Development and will transfer to the IDDC. She will report directly to Bedel and continue her efforts to improve Indiana's tourism efforts.

GOVERNOR: CROUCH STATEMENT ON BEDEL: "Elaine brings a remarkable breadth of experience from both the public and private sectors, and will be a tremendous asset to our organization, industry partners, and the visitors we serve every day," said Lt. Gov. Crouch (Howey Politics Indiana). "I am confident that her leadership, in combination with the experience and vast industry knowledge of our current Office of Tourism Director, Misty Weisensteiner, will transform how we tell Indiana's story." By statute, the Governor appoints a director of the corporation, a role that Bedel will fill. The corporation will be governed by a seven-member board composed of the governor, who will appoint the Lt. Governor as his designee, the president of the IEDC or its designee, and five members appointed by the governor from the private sector tourism industry.

INDOT: MORE INDY AREA WEEKEND CONSTRUCTION - The Indiana Department of Transportation will be out in multiple work zone this weekend across Marion County. Contractors will be working to repair winter damage by extending the life of pavement and fixing bridge joints (Howey Politics Indiana). INDOT would like to remind drivers to slow down in work zones, especially with the rain and weather forecast for this weekend. This construction work is weather dependent. Please watch for updates on Twitter (@INDOTEast) and Facebook (INDOT East Central).

NATIONAL GUARD: GENERAL DISCUSS CYBER UNIT - Indiana's Adjutant General says talent will be key for the state's new cyber battalion. Governor Eric Holcomb last week announced the nation's fifth National Guard cyber battalion will be located in the Hoosier state, which Brigadier General Dale Lyles says highlights the importance of Indiana and the Indiana National Guard to national security. He says it also demonstrates that Indiana has the internal resources to man, train and equip what will be known as the 127th Cyber Protection Battalion (Brown, Inside Indiana Business). "Some of the criteria that was used by the Secretary of the Army and the Army National Guard for stationing it here was the secure containerized information facilities that we have that allows us to do top secret classified information within that space," said Lyles. "Indiana National Guard, probably five years ago, saw that this was an emerging requirement and so we contributed heavily into our military construction to build that space in Indiana."

HEALTH: NUMBER OF UNINSURED KIDS INCREASES - A new report finds the number of children without health insurance in Indiana has increased. This is the second year the state has followed this national trend (Indiana Public Media). The percentage of uninsured children in Indiana went up from 5.9 percent in 2016 to 6.6 percent in 2018. Georgetown University Center for Children and Families executive director Joan Alker, says Indiana is one of 13 states with increases this significant. "These findings should be a clear call to action among our political leaders if they care about children's health," says Alker. Reasons for the increase may include changes in the Affordable Care Act and delays in funding for children's health insurance programs. Covering Kids and Families of Indiana's director of policy, Mark Fairchild says this can create communication challenges.

EDUCATION: NOTRE DAME DELAYS REMOVING COLUMBUS MURALS - The University of Notre Dame is delaying its plan to cover up 19th century murals depicting Christopher Columbus in America that have long been criticized for their stereotypical images of Native Americans and blacks (AP). The Catholic university based in South Bend, Indiana, announced in January that it would conceal the offending artwork. The school's president, the Rev. John I. Jenkins, said last month that a new exhibit will explore Notre Dame's early history, including images of the Columbus murals and information about their historical importance. School spokesman Dennis Brown told the South Bend Tribune this week that Notre Dame won't cover the 1880s paintings until the museum is completed in 2022.

AGRICULTURE: HARVEST YIELDS HIGHLY VARIABLE - As the harvest moves slowly ahead and now has snow to deal with in some areas, yield reports are highly variable. We have been hearing across the corn belt that yields are better than expected but highly variable. NW Indiana Pioneer agronomist Ryan Piel told HAT that is also the story in his area (Truitt, Hoosier Ag Today). "Corn yields are better than had been expected, although lower than 2018. But they are really all over the place. You can go from 30bpa to 300bpa in the same row." Piel confirms that, as we have heard in other areas, soybean yields are much better than expected. "I am really amazed at the soybean yields. Again, the results are highly variable, but I have had some customers say they had their best crop this year."

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP TWEETS HE'S NO LONGER A NEW YORKER - @realDonaldTrump: "1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, the White House, is the place I have come to love and will stay for, hopefully, another 5 years as we MAKE AMERICA GREAT AGAIN, but my family and I will be making Palm Beach, Florida, our Permanent Residence. I cherish New York, and the people of ... New York, and always will, but unfortunately, despite the fact that I pay millions of dollars in city, state and local taxes each year, I have been treated very badly by the political leaders of both the city and state. Few have been treated worse. I hated having to make ... this decision, but in the end it will be best for all concerned. As President, I will always be there to help New York and the great people of New York. It will always have a special place in my heart!"

WHITE HOUSE: WOLF COULD BE NEW DHS SECRETARY - The White House is leaning toward appointing Chad Wolf as the next acting secretary of the Department of Homeland Security and shifting focus for its nominee for the permanent position to Mark Morgan, acting commissioner of U.S. Customs and Border Protection, rather than Ken Cuccinelli, acting head of U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services, according to people familiar with the matter (Wall Street Journal).

WHITE HOUSE: MORRISON SAYS NOTHING ILLEGAL OCCURRED WITH CALL - Tim Morrison, a top White House Russia expert, testified behind closed doors that he doesn't believe anything illegal was discussed during President Trump's July phone call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky, according to a copy of his prepared remarks (The Hill). "I want to be clear, I was not concerned that anything illegal was discussed," Morrison said in the remarks.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SCHEDULE - President Trump will leave the White House en route to Tupelo, Miss., at 4:30 p.m. He will deliver remarks at a campaign rally at 7 p.m. Central time. Afterward, Trump will return to Washington.

EPA: COAL TOXIN REGS TO BE ROLLED BACK - The Trump administration is expected to roll back an Obama-era regulation meant to limit the leaching of heavy metals like arsenic, lead and mercury into water supplies from the ash of coal-fired power plants, according to two people familiar with the plans (New York Times). With a series of new rules expected in the coming days, the Environmental Protection Agency will move to weaken the 2015 regulation that would have strengthened inspection and monitoring at coal plants, lowered acceptable levels of toxic effluent and required plants to install new technology to protect water supplies from contaminated coal ash.

ECONOMY: ONLY 40% BACK TIME CHANGE - Most people across the country will see their clocks roll back an hour this weekend as nearly eight months of daylight saving time come to an end. It is part of a twice-a-year ritual that most want to stop (AP). Seven in 10 Americans prefer not to switch back and forth to mark daylight saving time, a new poll shows. But there's no agreement on which time clocks ought to follow. According to the new poll by The Associated Press-NORC Center for Public Affairs Research, 4 in 10 Americans would like to see their clocks stay on standard time year-round, while about 3 in 10 prefer to stay on daylight saving time. About another 3 in 10 prefer what is the status quo in most of the United States, switching back and forth between daylight saving time in the summer and standard time in the winter.

ILLINOIS: CHICAGO TEACHER STRIKE ENDS - Classes will resume Friday for 300,000 students in the nation's third-largest school district, ending a bitter strike that lasted 11 school days, Mayor Lori Lightfoot announced on Twitter (Wall Street Journal). On Wednesday evening, union delegates agreed to the tentative, five-year contract that met their demands for things like smaller classes and more nurses and other support staff in schools. But the two sides continued to squabble earlier Thursday over a union demand that all 11 days missed during the strike be made up at the end of the year. "We were given a take-it-or-leave-it demand," Ms. Lightfoot said at a news conference Thursday. "Without a spirit of compromise, none of this works."

EVANSVILLE: POLICE RELEASE BODY CAM VIDEO OF SHOOTING - Evansville Police have released the name of the officer involved in shooting earlier this week (WFIE-TV). The Evansville Police say he is Officer Mario Reid. They say he joined the EPD In January of 2014 and is assigned to motor patrol, 2nd shift, East Sector. Wednesday, police released the body cam footage.

NOBLESVILLE: JENSEN NAMES SENIOR STAFF - Mayor-elect Chris Jensen announced his administration's Senior Staff Team: Deputy Mayor Matt Light, Director of Public Safety Chad Knecht, and Director of Community and Economic Development Sarah Reed (Howey Politics Indiana). "This team is ready to lead Noblesville on day one," Mayor-elect Chris Jensen said. "Bringing years of management experience and a proven record of results to Noblesville, I'm proud these leaders of their respective fields are joining me to serve our city and residents." Jensen selected Matt Light, currently Chief of Staff at Indiana's State Board of Accounts, to serve as Deputy Mayor. Il three positions on the senior staff team will report directly to the Mayor's office.

NASHVILLE: AUCTION PRODUCES 12 BIDS ON DOWNTOWN PROPERTIES - Twelve downtown Nashville properties were auction on Wednesday (Indiana Public Media). The properties once belonged to Andy Rogers, who died last year. Rogers was credited with preserving and enhancing Nashville's arts community. Offers were made on 4 of the 16 properties before the auction, the Rogers estate accepted the bids on the other 12. Buyers have to adhere to new restrictions the town council approved last week. Among other things the rules make it hard to tear down buildings older than 50 years. Auctioneer Jimmie Dean Coffey says potential buyers are ok with the ordinance. "The town board, they are just trying to protect Nashville, as Nashville is, and so far all the buyers, bidders and interested parties I've spoken with, that's the way they want to keep it as well," says Coffey. Names of the buyers, and the amount they paid won't be disclosed until next month. Buyers of these new properties have to honor tenant leases that were in effect under the Rogers Estate.

NASHVILLE: SETTLEMENT IN HARD TRUTH WATER DISPUTE - The Brown County Water Utility and the Town of Nashville have reached a settlement in the dispute over who has claim to sell water to Hard Truth Hills Restaurant and Distillery (Bouthier, Indiana Public Media). The settlement would end a two-year legal fight. The new agreement states Hard Truth Hills is a customer of Brown County Water Utility, but the revenue will be split evenly between Nashville and the county utility. Nashville is a wholesale customer of Brown County Water Utility. Nashville Town Council President Jane Gore says Nashville water and Brown County representatives are forming a study group to prevent further legal disputes. "That way, we can try to work out some issues before we have to hire the attorneys," she says.

WEST LAFAYETTE: WABASH TWP HIRES 2 FIREFIGHTERS - Wabash Township is moving forward with a property tax increase for its 2020 budget, but not without controversy (WLFI-TV). Many people there feel there's a lack of transparency and need. According to the 2020 budget, there is an emergency loan payment of $440,000 set aside for the fire department. It will allow the township to hire two full-time firefighters with benefits. Wabash Fire currently has two other full-time firefighters and more than 30 volunteers.

BLOOMINGTON: POLICE SEEK PARKING METER VANDAL - Bloomington police say the investigation into this month's downtown parking meter vandalism is still active (Atkinson, Indiana Public Media). Police Capt. Ryan Pedigo says all of the meters were fixed within 36 hours after they were damaged. Pedigo says police are still working with businesses in the downtown area to review surveillance footage from the night of Oct. 22. The cost to repair the meters totaled nearly $5,000.

MICHIGAN CITY: COURTHOUSE COSTS RISE $2M - Despite projected costs spiking more than $2 million, the La Porte County Council is allowing plans for the proposed Michigan City Courthouse expansion to proceed (Yokum, Michigan City News-Dispatch). During its meeting Monday, the council unanimously approved final design plans for the expansion to the 1909 structure, which construction managers Tonn and Blank now forecast will cost $24.63 million to build. With the county's thumbs-up, the firm can put the project out for bid. The projected price tag is nearly a 10 percent jump from the $22.49 million estimate the Michigan City company provided the county in the spring, when leaders initially signed off on the project.

OXFORD: WOMAN KILLED BY PYTHON - Indiana State Police are investigating a woman's death after she was found with a python around her neck. Benton County sheriff's deputies responded to 609 North Dan Patch Drive shortly before 9 p.m. Wednesday on a report of an unresponsive woman (WTHR-TV). Deputies arrived to find a Laura Hurst, 36, Battle Ground, on the floor with an 8-foot python wrapped around her neck. Medics pronounced the woman dead. Hurst absolutely loved snakes. She had more than 20 of them. But state police say a visit to check on them turned deadly Wednesday night. "She got this other snake out, I do not believe belonged to her, but she got the snake out and what happened after that we are still trying to figure out," said Sgt. Kim Riley, a public information officer. It happened in a home owned by Benton County Sheriff Don Munson, a house used specifically to house more than 140 snakes. It was Munson who found Hurst dead.

JOHNSON COUNTY: 33 ARRESTED IN DRUG SWEEP - More than two dozen people were arrested Thursday in connection with a drug sweep in Johnson County (WRTV). Dubbed "Operation Hocus Pocus," warrants were issued for 33 people and 22 had been arrested as of Thursday afternoon. The majority of felony charges are for dealing methamphetamine, while there are also eight charges for dealing heroin, Johnson County Prosecutor Joe Villanueva said. "Methamphetamine is still king here in Johnson County. All these cases, the individuals are charged with dealing in the substance," Villanueva said. "This is all the hard stuff, and this is the stuff that really hurts the people in our community and we want to do all we can to get it off the street."

INDIANAPOLIS—Gov. Eric Holcomb appointed the first head of the newly established Indiana Destination Development Corporation (IDDC) that will replace the Department of Tourism Development.

Elaine Bedel will serve as secretary and CEO of the new corporation alongside Lt. Gov. Suzanne Crouch, who was also appointed by Holcomb to a seven-member board along with five members of the private sector tourism industry, and the president of the Indiana Economic Development Corporation (IEDC) or its designee.

"Elaine will excel as Indiana's first chief destination officer to bring our public and private sectors together to best tell Indiana's story," Holcomb said. "In her new role, Elaine will work collaboratively to develop marketing strategies that will enhance economic development, attract new talent to our workforce and enhance our state's profile as a great destination for visitors."

Bedel currently serves as president of IEDC and will take over the position the new position starting next July 1, with the goal of elevating Indiana's position as place to live and visit.

Indiana budgeted a little more than $4 million a year on the tourism department plus about $970,000 for marketing when the legislation was passed in the 2019 session of the General Assembly.

"Elaine brings a remarkable breadth of experience from both the public and private sectors, and will be a tremendous asset to our organization, industry partners, and the visitors we serve every day," Crouch said.

The corporation will operate as a joint public-private agency and will be able to raise its own funds, which will reduce the need of state funding and increase the competition aspect.

"Through her work with the Indiana Economic Development Corporation, Elaine Bedel has a passion for putting Indiana on the map," said Rep. Mike Karickhoff, R-Kokomo, author of the legislation creating the IDDC, in a press release. "There is no doubt she will bring her wealth of knowledge and expertise to this new position to help push boost tourism and our economy."

Prior to serving as president of IEDC, Bedel earned her bachelor's degree from Hanover College, her MBA from Butler University, authored a personal finance book, became a nationally recognized speaker, and served as president, chief executive officer and chief compliance officer of Bedel Financial Consulting Inc., which she founded in 1989.

House Speaker Brian Bosma, R-Indianapolis, praised her appointment in a press release, saying she will be an excellent fit at the IDDC.

"This new agency will spark synergies between the public and private sectors to keep Indiana in the spotlight," Bosma said, "and I look forward to seeing the results of their collaboration."

Indiana Economic Development Corporation President Elaine Bedel is switching roles to lead the state's newly created, quasi-governmental tourism agency.

Gov. Eric Holcomb announced Thursday morning that Bedel would serve as secretary and CEO of the Indiana Destination Development Corporation.

"Elaine will excel as Indiana's first chief destination officer to bring our public and private sectors together to best tell Indiana's story," Holcomb said in a prepared statement. "In her new role, Elaine will work collaboratively to develop marketing strategies that will enhance economic development, attract new talent to our workforce and enhance our state's profile as a great destination for visitors."

The corporation will be governed by a seven-member board consisting of Crouch, the president of the IEDC or its designee and five members from the tourism industry who will be appointed by Holcomb.

Bedel will leave her role at the IEDC on Nov. 11 to begin planning for the new agency.

Indiana suspends work requirement for Medicaid until lawsuit is resolved

Indiana is suspending a requirement that tens of thousands of Medicaid recipients find a job, volunteer, get career training or go to school as a condition for receiving medical benefits.

The move, announced Thursday, comes a month after two groups filed suit in federal court, saying the requirement could potentially jettison thousands of people from medical coverage.

The state Family and Social Services Administration said it will shelve the requirement to allow time for the lawsuit to be resolved.

Starting in July, Indiana began requiring people to work, volunteer or participate in other qualifying activities as a condition for receiving medical benefits under the Healthy Indiana Plan, the state's biggest Medicaid program, which covers more than 400,000 low-income people.

The requirements were being phased in over a full year, beginning with five hours of work a week and building up to 20 hours by July 2020. Recipients have been required to file monthly reports.

The program, called "Gateway to Work," contains numerous exemptions, including for people over 60, caregivers of dependent children, incapacitated people, and those in treatment for substance abuse. State officials have estimated that 85,000 people on the program would have to work, volunteer or go to school.

"We remain committed to operating the Gateway to Work program and to continuing to build on the early successes of the program, through which HIP members are reporting successful engagements in their workplaces, schools and communities," Indiana Medicaid Director Allison Taylor said.

FSSA said it will continue to encourage HIP members to report their activities to the state or their health plan so they can be connected to resources such as the state's Next Level Jobs program, Ivy Tech, WorkOne and local job-training and advancement programs.

Indiana Legal Services and the National Health Law program filed suit in September, saying the new requirements could unfairly stop thousands of people from getting medical coverage.

Named as defendants were the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services and the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services. The suit was filed in U.S. District Court in Washington, D.C.

The suit was the fourth federal lawsuit challenging a Medicaid waiver project with a work requirement approved by the federal government. Rulings have blocked work requirements in Arkansas, Kentucky and New Hampshire.

Ballot question merits solid 'yes' from voters

The citizens of Vigo County have found themselves consumed by weighty public policy issues for months. When building a new jail, how big should it be and where should it be located? With the school corporation facing financial challenges, should an operational property tax increase be adopted to help meet schools' pressing needs?

For the city of Terre Haute, a big election looms in coming days. Should voters reelect their three-term mayor to a fourth term, or is it time for a change, for fresh blood in the mayor's office?

The debate about these issues has been robust and enlightening. These are hard questions without easy answers.

But there is another question to be answered as well. Perhaps it's the easiest one of all. It's the one dealing with voter approval of a casino in Vigo County. While there are those who legitimately question the value of such a facility or whether a sanctioned house of gambling is the right moral direction the county should take, the downside of a casino here is far outweighed by the potential upside.

As directed by the state legislature, the question on Tuesday's ballot simply asks voters if they approve of a casino being located in Vigo County. A referendum on the issue was the right thing to do, and we commend lawmakers for requiring voter approval before a gaming license can be issued here.

We encourage voters to embrace the opportunity to vote on the issue. What's more, we endorse the proposal for a Vigo County casino and urge voters to approve the referendum.

The gambling industry has a strong foothold in Indiana going back decades. Its evolution has produced several expansions, and the extension of casino gambling into Vigo County reflects that. Many communities — Gary, Michigan City, Evansville, Anderson and French Lick, to name a few — have been home to various forms of gaming through the years. With the possible exception of French Lick, few of them would assert that the presence of a casino or other gaming establishments have been their economic savior.

That said, you don't see economic development leaders in those communities willing to give them up.

Casinos are a tourism draw for the communities in which they are located. They provide entertainment options for county residents and also serve as destinations for people seeking entertainment from outside the area. Tourism is part of what fuels a local economy, and a casino would definitely have an impact on tourism development and act as a enticement for visitors.

Development of a casino would also be an economic development tool. Construction jobs would be first to emerge, followed by the hospitality workforce that would be created to operate the facility. There is no reliable estimate on the number of jobs to be created, and best-case scenarios are probably unrealistic. Still, jobs will be created, and there will be an economic benefit to that.

Finally, the state will collect tax money from casino revenues, and some of those revenues will be recirculated to various government entities for use in developing quality-of-life projects to serve the region. No one knows how much money that will be, but there will undoubtedly be a profound impact.

Casino gambling in Terre Haute is unlikely to produce the economic windfall claimed in some promotional materials. Competition for gambling dollars is intense and will increase. But we expect positive gains, and those are worth the consideration when judging this issue.

The campaign to bring a casino here has been a constructive effort. A casino's benefits are clear and justifiable. For those reasons, we view approval of the referendum to be in the community's best interests.

INDIANA LEGISLATIVE INSIGHT

www.hannah-in.com

Mega-bite for State: CIO to depart

Long-serving CIO Neely Jonesing to leave at critical IT juncture

Indiana's state Chief Information Officer Dewand Neely sat down for a video interview with StateScoop in which he focused on issues related to recruitment of key information technology personnel to state government at a critical time when cybersecurity and data privacy concerns prevail and private sector salaries, job perquisites and working environments, and flexibility are perceived to be superior to those offered by the public sector.

What we didn't know at the time was that the State of Indiana would soon be in the market to replace Neely himself.

After some four years as CIO (in which the average state CIO tenure nationally is just 30 months), one of the nation's dozen or so longest-serving CIOs told the Governor's Cabinet Monday that he will be leaving state government November 22 to become chief operations director for Eleven Fifty Academy, the number two post for the Indianapolis nonprofit code academy and coding bootcamp founded by tech pioneer Scott Jones and dedicated to bridging the tech talent gap in Indiana.

No decision has been made yet on what the process will be for replacing Neely, whom we described a few years ago as a "rock star" among his fellow state CIOs who had focused his tenure on cybersecurity, interagency data-sharing, and digital government. A three-week timeframe for a national search may simply be impractical – there were almost 20 state CIO vacancies to date this year alone – and there is enough confidence in internal talent and support that you will probably see the new CIO elevated from within (or at least expect an internal interim CIO).

Gubernatorial Chief of Staff Earl Goode is well aware of how valuable Neely has been to the state, not having to fret about IT issues that have beset some other states and key local units of Indiana government. Goode has more than a passing interest in and knowledge of the sector; at the time of his retirement from the private sector in 2000, he was the president of GTE Information Services, and will likely be an active participant in the process for selecting Neely's replacement, understanding the continuing challenges in the field.

Ironically, Neely had just told StateScoop that while the Indiana Office of Technology's older employees aren't retiring en masse yet, he was readying several strategies to be prepared for when they do. Beyond the obvious replacement challenges we outlined above, StateScoop notes that states are discovering that younger employees who replace retiring employees often lack the skills to manage legacy technologies that states must keep operational – such as mainframes.

While Neely says this "silver tsunami" hasn't become a problem yet in Indiana, IOT was vigilant in "trying to find that next generation and still get them prepped," and is taking several different workforce-related approaches. "We realize that some folks aren't interested in signing up for a 20-year career anymore, and so being able to offer more flexible retirement packages, not necessarily trying to sell the lifetime pension anymore, making it more flexible for folks that are looking to move in and out [are all strategies we use]."

Neely added that IOT is "creating more short-term advancement opportunities for employees and targeting new pools of potential talent. '[It's] being more strategic for faster opportunities to be promoted and to get access to new things, leveraging more of our openings from a college standpoint,' he says. '[We're] offering more fellowships and things of that sort to get people in and exposed in hopes they may take another look [when they] get out of college.'"

Sen. Young's tough 2020 task

Once easy NRSC job now a fraught role

When U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) assumed control of the National Republican Senatorial Committee, it looked like an easy way for him to gain access to leadership ranks, as the Republican path to a continued Senate majority did not appear to be seriously in danger. But fast forward a year from his November 2018 NRSC selection, and the Beltway consensus is that he faces a heavy lift in retaining a majority . . . but the reward could be substantial if he manages to walk the fine line that potentially involves crazy unpredictable primaries (see Alabama); saving moderate voices who are caucus anathemas (see Maine); record Democratic challenger fundraising (see Arizona); and weaker-than-expected GOP incumbents (see Iowa).

If Republicans do not retain the White House, Democrats only need a net three seats to claim the majority.

Axios sees the Senate majority "in serious jeopardy" with Dems "raising more money, and polling better," and "All of this is unfolding while the economy still looks strong, and before public impeachment proceedings." National Journal finds "the pathway for a narrow Democratic takeover of the upper chamber is looking clearer than ever."

Young also risks running afoul of colleagues and the President in the Alabama Senate race.

IN Politics

Federal Office Races . . .

- We continue to hear rumblings in CD 05 that outside groups – including the Club for Growth (run by former U.S. Rep. David McIntosh (R), who lost the 2012 primary here to outgoing U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R)) and the Freedom Caucus – are looking to play in this race, but their motives and priorities here may not be pure on the micro level. These entities have recently backed off on Republican primary races, particularly in heavily GOP districts where the outcome may be muddy and the candidates largely in line with their philosophical goals, but that seems to be changing. In CD 05 now, some of the more “moderate” Republican hopefuls have opted against a run and those who might have been perceived as more moderate have largely sought to establish themselves further to the right on the spectrum or “Trumpier than thou” than initially anticipated (students of the 2018 U.S. Senate primary), bringing the field more in line with CFG and Freedom Caucus priorities than we might have expected from the initial broad array of potential candidates.

□ So will these outside groups get involved because they want to select the candidate best able to beat the Democratic nominee (which conventional wisdom sees as the top fundraiser in the entire field, former Rep. Christina Hale (D), who has run statewide)? That’s not quite what we’re hearing on the ground. What we’re picking up is that these groups simply want House members that they can count on to vote against House Republican Leader Kevin McCarthy (R-CA), whom they view as too moderate. So watch not only for outside spending here in the form of third-party television and direct mail, but also potentially in direct contributions – which could be aimed at diverting votes from a particular less-preferred candidate just as much as boosting a given “favored” hopeful. And you might also watch to see if Team McCarthy figures out what’s up here and directs dollars into what would be a safe Republican seat in any other year . . .

- Former Rep. Christina Hale (D), a CD 05 open-seat candidate, gains the endorsement of EMILY’s List, which her campaign bills as “the nation’s largest resource for women in politics.” Her announcement makes no reference to the fact that Emily’s List is a political action committee (choosing instead to focus on the synergy she expects from its “grassroots power”), nor the PAC’s raison d’être, seeking to help elect pro-choice Democratic female candidates to office . . . big news from D.C.: the National Republican Congressional Committee names State Treasurer Kelly Mitchell (R) as an “On the Radar” candidate for the NRCC Young Guns Program. While she is among a cadre of 24 candidates named in the program’s third round, this effectively bestows the national GOP congressional leadership imprimatur upon her, an honorific that should begin the flow of political action committee money as the usual suspects learn that it is “safe” to contribute to her campaign (but it may also further incentivize the big-buck anti-leadership forces within the party to back a different standardbearer).

- U.S. Rep. Greg Pence (R) uses his CD 06 Greg Pence for Congress Committee to send out an email seeking “Hoosiers to chip in and fight back against radical House Democrats who are impeaching President Trump based on fake allegations.” While he writes that “my team has established the October End of Month Impeachment Defense Fund” (emphasis in original), the contributions are directed to Greg Pence Victory, a joint fundraising committee authorized by and to benefit

Greg Pence for Congress, his Mustang PAC leadership political action committee, the Great America Committee run by Vice President Mike Pence (R), and the National Republican Congressional Committee.

□ Lest you think the impeachment fund moniker was a throwaway or slip, he followed it up the next day with a similar email mentioning the need to stock the impeachment fund. The message over his imprimatur claims that “This is the most pivotal turning point for conservative values since President Trump took office. Led by Nancy Pelosi, House Democrats are officially attempting to impeach our duly elected president [and] to silence conservatives and overturn the results of the 2016 election.” He asks “Hoosiers to say NO to Pelosi and her socialist friends in Congress NOW is when we must make our stand against unhinged Democrats. I will ALWAYS be with with (sic) President Trump and AGAINST those on the left who hate him and will stop at nothing to remove him from office outside of the electoral process.”

□ Rep. Pence was front-row, center for the House leadership statements delivered live on national television immediately after the House impeachment inquiry/procedure vote. A few minutes later, he sent out a campaign email saying “it’s Halloween, and the scariest thing on my mind is unhinged Democrats trying to overturn the results of the 2016 election. They’re determined to impeach President Trump before he wins re-election, and it’s up to us in the conservative grassroots to stop Nancy Pelosi and her socialist friends in the House from impeaching President Trump”

IN Legislative Races . . .

- We recently told you that the candidates were already lining up to replace Sen. Eddie Melton (D), who has announced his gubernatorial candidacy and thus cannot “run safe” for reelection to his Senate seat next year. Sen. Melton was elected after the long-planned retirement of Earline Rogers (D), who did not want to leave office until she was confident that a solid successor was available and capable of winning the primary. Sen. Rogers first won her seat in a caucus selection after moving from the House to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Sen. Carolyn Mosby (D), who herself had moved from the House to the Senate a decade earlier in a caucus selection to complete the Senate term of Katie Hall (D), who resigned to take a seat in Congress (under Indiana’s election laws at the time, Hall was chosen by then-Gary mayor Richard Hatcher (D), then the CD 01 Democratic Party chair, to fill the Democratic ballot vacancy in both a special election and the regular 1982 general election after the death of then-U.S. Rep. Adam Benjamin (D), whom she also succeeded in the state senate), so this seat has a history of high-profile occupants leaving early.

□ The first potential candidate at the door in the safe Democratic seat was Darnail Lyles (D), a Gary attorney with East Chicago offices who is part of the inner circle of incoming Gary mayor Jerome Prince (D) . . . and whom local gossip says may be trying to distance himself now from the mayor-elect. Dan Carden takes a close look at the coming local political shake-up and falling dominoes in the Times of Northwest Indiana, and he reports Thursday that freshman Rep. Ragen Hatcher (D) has opted out of a reelection bid and will instead seek Melton’s seat – with the blessing of outgoing Mayor Karen Freeman-Wilson (D). The Hatcher news is intriguing, because Rep. Hatcher, a former Gary Common Council member and daughter of Gary’s first black mayor, has always been rumored to be aiming toward a mayoral run of her own.

□ But consider the circumstances: Rep. Hatcher has to run for re-election next year anyway (the mayor's office will not be up for election again until 2023, by which two legislative election cycles will have been run), so it makes sense for her to run for the Senate – a four-year-term in a seat safe for Democrats – instead of seeking reelection to the House in 2020 and then having to run again in 2022 before a potential 2023 mayoral bid. Whether she could emerge on top in a Democratic primary next May depends upon local political vagaries, but if she wins that seat, she's not likely to find herself challenged by 2021 redistricting and could use the time to rebuild local fences – which, we understand, she's been doing since her election to the House, a contrast to her previous council service and work with the Gary Community School Corporation. Sen. Rogers played king maker in leaving the Senate and effectively anointing her successor, but we're not sure whether she'd feel comfortable with a Hatcher candidacy – or if she maintains the local political clout she wielded four years ago as she prepares to turn 85 years old next month. Hatcher and Rogers faced off in a 2011 Gary mayoral primary in which both were unsuccessful, and then-Sen. Rogers – who serve on the council when Richard Hatcher was mayor – was not hesitant to serve up an unflattering personal portrait of the younger Hatcher, who was then just 32 years old.

□ Carden cautions that “Multiple additional candidates also are expected to run in Melton's Senate District 3 that contains portions of Gary, Lake Station, New Chicago, Hobart, Merrillville and Crown Point.”

□ A Hatcher Senate run also could clear the way for Calumet Township Board President Darren Washington (D) to seek the Hatcher House seat. He still has a active campaign committee from his 2016 primary loss to Melton (he collected 31% of the vote in a four-way contest, which followed a 2012 primary challenge to Sen. Rogers in which he posted 22% in a three-way race). Washington, a licensed and ordained minister, currently serves as a chaplain for the Indiana State Police, Lake County Sheriff's Department, and the Lake County Coroner's Office. He was a rising star in the Bayh Administration where he worked for the Department of Child Services and then became executive director of the Indiana Commission on the Social Status of Black Males during the first O'Bannon Administration. He also served as president of the Gary Community School Corporation Board of School Trustees, and was appointed as a member of the Indiana Education Roundtable. He was also director of external affairs for AT&T in Northwest Indiana and ran unsuccessfully for some other local offices . . . but it's not uncommon for Gary candidates to bounce back from losses; outgoing Mayor Freeman-Wilson lost a statewide race and two mayoral primaries before winning in 2011, and Rogers, Ragen Hatcher, and Washington each won their most recent general election races (in Gary, you don't seem to earn your political chops until you've lost a primary race for mayor of Gary).

● Sen. Mark Stoops (D) will not seek reelection in 2020, so now 20% of the Senate Democratic Caucus opts not to return. Look for Indiana Democratic Party Chair John Zody to run, but to run into flak for not being liberal enough for SD 40.

IN Mayoral Races . . .

● The Governor joins Republican mayoral candidates in 10 cities across Indiana in the final days prior to the municipal election, scheduling stops for candidates in Lawrence, Muncie, Fort Wayne, Elkhart, Valparaiso, Kokomo, Terre Haute, Washington, Jeffersonville, and New Albany. Six are currently in GOP hands, three incumbents are not seeking reelection.

□ Uh, did you notice Indianapolis wasn't on the itinerary?

● While no one will put any money down on Sen. Jim Merritt (R) being elected mayor of Indianapolis this week (and some who invested are not pleased at the amount of misspent campaign overhead, and to whom and how it was directed), there are two story lines to watch.

□ Most important is how much of the African American community turns out to vote. Mayor Joe Hogsett (D) has not engendered much love there, and a late-to-the-table Hogsett Indianapolis Black Agenda was perceived more as pandering and checking off a box than a substantive commitment. When you add in the African American elected-official antipathy toward former Rep. Christina Hale (D) and those who have rushed to support her in CD 05 – instead of allowing the way to be cleared for another shot by 2018 nominee Dee Thornton (D), whom they believed earned the chance in a better year – this may be problematic for Hoosier Democrats in 2020 if their gubernatorial nominee is not named Melton or Myers.

□ You should also not overlook the residual discontent among some regular Democrats – white and black – over what they saw as hizzoner's hasty anointment of his hand-picked candidate in the Marion County prosecutor vacancy selection. Even some of those who did not necessarily support the ultimate upset winner, Ryan Mears (D) – not the Hogsett choice – still feel a bit uneasy about what they see as Hogsett heavy-handedness.

□ And that last-minute lurid lawsuit filed in federal court by Bobby Hidalgo Kern (or whatever the convicted felon is calling himself these days) that alleges sexual assault charges some 30 years old are rightfully being ignored by the mainstream media . . . and it will be interesting to see what a federal judge has to say about the pro se lawsuit filed by the one-time judicial impersonator.

IN Other Political News . . .

● Merrillville-based Hoosiers for Accountability is a new political action committee formed to “Support and oppose candidates to office.” The chair is David Fagan of the International Union of Operating Engineers Local 150, and another Local 150 official, Michael Simms, is the treasurer.

● Former state auditor Richard Mourdock (R) makes a $500 personal contribution to the Republican nominee for state auditor in Kentucky (who is running against a Purdue University alum). ● Indiana’s two U.S. senators are among 24 cosponsors of the “Recognizing the Protection of Motorsports (RPM) Act,” a bipartisan bill introduced by U.S. Sens. Richard Burr (R-NC) and Joe Manchin (D-WV) that clarifies congressional intent that amendments to the Clean Air Act’s anti-tampering provision exempt modified vehicles and race cars from certain environmental regulations. The authors say S. 2602 would help preserve American motorsports by stopping federal government regulatory overreach. A 2015 Obama Administration proposed rule would allow the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to fine amateur motorsport conversions of personal vehicles into race cars. While EPA removed the language from its final rule, it still contends motorsports vehicle modification is unlawful.

● U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R), a member of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, had this to say Sunday regarding the death of ISIS leader Abu Bakr al-Baghdad: “At this watershed moment in the battle against terrorism, we thank the special operation forces who carried out the mission and the thousands of men and women who have led the fight against ISIS. We think of Hoosier Marine Jordan Spears and his family, who represent the great sacrifice by many of our nation’s finest, and their families, to defeat ISIS. We also remember Hoosier Peter Kassig and his family, who represent the unspeakable human toll that ISIS’ top leader brought to our fellow American citizens and their families, and to countless innocent men, women and children. Americans, all of them, none to be forgotten. Semper Fidelis” . . . Sen. Young and U.S. Sen. Maggie Hassan (D-NH) pair up to introduce the bipartisan “Fast Track To and Through College Act,” a measure which would provide resources aimed at helping more students earn college credits while still in high school. These types of early college programs provide academically-prepared high school students the opportunity to receive college credit while they are still in high school. “Early college programs help families avoid college debt while preparing students for postsecondary education. In Indiana, we have seen great success from programs like these,” said Sen. Young. “Our bill aims to provide resources so states can create a fast track pathway for students that includes access to advanced coursework, dual credits, and professional support.” Their bill would designate resources for programs that help more high schoolers receive college credit toward their future postsecondary degree and support early college programs by allowing students enrolled in early college programs to take as much as a full year of early college courses toward their postsecondary degree or credential; ensuring that students receive credit for the classes that they take by requiring public colleges and universities to accept credit from early college programs; and expanding access to the programs by allowing Pell Grants to cover dual-enrollment costs for low-income, Pell-eligible students in states receiving a fast-track grant . . . Sen. Young and U.S. Sen. Ben Cardin (D-MD) on Thursday introduced the first Senate resolution honoring Sikh Americans. The resolution works to further diversity and afford all Americans the opportunity to better understand, recognize, and appreciate the rich history and shared experiences of Sikhs. Sen. Young calls the Sikh Americans “a vital part of our Nation’s rich culture and diversity,” noting that “Indiana is home to more than 10,000 Sikhs and I am proud to introduce the first resolution ever introduced in the Senate in their honor. As the fifth largest religion in the world, Hoosier communities are made richer by their contributions.”

● U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) tells Marion radio listeners Tuesday on WBAT 1400-AM’s Good Morning Grant County that Hoosiers are “participating in the best economy we’ve ever had. I know that as a Main Street entrepreneur, when I go into every business that their biggest issue and only topic is basically, not being able to find people to staff and fills the positions. That’s as good as it gets.” As for impeachment, he says “I really believe from November of 2016, the plans were in motion” by House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-CA) and Democrats, calling it “their last heave and ho before November 2020. They’ve been doing it systematically and I think the public’s going to see through it this is a political stunt,” which he sees as “a waste of time for us (in the Senate) and the American public.” Asked about the death of the ISIS leader and where things go from here, he had an interesting take: “To me, it’s another example of how business as usual when it comes to domestic issues and foreign policy was not being knocked out of the park. When you look at the Clinton, the Bush years, Obama years, we’ve been following the same game plan basically, and it’s led us into trillion-dollar deficits and to where we’ve not been able to lead effectively on foreign issues because we don’t engage our allies. We don’t ask them to pay their fair share. All the things President Trump is doing, including his moves in Syria – which if you look at the details of it, was the right thing to do. We cannot be ‘the policeman’ and pay for everything in the future and I think it’s refreshing to have somebody that wants to change the dynamic that’s been in play. And to see that we cap it off with getting one of the worst human beings ever to walk on this earth, that tells you that we know what we are doing – and that it needs to be given credit. It was a great weekend for Hoosiers; for Americans. And it tells you that we’re finally doing things differently, and I’m glad to be part of it” . . .

● The U.S. House of Representatives voted overwhelmingly Tuesday to recognize the mass killing of Armenians by Ottoman Turks during World War I as genocide. The vote came amidst deteriorating U.S.-Turkey relations. The resolution passed by a bipartisan vote of 405 to 11 (with three abstentions), but more than one-third of the votes against the measure – four of the 11 – came from Hoosier Republicans. Only one other state – Texas – had more than one member of its delegation (two) cast votes against H. Res. 296. We’re not sure that we’ve ever quite seen the kind of breakdown on any vote from the Hoosier delegation as on this one:

For the Resolution

Banks (R)
Carson (D)
Hollingsworth (R)
Visclosky (D)
Walorski (R)

Against the Resolution

Baird (R)
Brooks (R)
Bucshon (R)
Pence (R)

□ When a similar resolution passed the House Committee on Foreign Affairs by one vote in 2010 – with then-U.S. Rep. Dan Burton (R), a panel member, vocally opposing passage – Turkey responded by recalling its ambassador from Washington for consultations. In a 2007 push against passage of such a resolution, Burton labeled backers just plain “crazy.” The Committee on Foreign Affairs approved that 2007 resolution despite what we told you then was opposition from then-President George W. Bush (R) and Turkey’s government, and concerns that it could harm Turkish-U.S. relations. The New York Times wrote back then that then-U.S. Rep. Mike Pence (R), “who has backed the resolution in the past, said [the President] persuaded him to change his position and vote no,” even as he described the decision as “gut-wrenching.” The Armenian Assembly of America commended him earlier that year for introducing the broader Genocide Accountability Act in the House. “There was indeed a genocide of the Armenians, and it will not be forgotten,” but referring to the use of the term genocide, he added that “While this is still the right position, it is not the right time.” According to the Los Angeles Daily News, “Invoking the biblical saying that to everything there is a season, Pence said Congress should not vote on the bill while U.S. troops are at war in Iraq. ‘This is a season that calls for standing with our troops first,’ he said. The Daily News found then-Rep. Burton “took the strongest stand against the resolution and noted that 70 percent of supplies to U.S. troops currently travel through Turkey. ‘The stability of the entire Middle East could be at risk,’ he warned. ‘Why are we kicking the one ally that is helping us in the face?’ ”

□ In a 403 - 16 bipartisan Tuesday Turkish rebuke, the House voted to impose sanctions after Turkey's assault on the Kurds. Joining U.S. Rep. Ilhan Omar (D-MN) - the only House D to vote no - were U.S. Reps. Jim Baird (R) and Greg Pence (R).

□ "None responded to requests for comment" by the WALL Street Journal. Rep. Baird's office questioned the resolution's timing to the Indianapolis Star; Rep. Pence's office only told the paper that he "has full confidence in President Trump's strategy in the Middle East and his voting reflects that position." Importantville's Adam Wren tweets he was "told by a source close to the delegation that IN GOP megadonor @ErsalOzdemir, who is from Turkey, lobbied them hard to vote no." Ersal Ozdemir, the Carmel contractor and developer who convinced the General Assembly to help him fund a soccer stadium for his Indy Eleven team this year, contributed a total of almost $20,000 to Reps. Baird, Brooks, Bucshon, and Pence, and more than $20,000 to a pair of Turkish-related political action committees that further doled out campaign largesse.

● U.S. Reps. Jackie Walorski (R) and Annie Kuster (D-NH) led a bipartisan group of 25 members of Congress in calling on the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs via a Wednesday letter to provide an update on their actions to ensure VA clinicians are complying with a law that aims to prevent overprescribing of opioids to veterans. Among the letter's signatories were U.S. Reps. Jim Baird (R), Jim Banks (R), and Susan Brooks (R).

□ The VA Prescription Data Accountability Act was authored by Rep. Kuster in 2017, co-sponsored by Rep. Walorski, and enacted with bipartisan support.; it requires VA clinicians to check prescription drug monitoring programs (PDMPs) - statewide electronic databases that track controlled substance prescriptions for patients receiving opioid therapy. PDMPs can provide health authorities with current details about prescribing and patient behaviors that fuel the opioid epidemic and facilitate a smart, targeted response. A Walorski-Kuster enacted in 2016 as part of the Comprehensive Addiction and Recovery Act requires VA to share info with state PDMPs to prevent overprescribing of opioids. A recent VA Office of Inspector General report revealed most VA clinicians are not adhering to the law, and two-thirds of clinicians are altogether unaware of the policy. "In light of the nationwide epidemic of prescription drug abuse, which has had a significant impact on veterans, we firmly believe that PDMP databases have proven effective and are valuable tools in tracking the coordination of prescriptions, preventing drug abuse and diversion, and reducing doctor shopping," wrote the members. "We request an update on the actions VA is taking to carry out the recommendations outlined in the OIG report in order to ensure that VA clinicians are in full compliance with the law and providing the level of care our veterans deserve."

● U.S. Reps. Jackie Walorski (R) and Jim Banks (R) introduce the "Dignity for Aborted Children Act," legislation to ensure the remains of aborted children are always treated with dignity. H.R. 4934 would hold abortion providers accountable to provide for proper burial or cremation of aborted fetal remains.

□ "Every life is precious, and every person deserves to be treated with dignity and respect," Rep. Walorski said. "The sickening discovery of thousands of human fetal remains in Ulrich Klopfer's garage was a tragic reminder of the terrible cost of abortion. Our society cannot tolerate such callous disregard for the sanctity of human life. As we continue working to defend the unborn, it is critical that we pass this bill to protect the dignity of abortion victims by ensuring their remains are treated with the respect they deserve."

□ "I'm proud that Indiana is leading the way to federally mandate respectful treatment of abortion victims," said Rep. Banks. "Dr. Klopfer's crimes were unspeakably horrific and they affected me on a very deep and personal level. I hope that his crimes have also awakened my Congressional colleagues to the importance of preserving the dignity of all human life - including aborted children. The legislation introduced by Rep. Walorski and I aims to achieve this in the most simple and common-sense manner."

● Former U.S. Reps. Lee Hamilton (D) and Tim Roemer (D) were the only Hoosiers among a bipartisan coalition of almost 100 former members of Congress who sent a letter Thursday to all senators urging legislative action to secure elections, asserting that there would be "severe threats to our national security" absent certain steps being taken to enhance election security.

● U.S. Rep. Pete Visclosky (D) adds his name as a cosponsor of a resolution opposing "any new performance fee, tax, royalty, or other charge" being imposed on local broadcast radio stations. The bipartisan "Local Radio Freedom Act" now has 195 House cosponsors 24 in the Senate . . . Rep. Visclosky had this to say released the following statement after voting in favor of a House Resolution to support the current impeachment inquiry: "Today, I supported the House Resolution that directs the six House Committees to continue their ongoing investigations as part of the existing inquiry into whether sufficient grounds exist for the House of Representatives to impeach the President. This Resolution will further reinforce the abilities of the House Committees to conduct their investigations in a manner that is transparent and accessible to the American public. It also ensures that the process and presidential protections are consistent with prior precedent, including the impeachment procedures for Presidents Nixon and Clinton. I remain concerned about the President's unethical and inappropriate actions, and I believe a judicious collection of the facts is warranted."

● U.S. Rep. André Carson (D), a senior member of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, released a statement following passage of H.Res. 660, which provides the path forward for public hearings, the next phase of the ongoing impeachment inquiry. He says "The vote I took today to advance the public phase of our impeachment inquiry was done with a heavy heart, but with the strongest sense of urgency and necessity. Here in 'The People's House,' we have a constitutional and a moral obligation to ensure we hold all public servants accountable to those they serve. We must affirm the truth that nobody, not even the President of the United States, is above the law. I am deeply saddened that we have embarked on this impeachment inquiry to hold the President accountable to the laws he swore an oath to uphold, but we have no choice but to act now. He asked a foreign country to investigate a political rival, using hundreds of millions in U.S. aid, approved by both the House and Senate, as a bargaining chip. This is a betrayal to the American people, and a serious threat to our national security. We cannot and we will not let this behavior go unchecked. The House Intelligence Committee, the committee on which I serve, has been engaged in the search for justice and answers, and I commend the brave public servants and military officers who have come forward to provide information, despite threats and attacks on their patriotism from this administration. But as we enter this public phase, no amount of bullying, smears or spin from this President and his allies will prevent the American people from hearing the facts, and making up their own minds. On behalf of all Hoosiers, I will continue to conduct this inquiry with the utmost care. The soul of our Democracy is at stake."

● U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R), a member of the House Committee on Armed Services and Afghanistan war veteran, is interviewed by Gillian Turner Sunday, October 27 on Fox News about the military raid that killed the leader of ISIS. "This is big news," he said, expressing his disappointment that "it's been minimized by so many of the Trump critics this morning. Without minimizing the killing of Osama bin Laden, I don't want to do that, but I do want compare it to that. Because in some ways, this is much more significant than killing Osama bin Laden. What I mean by that is al-Baghdadi was not just the spiritual leader of ISIS, he was the chief recruiter. He was hunkered down, but he was still recruiting young ISIS fighters coming into the fold because so many of them thought he was immortal." Rep. Banks continued, "The killing of Bin Laden was retribution. This was very strategic. That's why when President Trump came into office he brought his senior national security officials together and said, 'We're going to do whatever it takes to kill Baghdadi.' And this was the culmination ... in President Trump achieving a key victory. This is a big moment for his administration. It's a big moment for our country. This is a big moment for our national security," he concludes. ... in a Monday FoxNews.com editorial about the ISIS leader's death, Rep. Banks writes that "As a frustrated House Republican who cares very much about our national security, I think President Trump made the right call" when he "ordered White House aides not to inform congressional Democrat leadership of the operation, accurately explaining 'Washington is a leaking machine.'" He continues, "Would someone like Rep. Adam Schiff have jeopardized the viability of the mission to hurt Donald Trump? It's not hard to imagine a scenario in which, yes, Schiff and his allies would have leaked classified information to their friends in the media and railroaded this operation. After all, these are the same Congressional Democrats who have decided to halt all productivity in the House of Representatives to impeach an innocent president ahead of the 2020 election. It's not hard to imagine they would jeopardize the mission to kill al-Baghdadi out of partisan vindication. Watching the resistance's reaction to al-Baghdadi's death further vindicates the president's decision. At every turn, enemies of Donald Trump tried to manipulate the story to take shots at the president How disturbing is it that our military and intelligence officials are too afraid to brief congressional Democrats on important intelligence matters because of fears the classified subject matter will be leaked and politicized In another era, every citizen across the nation would have taken to the streets Sunday in celebration. But, as has become custom since November 2016, petty partisan resistance-types found a way to politicize the operation's success. This moment should remind us what is important to the people we serve, should remind us that when our troops go into harm's way to protect us - they are Americans, not Republicans or Democrats. Democrat leaders should remember that fact and quit the partisan charade of impeachment and start working on getting things done for the American people and remember who the real enemy is - people like Baghdadi who want to do harm to all Americans" ... on the heels of a Democratic presidential debate in which one candidate "called to punish churches and other religious institutions like colleges, non-profits, etc. who did not agree with his views on human sexuality," as Rep. Banks' office explains, the congressman introduces a joint resolution declaring protection for the freedom of conscience for all Americans. "The First Amendment of the United States Constitution states, 'Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.' No religion, or its practitioners, can be suppressed or coerced by the state. When politicians threaten to use the power of the state to deliberately suppress some peoples because of their religious convictions, they violate the Constitution and one of America's most sacred traditions," Rep. Banks asserts. "The First Amendment states that no matter one's beliefs, no matter how one worships - if one worships - every American citizen may enjoy the rights enshrined to them in the Constitution, given to them not by the state but by God." The Banks' legislation, H. J. Res. 78, is a joint resolution filed in companion with a resolution offered in the Senate by U.S. Sen. Ben Sasse (R-NE) ... as to impeachment, Rep. Banks tweeted late Thursday morning, "It's too bad @SpeakerPelosi & @RepAdamSchiff don't like the president. But there are plenty of Americans who proudly cast their vote for Trump, and he won in a free and fair election. Not liking someone isn't a reason to impeach and overturn election results. Sorry not sorry!"

● U.S. Rep. Larry Bucshon (R) released this statement after voting against H.Res. 660, which his office describes as "an illegitimate attempt to impeach the President without due process": House Democrats are eroding the Constitutional foundation of due process and fairness through secret, closed door hearings and the presumption of guilty until proven innocent. The complete lack of transparency and leaking of select documents by a handful of Congressional Democrats is merely an attempt to undue the results of the 2016 election and take away the votes of the millions of Americans who voted President Trump into the presidency. The American people are the real victims of this shameful process - while Washington plays politics, real work that can improve the lives of Americans on Main Street has taken a back seat. House Democrats have squandered an opportunity to advance positive change for the American people and neglected the opportunity to work on a bipartisan basis to enact into law prescription drug price reform, infrastructure improvement, funding for our troops and the modernization of trade deals. If this were a legitimate impeachment inquiry, a vote would have been held before beginning the process and provided for a fair, open process that protected the Constitutional rights of the President to defend himself against the charges. Every citizen deserves those rights to be protected, even the President. Instead, this resolution is nothing more than a show vote and another attempt by Democrats to move their only agenda, which is to impeach a legitimate sitting President because they do not agree with his policies and politics."

● U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R) provided the following statement regarding her opposition of the impeachment inquiry authorization: "As history illustrates, impeachment proceedings should only be commenced under the gravest of circumstances, which is why it has only happened three times before in our Nation's history. When impeachment proceedings are initiated in the House of Representatives, the process laid out must be fair, transparent, and afford due process to the President. Previous impeachment inquiries set this standard, and I am disappointed Speaker Pelosi chose politics over a fair process. This entirely partisan resolution allows Chairman Schiff to act as the sole arbitrator over what information is heard, viewed, or considered. Process, fairness, and learning all the facts matters, but are not being considered by Speaker Pelosi or Chairman Schiff. For these reasons, I voted against this unprecedented impeachment process. Every American deserves to know their Member of Congress is equipped with all the necessary facts and information needed to cast a vote for their constituents on what is considered the gravest of constitutional questions, removal of a President of the United States from office."

● U.S. Rep. Jackie Walorski (R) says that a legislative fix she championed paved the way for duty-free treatment for lauan plywood, which she says will provide cost-saving tariff relief and long-term certainty for American RV manufacturers. She praises a decision by the U.S. Trade Representative (USTR) to grant duty-free treatment for lauan plywood, saying that “RV manufacturers were facing unnecessary costs and red tape because of an outdated law, so I worked with them to fix it and make tariff relief possible. I’m thrilled USTR has granted tariff-free treatment for lauan wood, which will save this made-in-America industry $1 million in duties each month and provide long-term certainty for job creators.” In 2018, provisions authored by Rep. Walorski to fix outdated provisions in the Generalized System of Preferences (GSP) program were signed into law as part of broader legislation. She had previously introduced the “Competitive Need Limitations Modernization Act” (H.R. 4068) to fix two issues in the GSP program that led to unnecessary costs and paperwork for American manufacturers . . . Rep. Walorski on Wednesday commented on a U.S. Department of Commerce Office of Inspector General memo finding “a lack of transparency that contributes to the appearance of improper influence in decision-making for tariff exclusion requests under Section 232.” She said, “These findings are extremely troubling and confirm what has been apparent since the start: there is a thumb on the scale favoring objectors. There is no excuse for allowing an opaque, inconsistent, and unfair process to continue harming American manufacturers.” She has been working with Commerce “to address serious issues plaguing the exclusion process, and I hope they continue these good-faith discussions by responding fully to the concerns I’ve raised and accepting my . . . longstanding request for additional meetings.”

IN State Circles . . .

● The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, sitting en banc, on Wednesday voted 6-5 to deny a rehearing requested by the Indiana Office of the Attorney General in Planned Parenthood of Indiana and Kentucky, Inc. v. Box, et al., No. 17-2428. OAG had sought review of a 2-1 appellate ruling that upheld an injunction issued by Senior Judge Sarah Evans Barker of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana against implementation of the parental notification requirement added by SEA 404-2017 to what the initial appellate majority characterized as Indiana’s “fast and confidential judicial bypass procedure that is supposed to allow a small fraction of pregnant, unemancipated minors seeking abortions to obtain them without the consent of or notice to their parents, guardians, or custodians.” The law in abeyance would have required minors to notify their parents of abortion plans “unless the juvenile court finds that it is in the best interest of an unemancipated pregnant minor to obtain an abortion without parental notification following a hearing on a petition” Waivers of parental consent could only be obtained in a judicial bypass hearing.

□ Judge Michael Kanne, a Hoosier who was the dissenting vote in the decision, found four colleagues to join him in dissenting from denial of rehearing en banc, a bloc that included three Trump Administration-appointed judges. Judge Kanne and his colleagues wrote simply, “This case implicates an important and recurring issue of federalism: Under what circumstances, and with what evidence, may a state be prevented from enforcing its law before it goes into effect? Given the existing unsettled status of pre-enforcement challenges in the abortion context, I believe this issue should be decided by our full court. Preventing a state statute from taking effect is a judicial act of extraordinary gravity in our federal structure.”

● Box v. Planned Parenthood of Indiana and Kentucky, Inc., No. 18-1019, the appeal over an Indiana law question examining whether a state, consistent with the 14th Amendment, may require an ultrasound as part of informed consent at least 18 hours before an abortion, was on the conference list for the Supreme Court of the United States for a sixth time on October 18 (apparently leading the SCOTUS field this term), as the justices did not make a decision on granting or rejecting a writ of certiorari – but there was some movement on the case last week . . . or, more specifically, some significant non-movement.

□ SCOTUSblog notes that “on the abortion front, the Indiana ultrasound case, Box v. Planned Parenthood of Indiana and Kentucky, Inc., 18-1019, is no longer being relisted and it appears the court is holding it for the Louisiana admitting-privileges case, June Medical Services LLC v. Gee.” That may mean the Court is more interested in using the Louisiana case – which may involve less nuance than the challenged Indiana law – as the new abortion test case.

● In light of the lawsuit filed by Indiana Legal Services in U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia against Indiana’s Medicaid program work requirements, Rose v. Azar, No. 1:19-cv-02848, the Family and Social Services Administration is temporarily suspending the reporting requirements of the Gateway to Work program. The lawsuit challenged the Gateway to Work requirements along with several other components of the Healthy Indiana Plan that have been in operation for several years – potentially jeopardizing the HIP program as a whole. FSSA says it is spending the Gateway requirements for now to allow time for the Rose litigation to be resolved, and so the court can address the challenge to HIP after similar legal challenges to programs in other states have worked their way through the appeals process. Nevertheless, “We remain committed to operating the Gateway to Work program and to continuing to build on the early successes of the program, through which HIP members are reporting successful engagements in their workplaces, schools and communities,” says Indiana Medicaid Director Allison Taylor. Indiana is the second state in two weeks to voluntarily back away from work requirements; federal courts have ordered three others to do so.

□ FSSA will continue to encourage HIP members to report their activities to the state or their health plan so they can be connected to work-related resources. HIP members will still have a Gateway to Work status of “exempt,” “reporting met” or “reporting,” and be referred to opportunities to work, learn, and serve in their communities. However, FSSA assures HIP beneficiaries that no benefit suspensions will be considered until after Rose v. Azar is resolved. Before the program is reinitiated, FSSA promises participating members that they will receive substantial advance notice regarding the timeline.

□ Indiana continues to seek approval for the HIP Workforce Bridge program to help support the transition for any members moving to employer insurance or other health coverage.

● Effective November 30, the Indiana Health Coverage Programs expands the benefits for certain qualified immigrants identified as a permanent resident. This new benefit package will be delivered on a fee-for-service basis and cover prenatal and postpartum services, in addition to emergency services.

● Don’t expect Sen. Andy Zay (R) to come back in January with his payday loan “pathway to bankability” legislation. He doesn’t believe that there is an appetite for such a credit access measure in 2020.

● Deloitte Consulting LLP is selected to begin contract negotiations to provide Design, Development, and Implementation of the INvest Child Support Automated System for the Department of Child Services, a contract with an estimated three-year value of $42,343,000. ● As part of the 2019 State Employees' Community Campaign (SECC), the Indiana Office of Technology is raising money through a Takeover IN.gov fundraiser for the Tyler Trent Cancer Research Endowment, which funds cancer research at the Purdue Center for Cancer Research. Through a link on the IN.gov homepage, contributors can choose their favorite college or university in Indiana, and the institution with the highest number of designated contributions between October 21 and November 27, will take over the IN.gov homepage - the winning school will have its colors and logo displayed from December 2 - December 13 on www.IN.gov. More importantly, every dollar donated will be matched by the Walther Cancer Foundation.

● Hoosiers for Life Executive Director Amy Schlichter tells her group's supporters in a fundraising message that "House Speaker Brian Bosma issued secret orders to Indiana lawmakers, forbidding any attempt to ban abortion in the upcoming 2020 legislative session." In "a secret meeting, instructing fellow legislators on his 2020 agenda," Schlichter claims Bosma barked orders to Republican Representatives, forbidding attempts to end legalized child killing. (emphasis in original) Since 2020 is an election year, the House Speaker commanded there would be no 'controversial' issues during the legislative session. Thankfully, Rep. Curt Nisly has pledged to once again file the Protection of Life bill anyway, giving legislators yet another opportunity to end abortion in our state. I want to send a strong message to Brian Bosma and the rest of the Statehouse, and I have 40,000 digital petitions to print and deliver which will do just that," writes H4L's Schlichter. "Rep. Bosma doesn't want to save babies because it's an election year, but Indiana abortionists and Planned Parenthood shouldn't get a free pass to slaughter the unborn just because Bosma has a campaign to run."

□ As for those controversial issue and agendas, we're also picking up signs that Senate President Pro Tem Rodric Bray (R) prefers to keep legislation that would legalize medical marijuana sale and use from being considered in the coming session, despite lots of indications that this will become a surprising resonant campaign issue in many legislative districts and the races for attorney general and governor . . . particularly as the legal marijuana industry becomes more mainstream in Illinois, Michigan and Ohio, and talk heats up about decriminalizing minor marijuana possession.

● In Official Opinion No. 2019-5, the Office of the Attorney General reviews for Indiana State Chemist and Seed Commissioner Robert W. Waltz the legal implications of using drone technology in an administrative inspection - an Opinion that may also impact future similar activities by the Indiana Department of Transportation (whose nascent unmanned aerial vehicle inspection program we've told you about) and other state agencies and entities.

□ A wide range of questions were presented to OAG by the Office of the Indiana State Chemist (OISC), with the key issues summarized as follows:

● Would the OISC's use of drones qualify under any type of law enforcement exclusion?

● Would the OISC's use of drones constitute a 'trespass' or 'unlawful photography and surveillance on' real property?

● How is the legal analysis impacted if the OISC uses infrared, multispectral, hyperspectral, or LIDAR (Light Detection and Ranging) lenses?

● Should the OISC provide prior notice that it will conduct an inspection using drone technology?

● How is the legal analysis impacted if the OISC employs a third-party contractor?

● What are the public records implications of using drone technology?

□ OAG's answer in brief: "The OISC's use of drones in an administrative inspection would not constitute a civil or criminal trespass or an unlawful surveillance. That said, when using drone technology, the OISC should be mindful of limitations imposed by the Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution, requirements under federal law and regulation, and the scope of its statutory inspection authority. Data obtained by a drone, whether operated by an employee of the OISC or a contractor on behalf of the OISC, should be construed as a public record under the Indiana Access to Public Records Act and deemed disclosable unless there is an applicable statutory exception."

● Indiana Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) is not among a bipartisan coalition of 30 state attorneys general signing a letter to U.S. Secretary of Education Betsy DeVos requesting that she take immediate action to extend the window for student borrowers enrolled in schools operated by Dream Center Education Holdings, LLC (DCEH) to discharge their federal student loans under the "closed school discharge" rule, which allows student borrowers to discharge 100% of certain federal student loans if they were unable to complete their programs because their schools closed. Unless extended, the discharge rule only applies to students who were enrolled in programs at the time the schools were closed, on an approved leave, or withdrew from classes within 120 days of the schools' closure. DCEH operated some for-profit schools in Indiana until their sudden closure, and the letter also referred to issues with Carmel-based ITT Tech, now in a complicated and costly bankruptcy.

● The Indiana Supreme Court gets its second bite at the Land Rover in State v. Timbs, No. 27S04-1702-MI-70, a case on remand from the Supreme Court of the United States. Those of you playing along at home in the asset forfeiture game will recall that the Indiana Supreme Court had initially allowed prosecutors to proceed with the forfeiture of a Land Rover - bought by a man with proceeds from life insurance on his father - after he was convicted of selling a small amount of heroin in a deal in which the vehicle was used. But the first Timbs ruling (which overturned a Grant County trial court ruling and a divided Indiana intermediate appellate court decision) came because the state Supreme Court recognized that the U.S. Supreme Court had not specifically ruled that the Excessive Fines Clause in the U.S. Constitution had been extended to the states. In February, the U.S. Supreme Court, in a unanimous highly watched decision in the Timbs case, held that that the Eighth Amendment provision did apply to the states, and reversed the Indiana high court ruling, remanding it for a decision on whether forfeiture constitute an excessive fine.

□ The Court majority last week – Chief Justice Loretta Rush and justices Steven David, Mark Massa, and Christopher Goff – sought to provide a framework under which the Grant County Superior Court could determine whether the forfeiture – which the justices in the first iteration of the case had determined was a “fine” – was, in fact, excessive. The majority did not accept the suggestion buy the Office of the Attorney General that if the property was an instrumentality of the crime, then the excessiveness question was not a factor. Instead, the majority explained that the “Excessive Fines Clause includes both an instrumentality limitation and a proportionality one for use-based in rem fines.”

The majority justices detailed their test: “Specifically, to stay within the bounds of the Excessive Fines Clause, a use-based fine must meet two requirements: (1) the property must be the actual means by which an underlying offense was committed; and (2) the harshness of the forfeiture penalty must not be grossly disproportional to the gravity of the offense and the claimant’s culpability for the property’s misuse,” Chief Justice Rush wrote. If the property was not an instrumentality of the underlying crimes, the fine is excessive. The relevant crimes “are those on which the State bases its forfeiture case.”

□ The majority then proceeded to outline a standard centered on gross disproportionality to guide civil forfeitures. The three – non-exclusive – factors include (1) the harshness of the punishment, including the property owner’s economic means; (2) the severity of the offenses; and, (3) the claimant’s culpability. he case was remanded to Grant County to “determine whether Timbs has overcome his burden to establish that the harshness of the forfeiture’s punishment is not only disproportional, but grossly disproportional, to the gravity of the underlying dealing offense and his culpability for the Land Rover’s corresponding criminal use.”

● In Letter of Findings: 02-20190490 released last week, the Indiana Department of Revenue deals with a potential $400 million swing in corporate income tax deductions and add-backs, finding that an unnamed investment holding company was not entitled to an additional $200 million interest expense deduction based on an amount of repatriated income – originally deducted on its federal return – which Indiana required be added back for Indiana purposes . . . but the Department erred in converting the disallowed $200 million amount to an addition to the corporate taxpayer’s taxable income.

● The Indiana Department of Administration has retained BBC Research & Consulting (BBC) to conduct a disparity study to examine State contracting and procurement to help inform IDOA’s efforts to encourage the participation of minority- and woman-owned businesses in State contracting and procurement. BBC is seeking information related to: (1) Perceptions about and experiences with doing business in Indiana and working with State agencies; (2) barriers or difficulties that businesses experience when bidding on State contracts; and (3) Any discrimination or other barriers that businesses have experienced in the local marketplace. Community meetings will be held in connection with the disparity study in Gary on November 12, Indianapolis on November 13, and Evansville on November 14.

● The Porter Town Council objects to what it considers to be state diversion of catastrophic liability funds, with the Chesterton Tribune reporting that legal counsel for the Council has drafted a letter to send “down state to object to the Indiana General Assembly’s allocation of some funds from the Indiana Political Subdivision Catastrophic Liability Fund.” The attorney drafted the missive after “the Town’s agent for property and casualty insurance, notified him of state activity in the dormant fund. The fund contains an estimated $4 to 5 million from the contributions of the various municipalities and local government entities that opted-in when the fund was established in the 1980s and paid into it over the course of up to two decades. The Fund went dormant over a decade ago, and the Town of Porter stopped participating in contributions in 2008,” but “Per a legislative action this year, the State approved moving some money from that fund, which is made up of local contributions, and allocated it into Indiana’s general fund,” and the “letter objects to that allocation, saying it is the Town of Porter’s position that the State should disburse the remaining funds equally among all the municipalities that contributed . . . since those contributions came from the Towns’ local tax funds.”

● The Indiana Supreme Court will hear oral argument on November 7 in an interesting case that combines the elements of some other recent rulings. Indiana courts have weighed in on using GPS trackers for gathering evidence related to an individual’s potential criminal activity, and have dealt with the circumstances surrounding related warrants, but in Heuring v. State, No. 19S-CR-00528, the Court will consider whether a missing GPS devices warrants a warrant.

□ Police placed a GPS tracking device on Derek Heuring’s vehicle after receiving a confidential tip that he was using it to deal methamphetamine. One week later, the GPS device stopped signaling its location, and when police went to retrieve the device from Heuring’s vehicle, it was missing. Police then obtained a search warrant for Heuring’s residence, alleging that there was probable cause to believe he had committed theft of the device. The Warrick County Superior Court denied Heuring’s motion to suppress evidence recovered from the searches. On an interlocutory appeal, the Court of Appeals affirmed the denial of the motion to suppress. Heuring v. State, No. 19A-CR-140 (Ind. Ct. App. 2019), vacated. The Supreme Court has granted a petition to transfer and assumed jurisdiction over the case.

IN the Economy

- In relation to the Governor's recent Asian and Indian trade missions, the Governor's Office notes that "there are 1,004 foreign-owned business establishments that support more than 193,000 jobs across the state. That includes 319 Japan-based companies, 10 South Korea-based companies, 21 China-based companies and seven India-based companies in sectors like auto manufacturing, life science and information technology."

- Statewide totals for building permits issued in September 2019 show 1,447 single-family permits were pulled, up by 13% from the 1,277 permits pulled in the prior September, and the largest number of September permits for the decade, topping the previous record set in September 2018. September permits are, however, down by four percent from August of 2019, when 1,531 permits were pulled. The single family permit numbers for January - September 2019 are down by three percent compared to the first nine months of 2018.

- The RV Industry Association's September manufacturers' survey finally finds some positive news: Total RV wholesale shipments for the month of 31,639 represent an increase of 2.2% from the 30,969 units shipped during September 2018, the first time this year in which 2019 shipments have topped the number of shipments in the corresponding month of 2018. July 2018 had been the last time that shipments exceeded prior-year levels. Towable RV shipments, led by conventional travel trailers, totaled 28,085 units for the month, an increase of 3.1% compared to the previous September's total of 27,239 units. Motorhomes, however, finished the month with 3,554 units, down by 4.7% compared to the September 2018 total of 3,730 units.

□ Through September, RV shipments have reached 309,938 units, down by 18.2% from the 378,718 units shipped during the first three quarters of 2018.

- Second Lady Karen Pence and Charlotte Pence win federal trademark approval Tuesday for their "Marlon Bundo" brand.

- The Department of Workforce Development notes that the Hoosier construction industry has added 9,800 jobs from September 2018 to September 2019, including 1,700 jobs from August to September; and 3,600 for the first three quarters of 2019. The 9,800 year-over-year increase ranks Indiana sixth in the nation in the number of construction jobs added during that 12-month span.

- Vectren Energy Delivery of Indiana - North (Vectren), a CenterPoint Energy company, tells customers that they should expect a decrease of between five and 10 percent in their natural gas bills when compared to last Winter, assuming normal Winter weather this season. This year, based upon expected natural gas commodity costs and normal winter weather, Vectren customers can expect to pay $440 to $450 over the five-month heating season of November through March based on the average household consumption of approximately 670 therms. By comparison, last year's average bill amount for the five-month period was around $490 . . . NIPSCO says that its average natural gas residential customers using the system average of 625 therms total should expect to pay approximately $404 in total over the Winter heating season. By comparison, last year's average bill for the same five months (had January weather been normal) would have been $441 . . . Citizens Energy Group estimates the total average Winter natural gas bill for its customers will be about $430, down from a $484 average bill last Winter.

- Brownfield reports that Tim Phelps, leaders of the Indiana Ethanol Producers Association, told a U.S. Environmental Protection Agency hearing on the proposed 2020 Renewable Fuels Standard supplemental rule on Wednesday that EPA's small refinery exemptions (SREs) are hurting Hoosier farmers. Phelps testified that "EPA has allowed the volume of SREs to increase by more than 485 percent - destroying demand for 4 billion gallons of renewable fuels. 'That's nearly four times the annual production capacity of the state of Indiana,' he says. 'The pain on the ground in Indiana has been real. With one ethanol plant permanently shutting down; with more slowing down or slashing jobs. He says the EPA needs to stop abusing the small refinery exemption and restore the promise of the RFS. 'The EPA's actions amount to a bailout for some of the globe's largest companies,' he says. 'On the backs of struggling Hoosier farm families.'"

- Fitch Ratings, Inc. downgrades to 'A-' from 'A' the rating on $26.9 million outstanding series 2010 Indiana Finance Authority revenue bonds issued on behalf of the Indiana Historical Society (IHS). In addition, Fitch downgrades the Society's Issuer Default Rating (IDR) to 'A-' from 'A'. The Rating Outlook is revised to "Negative" from "Stable." The series 2010 bonds are an unsecured general obligation of IHS, payable from all legally available funds, and while there is a cash-funded debt service reserve currently funded at more than maximum annual debt service (MADS is "a very high 22% of fiscal 2018 operating revenues. This is not uncommon among cultural institutions, but reflects high debt leverage"), the result of "continued weak revenue defensibility, characterized by significant reliance on endowment income (typically around 70% of unrestricted operating revenues) in combination with an endowment draw that is unsustainable."

□ Fitch is concerned that IHS "has not effectively reduced operating expenses or raised income to moderate endowment draws, leading to two years of negative coverage of debt service (inclusive of the endowment draw)." This trend increases Fitch's concern about the reliance on endowment funds and the ability of the society to reduce this reliance in the outlook period, and "making efforts to moderate the draw seem potentially untenable." Though not a significant driver of revenue performance, Fitch notes "memberships have remained level for the past five years and a recent fee increase is expected to generate a modest recovery in membership revenues in 2019."

Work will be performed in Indianapolis, and is expected to be completed in October 2020 . . . Rolls-Royce Corporation of Indianapolis, is awarded a $9,066,270 modification to a previously awarded Naval Air Systems Command contract, exercising an option to procure three spare AE1107C engines in support of the V-22 Osprey program for the government of Japan. Work will be performed in Indianapolis, and is expected to be completed in November 2020 . . . Under this award, Harris will provide the Missile Defense Agency's Hypersonic and Ballistic Tracking Space Sensor Program with prototype payload design and signal-chain processing risk reduction demonstration. The work will be performed in Fort Wayne, with an estimated completion date of October 31, 2020.

- In Fort Wayne, the University of Saint Francis updates its academic programs to better meet needs of employers and to better align with student academic interests, meaning the elimination of several degree programs effective in Fall 2020, and the introduction of a few new ones. More than one-dozen facility and staff will not have jobs after May . . . a dispute with Amazon over trademark violation suspicions forces close-out reseller Homier LLC in Huntington to lay off 20 workers and postpone plans to add 20 more . . . Winona PVD Coatings LLC, a Warsaw County OEM automotive wheels finisher, plans to permanently close its local facility by December 31, ending almost 110 jobs in Kosciusko County . . .

- A big win for Westfield just one week before its tough-to-decipher mayoral election: Abbott, a Fortune 500 global health care company, picks a site along U.S. 31 in Westfield for a new 120,000 square-foot medical device manufacturing facility, for its Structural Heart business, planning to invest at least $37.6 million and create as many as 475 new jobs in the NorthPoint Industrial Park (more than 300 jobs by the end of 2024). Production of Abbott's MitraClip transcatheter mitral valve repair system - which is also manufactured in Menlo Park, California - will be facilitated by the Indiana Economic Development Corporation offering Abbott up to $3.5 million in performance-based tax credits, and up to $1 million in training grants. IEDC also offers up to $750,000 to the community from the Industrial Development Grant Fund to support infrastructure improvements to the new site. The City of Westfield approved additional incentives, and Duke Energy will provide an offset to a portion of the energy costs . . . the Huntingburg Regional Airport will undergo a $12 million runway extension project overseen by Woolpert . . .

IN Transition

- The Governor selects Indiana Economic Development Corporation President Elaine Bedel to serve as secretary and CEO of the Indiana Destination Development Corporation (IDDC), established under HEA 1115-2019. "In her new role, she will work collaboratively to develop marketing strategies that will enhance economic development, attract new talent to our workforce and enhance our state's profile as a great destination for visitors," says the Governor. The corporation will be governed by a seven-member board comprised of the Governor - who appoints Lieutenant Governor Suzanne Crouch (R) as his designee; the IEDC president or its designee; and five members appointed by the Governor from the private sector tourism industry.

□ Bedel will remain a member of the Governor's cabinet and begin reporting to the Lieutenant Governor on November 11 to initiate planning for the transition. Secretary of Commerce Jim Schellinger will assume the responsibilities of the role of IEDC president. Misty Weisensteiner will continue her leadership of the Office of Tourism Development and transfer to IDDC. She will report directly to Bedel and continue her efforts to improve Indiana's tourism efforts.

- Look for State Board of Accounts Chief of Staff Matt Light to leave his post late this year to become deputy mayor of the City of Noblesville when mayor-elect Chris Jensen (R) takes office. Prior to working for SBoA, Light served in several leadership capacities for the Office of Attorney General, including as chief deputy in the Zoeller Administration, and as also served as Advisory Division chief counsel, legislative liaison, Identity Theft Unit supervisor, and chief operating officer during his 10-year OAG tenure.

- Maggie Ranallo moves up to deputy director of White River State Park from her post as special projects, events and office manager. In her new role, the former Visit Indy staffer will oversee marketing, events, and community outreach. She is tasked with developing both short and long term strategies for several departments including marketing and social media, the Visitor Center, special events, and the Governor's Summer Internship Program for White River State Park. She will also oversee the parking facilities and parking management company. Ranallo earned her master's degree in event tourism from IUPUI.

IN the Lobby

- United Way of Central Indiana chooses Anne Penny Valentine as its vice president of government relations. She leaves Ivy Tech Community College after six years, where she most recently served as assistant vice president of workforce partnerships to become responsible for leading United Way's public policy and government relations work at the federal, state, and local levels. Valentine was legislative director for then-Gov. Mitch Daniels (R) and also worked for the Bureau of Motor Vehicles and Department of Workforce Development.

- CRH Americas Materials Inc., the nation's top producer of aggregates and asphalt and the second largest producer of readymixed concrete in North America, retains Ice Miller Strategies to lobby Congress on Federal Highway Administration reauthorization issues.

- POLITICO Influence reports "Kevin Brennan is leaving Faegre Baker Daniels to start his own firm, Bluebird Strategies. He'll focus on health care work and is bringing three clients with him: Myriad Genetics, Pear Therapeutics and Myotonic."

IN Court

- Could there be a quiet push by the state judiciary to move the state toward a centralized statewide public defender system - perhaps with the new centralized administrative law judge pool as a model of sorts?
